dro Nath Roy v. Mussumut Hiroo Monee Burmonee (1) and in the other cases cited by the defence." So far are the facts on this matter (which the High Court has justly treated as of primary importance) from being uncertain, that it was not disputed at their Lordships' Bar that this family came originally from the North-West, where the Mitakshara undoubtedly prevailed, and that the only question was whether it was not to be inferred from the facts that they had divested themselves of their original customs and adopted the rule of the Dayabhaga? The other criticism to be made on the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is that, holding himself to be thus exempt from any presumption in favour of the Respondents, he has not merely based himself upon testimony which has been handled with great caution by the party whom it purports to support, but he has accepted as credible and rejected as incredible large numbers of witnesses with a freedom and on grounds which would have commanded more confidence if the learned Judge had had the advantage of seeing the witnesses. As a matter of fact the great majority of the witnesses were examined before his predecessor and very few before himself. Accordingly the High Court have felt justified in forming their own conclusions as to the effect and quality of the evidence; and after careful examination their Lordships see no ground for disputing the soundness of their appreciations. This necessarily goes far towards deciding the case, once the broader conditions of the controversy are fully realised.

The question of succession now in dispute depends upon the custom of the family; and in families observing the Mitakahara Shastra the brother and not the widow of a childless man takes an ancestral estate. The tenacity of such customs, even under the strain of migration, has been repeatedly recognised by the law in questions such as the present. Accordingly the question being primarily one of personal as distinguished from geographical custom, it is of the first importance to inquire of the origin of the family. Now, amid a mass of contradiction on almost everything else, it is undisputed that these people came from the North-West. Tradition names Dharanaggur as their original home; but the precise place is of no moment, for it is not suggested that in any place in the North-West does the Dayabhaga prevail. The presumption therefore is that the family continued to observe the Mitakshara and it remains to see whether the contrary has been proved.

The occasions which afford the most direct evidence are successions. Now, with the doubtful exception of the succession of Gobindmomi about a century ago, the Appellant has no such case to point to, while as regards Gobindmomi it is not satisfactorily proved that her competitor had any genuine right such as would have brought him under the Mitakshara rules of succession. On the other hand, in at least two more recent instances, widows have been passed over in favour of brothers, where none but conjectural explanations can be offered, consistent with the Dayabhaga rule.

When, turning from successions, regard is had to the evidence relating to ceremonies at marriages, births and shraddhs, it cannot be disputed that there is a strong body of affirmative evidence in support of the continuance and against the relinquishment of the Mitakshara in this family. The High Court, in a careful analysis, have stated their reasons for preferring the Respondents' evidences to that adduced for the Appellant, and the able arguments at their Lordships' Bar have satisfied them of the soundness of this conclusion. Nor do their Lordships see that the most abundant caution need restrain them from accepting as authentic the several documents which have been relied on by the High Court and the import of which is unmistakable.

The learned counsel for the Appellant placed before their Lordships an elaborate argumentative demonstration of the history and geographical application of the name Orissa. The bearing of this upon the present question is only that the estate in dispute being (according to the argument) in a district where the Dayabhaga prevailed, the family would be more likely to fall in with the customs of their neighbours and adopt the Dayabhaga. Their Lordships, satisfied on the evidence bearing directly on the family in question, do not require to pronounce on a matter relating to a district on which they have not complete materials and their opinion on which might needlessly affect other interests.

On the question of the four mouzahs their Lordships regret that they have not the assistance of the High Court's judgment; but they find themselves unable to reject the Appellant's claim. The property in dispute was bought for Purna Chunder by the Court of Wards, out of savings of the zemindari and must be considered as Purna Chunder's savings. All that the Respondents can point to as indicating Purna's intention to deal with them as part of the Raj is that the rents were collected by the same servant, and the collection papers kept with the papers of the Raj. Their Lordships do not find in these meagre facts adequate ground for holding that the Raja intended to incorporate the four mouzahs with the ancestral estate for the purposes of his succession. The four mouzahs must therefore follow the rule of the Mitakshara law as to self-acquired property.

The argument addressed to their Lordships about the four mouzahs was confined to the question whether they were self-acquired, and it might perhaps be inferred that the success of the Appellant on that issue involved her right to possession of the mouzahs. But, in face of the claim made by the Respondent Rani Radha Kumari Debi in the 5th article of her written statement, their Lordships deem it well, before reporting to His Majesty, to give the parties an opportunity, if they so desire, of being heard on the disposal of the four mouzahs, on the footing that they are held by their Lordships to be self-acquired property, and on the High Court's order for maintenance, which was made on a footing now displaced.

THEIR LORDSHIPS have further considered this appeal with reference to the points raised in the last paragraph of their judgment of the 22nd February and the observations of counsel thereon on the 1st March, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that, subject to the recommendation below, the decree of the High Court of the 17th May 1897 ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed. And they will further humbly recommend His Majesty to make a declaration that the four mouzahs in question are self-acquired property and to remit the suit to the High Court with directions to try or cause to be tried any issues which may be raised by the parties to the suit or any one or more of them for the purpose of having determined any question consequent on the declaration, more especially as to the right to the four mouzahs or to maintenance out of the impartible estate

The Appellant will pay the first Respondent (who alone appeared in England) three-fourth parts of his costs of the appeal.

Damages—Inferiority of quality, proof of —Examination of samples from portions of

J. BOISOGOMOFF v. NAHAPIET JUTE CO., LD.

bulk—Method of ascertaining damages—Amount of damages where inferiority in jute.

In a suit for damages by a purchaser of goods on the ground of their being below the guaranteed standard of quality, it is sufficient if the Plaintiff proves the inferiority by an examination of samples taken from different portions of the bulk. He is not bound to examine the entire bulk.

In a case of this class in respect of jute where the damages recoverable for inferiority of quality is established and recognised in the trade as being 2 annas per maund for a deficiency of 5 per cent. of Hessian Warp, it is not necessary for the Plaintiff to show how he has dealt with the goods delivered to him and whether he has suffered any and what loss by reason of the goods being inferior in quality.

This was a suit for the recovery of damages for breach of warranty in respect of certain bales of jute sold and delivered by the Defendant Company to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff alleged that in September and October 1900 he purchased from the Defendant Company three lots of jute containing in the aggregate 7,000 kutchas bales, that according to the contracts the jute so purchased was to be of the standard quality of the mark known as T. N., which is said to contain 40 per cent. of Hessian Warp, and that of the 7,000 bales delivered in November 1900, 6,000 bales delivered ex flats "Gorai" and "Khargosh" were found to be not of the contract quality. They thereupon complained to the Defendant Company and asked them to examine the same. The Defendant Company then proposed an arbitration by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

To this the Plaintiff replied as follows :—

"In terms of the contract no mention is made of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, we will therefore hold a private survey. Kindly therefore mention the name of your surveyor and we shall mention ours and finish this matter tomorrow."

Thereupon the Defendant Company wrote as follows :—

"As the contracts in question do not provide for any form of survey, we consider we made you a very fair offer when we proposed to refer the question as to whether the jute is equal to the standard of the mark to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

"As you have declined our offer, we now withdraw it, and we refuse to consent to any private survey of the jute in question as we are satisfied that your complaints are entirely groundless. You offer no reason for refusing to refer the matter to the Chamber of Commerce, and we can only infer that you have none, and that the real reason for your complaint is that the market has dropped since the contracts were entered into."

"Your statement that you infer that we have no ground for complaint and that the real reason is that the market has declined is insulting and untrue and perfectly uncalled for.

In our letter of the 22nd, we stated our ground for complaint that the quality was not to the standard of the mark. Our reason for objecting to refer it to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is that their surveys are mostly if not all on contracts with mill guarantees of percentage of Hessian Warp and Weft, and that many of the surveyors on their list do not know the standard of your marks. We therefore consider it desirable that surveyors should be appointed who know the standard of the mark. Your declining to examine or survey any jute landed by us is we hold unreasonable, as until the jute is landed how could we possibly examine it? The question, however, of how, when and where a survey should take place, is one for the surveyors, and not for the parties to the survey to decide. As you positively now refuse to agree to a survey of any kind we give you notice, that we have asked Mr. Crichton of Sinclair Murray & Co., and Mr. Duncan of the Budge-Budge to examine the jute and grant survey reports of both the parcels under dispute and should they state that, as we contend, the jute is inferior and state that we are entitled to an allowance and should you fail to pay same on demand we will without further notice instruct our solicitor to recover the amount by aid of the Court. As soon as the surveyors appoint the time at which they will examine the jute, we will inform you that you may, should you wish, have a representative present at the survey."

Thereupon Mr. Duncan, a buyer of jute for the Budge-Budge Mills, and Mr. Crichton, a member of the firm of Messrs. Sinclair Murray & Co., jute brokers, were requested by the Plaintiff to examine and report on the jute, and on notice of the fact being given to the Defendant Company, Mr. Wallace, the manager of the Howrah Jute Mills, and Mr. Brown a partner of Messrs. Landale and Morgan, jute brokers, were deputed by the latter to "watch" the survey on their behalf "without prejudice to our rights." In the presence of these two gentlemen, Messrs. Duncan and Crichton took out 12 bales from the bulk, some from the flat "Khargosh" and some from the flat "Sita" into which the bales had been transferred from the flat "Gorai." They opened these bales and examined a portion of each, not the entire bale.

Upon such examination Messrs. Duncan and Crichton were of opinion that the Hessian Warp in the bales would not be more than 25 per cent. and Mr. Duncan, in order to be more sure, sent another ten bales of the jute, taken half from one flat and half from another to the Budge Budge Mills for examination. The mill selection was made at the Mills under the supervision of one Mr. Pullin, the jute godown superintendent, and according to him the quality of Hessian Warp did not amount to more than 25 per cent. A report was thereupon made by Messrs. Crichton and Duncan in which they estimated the loss sustained by the Plaintiff, at the sum of Rs. 7,875 being an allowance of two annas per maund for every 5 per cent. deficiency in Hessian Warp. There was evidence that this was the allowance usually made by surveyors.

The defence taken by the Defendant Company in their written statement was mainly a denial that the jute was not of the standard quality and that they were not bound by the opinion of Messrs.

J. BOISOGOMOFF v. NAHAPIET JUTE Co., LD.

Duncan and Crichton, which was in fact erroneous.

The suit came on before Stanley, J., who, on the 20th June 1901, delivered the following judgment:—

STANLEY, J.—(After stating the facts) This is shortly the case of the Plaintiff. Neither the Plaintiff nor any one in his employment has been examined and not a tittle of evidence has been given on the part of the Plaintiff to prove what was the quality of the bulk of the consignments, that is, the 5,978 bales which form the balance of the 6,000 bales. I am told that I should judge of the bulk by the sample on the principle, ~~I presume~~, ex uno disce omnes.

Assuming that the evidence satisfied me that the bales which were examined were inferior to the standard quality of the mark, should I be justified in arriving at the conclusion that the remaining bales were all likewise inferior when the Plaintiff who, so far as appears, has had the opportunity of examining, if he has not actually examined the remaining bales, has adduced no evidence to prove the quality of them? I know of no case in which, under similar circumstances, a Court has condemned the bulk of a large consignment of goods as of inferior quality on proof of the inferiority of a sample. In the case of breach of warranty of quality, prima facie the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the goods at the time of delivery to the buyer and the value they would have had if they had answered the warranty. This is the principle upon which damages would be measured in the present case if there was a breach of the warranty.

What data have been furnished to me by the Plaintiff for estimating the value of the bales 5,978 in number which were not examined by the surveyors? None whatever. I am asked to accept the testimony of the surveyors in regard to the bales which were examined as satisfactory evidence of the quality of the jute which was not examined and to say that I am satisfied that the jute in the unopened bales corresponded in quality with the jute in the bales which were opened. This seems to me to be a somewhat arbitrary mode of estimating damages. No doubt there may be cases in which the Court would be justified in drawing an inference as to the quality of the bulk from the quality of a sample, as for example in a case in which the Plaintiff had no opportunity of examining and testing the bulk. Here however such is not shown to be the case. The Plaintiff does a large export trade. If the jute in question was exported, then for the purpose of export it was necessary for him according to the evidence to re-bale the jute, opening all the bales and re-assorting the jute. If this had been done, there would not have been much difficulty, I would say, in ascertaining approximately at least the amount of Hessian Warp in the consignment. As Sir Allen Arthur in his evidence said, there would be no difficulty in such case in saying what percentage of Hessians there was in each assortment of the consignments and the Plaintiff could have arrived at some estimate of his loss if he had suffered any.

If the jute was not exported but was used by the Plaintiff in manufacture, he would, one would expect, be in a position to adduce some evidence to satisfy the Court as to its quality. If it was sold, then the Plaintiff should, I would think, have been able to tell the Court the classification under which it was sold and what percentage of Hessian Warp was guaranteed. If the Plaintiff had sold the jute and only guaranteed that it contained 25 per cent. of Hessian Warp, I am disposed to think that I should have heard of this. As matters stand, not a shred of evidence in regard to the unopened bales has been adduced by the Plaintiff. The only evidence which I have bearing upon the quality of the jute in these bales, independently of the evidence which was given in regard to the examined bales, is that of Mr. Nahapiet, the manager at Naraingunge of the Jute Department of the Defendant Company. He has been in the jute trade for fifteen years and he superintends the assortment of and the pressing and baling of the Company's jute. Before the bales, he said, are pressed, he makes an examination of the jute from khata to khata (batch of coolies engaged in sorting) and on passing the qualities as correct the jute is taken to the press-house and baled. Until the jute has been examined and passed by him the jute is not pressed. In answer to a question in cross-examination Mr. Nahapiet admitted that it was possible, but very unlikely, that he would make a mistake and pass a bale which did not contain the guaranteed percentage of the Hessian Warp. If the consignments by the flats "Khargosh" and "Gorai" had been tested properly, he says that the bales would have given between 47 to 55 per cent. Hessian. The assortment, he says, was carefully done to keep up the reputation of the mark. This is very striking evidence. No doubt the Plaintiff's counsel are justified in pointing out that Mr. Nahapiet is interested in this litigation; he is the person who is responsible for any faulty assortment of jute and if there was faulty assortment in this case, he would be responsible for the loss. I have no reason, however, to think that this consideration has unduly weighed with Mr. Nahapiet in giving his evidence. He appeared to me to give his testimony without regard to any personal consideration of this kind and to be speaking what he believed to be the truth. It may be that he has somewhat overstated the percentage of Hessian Warp in the bales but I am quite satisfied that he did not wilfully overstate it. If his evidence is trustworthy, it is impossible to believe that the Plaintiff has any real grievance. I believe that Mr. Nahapiet's evidence is reliable, and taking it in conjunction with the evidence of Mr. Wallace I have arrived at the conclusion that as regards the bulk of the consignment the jute was not inferior to the standard quality of the mark.

(His Lordship then dealt with the evidence and continued as follows):— It appears to me that there was an initial error committed by both Mr. Crichton and Mr. Duncan in the test which they made. When they found that the hanks of jute which they examined, were as they thought inferior to the quality of the mark, it was surely their duty to examine all the jute in the opened bales. Non constat but that the part in each bale which was left unexamined contained sufficient Hessian

J. BOISOGOMOFF v. NAHAPIET JUTE Co., LD.

Warp to make up for any deficiency of this Warp in the portions which they examined. They had no right to assume that the residue of the jute in the opened bales was of similar quality to the portions which they examined, particularly when their examination was to be a test not merely of the opened bales but of the entire consignments.

It seems to me clear, as Mr. Wallace has pointed out, that these gentlemen, when they found portions of a bale inferior, ought to have examined the entire of the bale.

They or at least Mr. Crichton appear to have been too ready to arrive at a conclusion. Mr. Duncan, no doubt, was more cautious, seeing that he determined to have a mill selection made. To make himself more sure, as he says, but according to Mr. Crichton, in order to see the jute "in his own light," he made up his mind to have a mill selection taken. Mr. Duncan is a buyer of jute for the Budge-Budge Mills and has been 4 years in Calcutta; before he came to Calcutta he was for 25 years engaged in the jute business in Dundee but he had no experience, he says, in surveying jute in Dundee.

Whatever may be the views and ideas of Mr. Duncan as regards the requisites necessary to bring jute within the classification of Hessian Warp, it is not unnatural to suppose that these views and ideas will be shared by the employers in the jute department of the Budge-Budge Mills, and therefore I am not disposed to attach so much importance to the mill selection which was so made, as I otherwise should. If bales of jute had been sent for selection to another mill than the mill with which Mr. Duncan is connected, the test would have been, in my opinion, more satisfactory. I am disposed to think, from the evidence, that Mr. Duncan is perhaps a little hypercritical and exacting in the matter of jute classification and that he looks for a colour in Hessian Warp which is not according to the true test requisite for its classification as Hessian. He admits that Hessian is difficult to define, he defines it as being good coloured, strong and with straight fibre, not broken fibre; the colour, he says, should be white, and gloss indicated strength.

Mr. Crichton said that Hessian was light in colour and strong, and that Sacking Warp is inferior in colour but strong. Colour seems to be an important criterion of superiority but where and what the dividing colour between Hessian Warp and Sacking Warp is we have not been told.

Mr. Nahapiet said that Hessian Warp must be long, glossy and golden coloured, with strong fibres. Mr. Wallace said that the jute which he examined was light in colour and not as alleged by Mr. Crichton, grey in colour. Mr. Crichton said that the jute was deficient in strength and colour, that it was grey and heavy rooted.

Mr. Wallace struck me as being a person who had experience in and sound knowledge of jute. I was favourably impressed by his evidence and the manner in which he gave it. In a matter of this kind there is room for exaggeration, and I cannot but think that if there were defects in the jute in question, these defects have been exaggerated by the witnesses for the Plaintiff. I do not say wilfully exaggerated but there exists in the case of expert witnesses a tendency to support the view which is favourable to the party who employs them, so that it is difficult to get from them an independent opinion.

A high authority once said "skilled witnesses come with such a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, that hardly any weight should be given to their evidence." I do not say that in the present case, I have acted on the principle so stated. I may observe also that I do not attach any importance to the suggestions made by the Defendants' counsel that Mr. Crichton's firm would be willing and are desirous to take over the Plaintiff's agency and therefore that Mr. Crichton is not an important witness.

I decide this case solely upon the evidence which has been laid before me as to the quality of the jute. The Plaintiff has failed to satisfy me that the jute was inferior to the standard quality of the mark, the burden of proving which, lay upon him.

The Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Dunne and Mr. Sinha for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (The Hon'ble J. T. Woodroffe) and Mr. Garth for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a suit to recover damages for an alleged breach of warranty as to the quality of 6,000 kutchu bales of jute purchased by the Plaintiff from the Defendants. There is no dispute as to the contracts which are set out in the plaint: the only dispute is as to the quality of the goods. The jute was to be of the standard quality of a certain mark,  $\frac{T.S.N.}{2}$ , and this, admittedly, means that each bale was to contain 40 per cent. of what is known as Hessian Warp. The sole question is whether the bales delivered did contain that percentage of Hessian Warp, and this is a question of fact. The jute was delivered by the Defendants, and immediately after delivery, the Plaintiff complained that the jute was not up to the standard quality of the mark, and asked the Defendants to send down a representative to inspect it. Some correspondence then ensued: the Plaintiff suggesting a survey and the Defendants proposing an arbitration by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The Plaintiff declined the latter offer as he was entitled to do, and I regret that the Defendants' agents should have thought it necessary to make the imputation they did against the Plaintiff in the letter of the 27th November 1900. The price paid for the whole of the jute, including 1,000 bales, as to which there is no dispute, was about 1,50,000 rupees. The Plaintiff then appointed two surveyors to examine the jute, and the Defendants sent down two gentlemen to "watch" the proceedings on their behalf. I will deal in a moment with what took place on this survey and subsequently.

Before examining the evidence I desire to deal with two points which are prominently dealt with in the judgment of Mr. Justice Stanley. If by his observation the learned Judge intended to convey that, before recovering damages in a case of this class, the Plaintiff was bound to examine each of the 6,000 bales of jute, and, as the result of such examination, was bound to show that in each bale the jute fell short of the requisite standard, I most respectfully differ from him. If such were the usage, it would, I fear, impose a serious clog upon commercial transactions. But it is clear from the evidence that this is not so. Mr. Duncan, one of the Plaintiff's witnesses, says:—"I examined 12 bales out of the bulk which was in the flats there. It is usual to examine certain lots only in making a survey. To take a part of the bulk, to examine a part and make a report on that part, we are supposed to take 10 or 12 bales, a sufficient quantity to form a judgment as to what the bulk is" and further on he says: "In order to find the average of a whole consignment it is not usual to examine the whole consignment. We arrive at an average for the consignment, we take a portion for selection. The average of the consignment is taken to be that of the portion selected. We took the quantity which we considered would give us a representative quantity of the bulk," and Mr. Wallace, the Defendants' witness on being asked "Q.—Do you consider that a list of 12 bales is sufficient for a cargo of 10,000?" says, "Picked out here and there in the bulk I should think it was. Selected as these were I should think it was so."

The other point is that the Plaintiff ought to have shewn how he had dealt with the jute which was delivered, and whether he had suffered any and what loss by reason of the jute not being up to the warranted standard. There would have been much force in this contention had it not been that, according to the evidence the measure of damages, or, perhaps, I should say the method of ascertaining the damages, in a case of this class, appears to be established and recognised in the trade. It would appear that the buyer is entitled in respect of the inferiority alleged in this case to an allowance of 6 annas per maund, the rule being to allow 2 annas per maund for a deficiency of 5 per cent. of Hessian Warp. Both Mr. Duncan and Mr. Crichton say so, and Sir Allan Arthur who is experienced in these matters, and who was called for the Defendants, appears to be of the same opinion. Mr. Crichton speaks of it as a custom in the trade. Moreover, we have heard no argument from the Respondents' counsel that, if the Plaintiff is entitled to damages, the damages as regards the quality of the jute have been assessed upon a wrong basis.

Mr. Justice Stanley dismissed the suit holding that the Plaintiff had failed to satisfy him that the jute was not up to the warranted standard, hence the present appeal, and it now becomes necessary to consider the evidence on this point, which is the real issue in the case.

Mr. Crichton and Mr. Duncan surveyed 12 bales out of the consignment on board one of the flats, and the survey lasted quite an hour. I agree with the Court below that, as the evidence of these gentlemen is that of experts, we must regard it with every care, though apparently, from the evidence of Nahapiet Seth Nahapiet, one of the Defendants' witnesses, "It is not the least difficult to distinguish between the two classes of jute, that is between Hessian and Sacking

J. BOISOGOMOFF v. NAHAPIET JUTE Co., LD.

Warps." And I also agree with Mr. Justice Stanley that no real importance, detracting from the value of Mr. Crichton's evidence, ought to be attached to the circumstances that his firm was desirous of taking over the Plaintiff's agency.

Now Mr. Crichton's evidence is precise that the bales which he examined were not up to the standard quality, and that they contained only 20 or 25 per cent. of Hessian Warp. He tells us how the bales were opened, what he and Mr. Duncan did, and how the jute was examined and he points out the difference between Hessian Warp, Sacking Warp and cuttings. Nor do I think that in material points he has been shaken by cross-examination.

It was urged for the Respondents that the survey was defective because only a portion of the jute out of the bales which were opened was examined and that the surveyors could not have arrived at a just conclusion as to the percentage of Hessian in each bale without examining the whole, but Mr. Crichton says they can always judge of a bale by opening half the hanks, and that they can do so accurately; and this view is confirmed by Mr. Wallace, one of the Defendants' witnesses who says:—"from one-third to about half of each bale was opened. Probably more in one or two. I could form an opinion as to whether that jute was up to standard quality or not." So that it would appear to be common ground between the witnesses on each side that enough of each bale was opened to enable the surveyors to form an opinion as to whether the jute was up to standard quality or not.

Mr. Duncan, who also surveyed these 12 bales, says that they examined the quality carefully, and that he did not consider that it was up to the standard quality of the mark, but in order to make sure of his opinion, he determined to have a mill selection taken. His opinion, on the survey, was, that the jute in the bales which were examined was, substantially, below the standard quality of the mark by some 15 per cent.

With the view to this mill selection, which is, apparently, a much more searching examination than that effected by a survey, ten bales were selected from the bulk of the consignment, five from one flat and five from another, and these were sent to the Budge-Budge Jute Mills, with a note to Mr. Batchelor, who was the manager. Mr. Duncan is an assistant in the firm of Andrew Yule and Company, who were the managing agents of the Budge-Budge Jute Mills.

It has been contended for the Respondents that it has not been clearly established that the ten bales which were subjected to the mill selection, formed part of the consignment to the Plaintiff; but I think that, upon the evidence it is clearly made out that the ten bales did form part of that consignment, and the learned Judge's observations on this part of the case proceed upon that footing. Mr. Pullin, who is employed in the Budge-Budge Mills and who tells us how mill selections of jute are effected and who examined the jute in this case on the 4th December, and superintended the selections, tells us the result of the selection, a result which shows that the bales examined were very far below the standard quality of the mark. No valid reason is shewn for impeaching Mr. Pullin's evidence on this point, nor do I think that the fact that the selection was made at the Budge-Budge Mills is sufficient ground for saying that the selection was not a fair or an honest one. It is true that no representative of the Defendant Company was present at the selection, but this may be attributed to the circumstance that they had previously declined to be parties to the survey.

As against this evidence we have that of Mr. Wallace, who is a gentleman of experience in the jute trade, and who, it will be remembered, was sent down with Mr. Brown, not to survey, but to watch the survey to be made by Messrs. Crichton and Duncan. He says, decidedly, that there was 40 per cent. of Hessian Warp in the bales which were opened and this would bring the bales up to the standard quality of the mark.

I gather from his evidence that he did not by any means make so careful an examination as Messrs. Crichton and Duncan. He does not appear to have handled the jute but to have stood about and looked on whilst Messrs. Crichton and Duncan were examining it. He, in fact, says, it is not necessary to handle it, though the witness Nahapiet Seth Nahapiet said, "of course, we always handle it to see that it is all right," a statement from which he subsequently resiled.

We have it, then, that out of the bulk, 22 bales were examined, 12 by way of survey and 10 by way of mill selection, with a result showing as deposed to by Messrs. Crichton and Duncan that the jute was far below the standard quality of the mark, the deficiency in the Hessian Warp being at least 15 per cent.

As against this, we have only the evidence of Mr. Wallace, whose examination of the 12 bales on the flat was of the somewhat superficial nature I have described. He says the jute was up to the standard quality. No doubt there is the evidence of Nahapiet Seth, the Manager of the Mill Jute Department of the Defendant Company. He tells us how the business of the Company is carried on at Naraingunge. The Company appear to have sent out about 35,000 bales with the mark  $\frac{T. S. N.}{2}$  in the season of 1900, and he says, speaking generally that bales of this mark had more than 40 per cent. of Hessian when they were taken out of the godown and put into the flat. It appears from his evidence that they received complaints from the Budge-Budge Company about certain jute they had sold to that Company and that the jute complained of was exactly the same class of jute as that sold to the Plaintiff, and that they had made an allowance in respect of that complaint. I do not think that this gentleman's evidence as to the quality of the jute generally can prevail as against the evidence given as to the quality of the jute in the specific consignment to the Plaintiff, or can or ought to prevail as against the direct evidence in this case as to the result of the examination of the 22 bales, and especially as regards the ten bales which were subjected to the mill selection. I have no desire to make any imputation upon the Company in this matter. I have no doubt that every care was taken in this case by them to see that the jute at their depot at Naraingunge was up to the standard quality but it is not always to support the presumption that this was a common gaming house and kept for that purpose and that being so, we think that the conviction in the present case must stand and the rule discharged and we direct accordingly.

In the next case (Rule No. 1042) connected with the conviction of Amrit Singh, the owner of the house, it appears that he has been convicted in a separate trial—that trial being held immediately after the trial of the persons whose case we have just disposed of and in that trial he has been convicted of keeping a common gaming house.

The defence was that it was the accused's own private house and not a common gaming house within the meaning of the Act.

The question for determination is whether there is sufficient evidence in this case to show that the house was a common gaming house. The evidence that has been adduced tends to show that a large body of persons, some 29 in number, of different ages and social standing, some Hindus, some Mahomedans who, in the usual course, would not be fit companions or associates of the accused, were found assembled in his house at a late hour of the night and at the same time and place, pice and cowries which, the Magistrate says, in shape indicated that they were used for gambling purposes, were discovered. No doubt, as we have already had occasion to point out, coins and cowries are not necessarily implements of gambling but they become "instruments of gaming" if they are found to be used for that purpose, and in this case also we think that there is sufficient to show, from the circumstances under which the articles were found, that they were being used at the time for the purpose of gaming. That being so, the presumption under sec. 6 of the Act arises and instead of being rebutted by the evidence adduced by the accused we think it is strengthened by the facts and circumstances under which the different people were found in the house. It seems to us to be quite clear that a house cannot be considered as exclusively private in its character which is used for the purposes of gaming by a large party of people of different social position and standing who would not ordinarily be the private friends or guests of the owner. We have no doubt that the house in this case comes within the meaning of the Act, and we think that the conviction is right and that this rule also must be discharged.

When dealing with the case of a Will or a deed executed by a purdanashin lady, a particular and peculiar onus rests upon those who come forward to support the document to show that the executant thoroughly understood what she was doing, and was thoroughly and fully acquainted with the terms of the document she was executing.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

THE JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Sale, dated the 2nd of July last, under which he granted probate to the Administrator-General of Bengal of the Will of the widow of the late King of Oudh, dated the 30th of June 1893. The lady was generally known as Khas Mehal. She died on the 31st of March 1894, and on the 14th of May 1894, an application was made by the Administrator-General of Bengal, who was appointed executor of the Will for probate.

The grant of probate was resisted by Prince Kuratulain Mirza, and Nawab Dilbund Begum, who are the son and daughter, respectively, of the testator's late son, Prince Hamid Ali Mirza Wali Ahmed Bahadur, and who have been found in these proceedings to be amongst the testatrix's heirs. Probate was resisted on the ground that the testatrix had not sufficient mental capacity at the date of the execution of the Will to understand what she was doing, and the objectors further say that, if she did execute the document, she was induced to do so by the undue influence of one Nawab Peara Saheb, who was a somewhat distant relative of the testatrix, and who, no doubt, had been living, as one of her household in her house and looking after her business affairs for many years. Under the Will, which is challenged, though, no doubt, the testatrix confirmed a safinamah in his favour, and gave him the control of a sum of Rs. 10,000 for religious ceremonies and sending her remains to karbela, and other purposes, and also gave him the control of the income of a further sum of Rs. 10,000, for the purpose of having the Koran read over her remains, and other objects, Nawab Peara Saheb took no interest.

In dealing with the question of undue influence this is not an unimportant feature. Although, apparently, the execution of the Will was originally challenged by the objectors, it was admitted, when the case was in the Court below, that the testatrix had actually executed it; and the only questions, therefore, which remain for our consideration are, whether she was of sufficient mental capacity at the date of the execution of the Will to understand, and whether or not she did thoroughly understand what she was doing, and whether she was induced by the undue influence of Peara Sahab, to execute it. The case of the objectors is set out in the 16th paragraph of their affidavit filed on the 31st of May 1894. I will read it:—

"I further say that as time went on she became feebler in body and mind and for about a year before her death her state of body and mind was such that she was not only incapable of attending to any business affairs of hers but could not bear being spoken to by anybody and would only utter from time to time a few incoherent sentences, besides making signs asking for food and drink and the like; and I assert that at the time when she was alleged to have made a Will she was from the state of her body and mind incapable of executing a Will or any other legal document or of understanding the provisions of any legal document whatsoever and that if it is shown that she in fact did execute any document in the nature of a Will I further assert that she was then suffering from the illness of which she subsequently died and that she was not a free agent in executing the said alleged Will and that the same was procured from her by the said Peara Sahab and his agents by the exercise of the undue influence and ascendancy which he (the said Peara Sahab) had acquired over her as aforesaid."

In dealing with this case, I have no desire to impugn the proposition laid down in many cases, that, when dealing with the case of a Will, or a deed, executed by a purdanashin lady, a particular and peculiar onus rests upon those who come forward to support the document to show that the executant thoroughly understood what she was doing, and was thoroughly and fully acquainted with the terms of the document she was executing, and that the presumptions as to the knowledge of the executant of the contents of the document she is executing, do not equally apply in the case of a purdanashin lady as in the case of other persons. I have no desire to impugn any of those propositions. But, all said and done, the real question in this case, as in all cases of this description, is, was the testatrix of sufficient mental capacity to understand what she was doing, and did she understand what she was doing, and does the Will give effect to her true intentions and wishes?

Now, upon this part of the case, the evidence of Mr. Rutter, as also that of Mr. Jehandar Mirza, appears to me to be conclusive. It is perfectly true that the instructions for the Will were conveyed to Mr. Rutter, who, I may say, in passing, is a gentleman of great experience and undoubted respectability, no imputation whatever having been made against him in this matter, by Peara Sahab, and also by one Aga Hossein who is now dead, and were not conveyed direct by the testatrix herself to Mr. Rutter; but there is nothing so very exceptional, or suspicious in this, seeing the method in which purdanashin ladies, from the exigencies of their position, are compelled to transact their business affairs in this country. In pursuance of those instructions, Mr. Rutter prepared a draft Will, which was sent to the lady for her approval and returned to him approved with a letter, which is undoubtedly signed by the lady herself, appointing the 13th of June for its execution.

Much has been said by the Appellant as to the mental and intellectual capacity of the testatrix, but there cannot, I think, be any reasonable doubt that she was a woman of somewhat exceptional capacity and accomplishments, and, quite apart from the evidence of Mr. Rutter and Mr. Jehandar Mirza upon this point, the evidence of Mirza Mahomed Jelal, at p. 63 of the paper-book, in connection with Exhibit B which is a letter of the 15th of February 1894, many months after the date of the Will, as also the evidence of the objector himself Prince Kuratulain, at p. 78 of the paper-book, is absolutely inconsistent with the description of her physical and mental condition which is set out in para. 16 of the affidavit to which I have referred.

Much is made of paragraph 3 of the Will as to the objectors not being her heirs, and we are invited to infer from that, that this was put in at the instigation of Peara Saheb, and that he had some deep, but somewhat undefined motive, for its insertion. There is really no evidence to show that Peara Saheb inspired this paragraph; or that he could have had any reasonable motive for so doing, but there is evidence to show that the old lady, for I ought to have mentioned that she was an old lady of nearly 80 years of age, was angry with the objector Prince Kuratulain Mirza and specially so by reason of the memorial of the 20th February 1893, the practical object of which was to take away from her the management of her own property and affairs. It is much more probable that it was owing to some feeling of resentment entertained by her against the objectors on this account that paragraph 3 was inserted than that it was instigated by Peara Saheb.

But be that as it may, it is clear that Mr. Rutter did attend upon the old lady on the 30th June 1893, and if his evidence is to be believed, and I see no reason for doubting it, that a translation of the Will was read over and explained to her, that she said she was satisfied with it, and that she executed the Will in his presence. As I have said, the execution is not now denied, and Mr. Rutter says, that on this day, she was in full possession of her senses, that she was always an intelligent woman and understood business matters thoroughly. No question of persolation can arise because, as I understand, the actual execution of the Will by the testatrix is not now challenged. I have no doubt whatever upon the evidence of Mr. Rutter, that the testatrix thoroughly understood what she was doing, and that the Will gives effect to her intentions and wishes.

Of the other witnesses the identifier, Hajee Ali Mirza, is unfortunately dead, as are Aga Hossein, and Meah Mantaz, and also Mr. Rutter's clerk, Tej Chunder Chatterjee.

Then the witness Syed Jehandar Mirza, who appears to us to be a witness entirely worthy of belief and an independent witness, identified the testatrix before the Sub-Registrar at her house in Sonai

KHAS MEHAL v. THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Bazar. He was admitted to her presence; he says that the signature and seal on the Will are hers, and that the signature was placed there in his presence. He says she was perfectly well at the time so far as he could judge; that he told her that it was her Will, and she said that she understood that it was her Will, and knew its contents; and he tells us that she was more than an ordinarily intelligent woman; she was a woman of culture. This evidence coupled with that of Mr. Rutter, is, to my mind, conclusive that the lady knew that the document she was executing was her Will, that she understood its contents and that it gave effect to her wishes.

I now pass to the question of undue influence alleged to have been exercised by Peara Saheb in connection with the instructions for and execution of the Will. As to what constitutes undue influence in this country, a useful guide is afforded to us by sec. 48 of the Indian Succession Act. It is true that does not apply to the Wills of Mahomedans, but for all that it is a useful guide as to what does or does not constitute undue influence.

No doubt the evidence shows and I have very little doubt that it was the fact that Peara Saheb was the object of the lady's affection, that she had great confidence in him, that he had for years assisted her in managing her affairs, and that she relied upon his advice and the assistance which he gave her. But there is absolutely no evidence to show, in relation to this particular Will that, either by any fraud or coercion on the part of Peara Saheb, the lady was induced to execute it, or that there was any action or importunity on his part such as would have the effect of destroying her free agency in the matter. In this connection, I may remark, that his personal interest under the Will is a remote one, and that he would take no personal benefit whatever, if he properly discharged the obligations which were imposed upon him. To my mind the case of undue influence absolutely fails.

Upon the question of costs, I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the Court below.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of June 1898, against the decree of Babu Behari Lal Mullik, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 30th of March 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Mohim Chunder Chuckerbutty, Additional Munsif of Faridpur, dated the 31st July 1897.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee and Babu Biraj Mohan Mazumdar for the Appellant.

Babu Sarada Churn Mitter and Babu Daswathi Sunyal for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff-Appellant to recover possession of certain immoveable property.

The first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree. On appeal by the Defendant No 1 the lower Appellate Court held that the first Court's judgment was based upon an admission of the Defendant which could be explained if a certain question of fact, namely, what was the position of the river Padma at a certain date, was correctly determined, and as that question, the lower Appellate Court found, had not been properly determined, it remanded the case to the first Court. But instead of remanding it under sec. 566 of the Civil Procedure Code as it ought to have done, it made its remand order under sec. 562 of the Code, after setting aside the decree of the first Court, and it directed that Court to decide the suit itself. No appeal was preferred against his erroneous remand order, though an appeal could have been preferred under cl. 28 of sec. 588 of the Code. After remand the case was re-tried by the first Court and a decree was made in favour of the Plaintiff but not a decree in full as had been originally granted to him. The Plaintiff was satisfied with that partial decree, but the Defendant again preferred an appeal; and upon that appeal the lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the first Court and gave the Plaintiff something less than what the first Court on the second occasion had given him. Against the last-mentioned decree of the lower Appellate Court the Plaintiff has preferred this second appeal; and it is contended on his behalf, first, that as the remand was in contravention of the provisions of secs. 562 and 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it and all subsequent proceedings should be treated as a nullity and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may try, according to law, the original appeal that had been preferred against the first decree of the first Court; and, secondly, it is contended that even if the order of remand be not treated as an absolute nullity and void for want of jurisdiction, and if sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure be applicable to the case, still the remand order and all subsequent proceedings ought to be set aside on the ground of the error in making that order having affected the merits of the case.

A preliminary question* may arise for consideration, the question, namely, whether it is open to the Appellant to raise the abovementioned objections now, he not having preferred any appeal against the remand order under cl. 28 of sec. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Having regard to the provisions of sec. 591 of the Code, and the cases of Maharajah Moheshur Singh v. The Bengal Government (1) and Savitri v. Ramji (2), we are of opinion that the preliminary question ought to be answered in favour of the Appellant. That being so, let us now see how far the two contentions urged on his behalf are well sustained.

In support of the first contention it is argued that as the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court is founded upon the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as sec. 562 is limited in its application to cases where a suit has been disposed of by the first Court on a preliminary point and the decision of that Court on such preliminary point is reversed, and sec. 564 expressly provides that the Appellate Court shall not remand any case for a second decision except as provided in sec. 562, we must hold that the erroneous remand of a case under sec. 562 is an act of the lower Appellate Court in excess of its jurisdiction, or, in other words, is an error affecting the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court, and therefore not cured by sec. 578.

In support of the contention stated above the learned vakil for the Appellant relies upon the cases of Rameshwar Singh v. Sheodin Singh (3), Subba Sastri v. Bala Chandra Sastri (4) and Mohesh Chandra Das v. Madhab Chandra Sirdas (5), mainly, and incidentally upon certain other cases which are not necessary to be noticed just now.

We shall first consider the argument based upon the language of the Civil Procedure Code, and then deal with the authorities cited in support of it. *

The gist of the contention is that the error of the lower Appellate Court in remanding the case under sec. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when that section was not applicable to the case, and when a remand for a second decision was expressly prohibited by sec. 564, was an error affecting the jurisdiction of that Court within the meaning of sec. 578; and that the erroneous order being made by the Court in excess of its jurisdiction it and all proceedings held thereunder should be treated as a nullity. The determination of this point depends upon the meaning to be attached to the term "jurisdiction." That word is used in two different senses. It may either mean what is ordinarily understood by the term "jurisdiction" when used with reference to the local jurisdiction of a Court, or pecuniary jurisdiction of a Court, or its jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter of a suit; or it may mean the legal authority of a Court to do certain things. It is only in this latter sense that an erroneous order of remand by an Appellate Court can be treated as an order made without jurisdiction. But the Court which made the remand order in this case clearly had jurisdiction to deal with the appeal, if the term "jurisdiction" is understood in the former sense. There is no question that it was the Court to which the appeal would lie. And the question therefore is reduced to this, namely, whether the term "jurisdiction" used in sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure is used in the former sense or in the latter. We are of opinion that regard being had to the scope and object of the section, the term "jurisdiction" must be held to have been used there in the former and not in the latter sense. For if it be held to be used in the latter sense, that is, in the sense of the power of the Court to make any particular order in a case over which it has jurisdiction, local and pecuniary, as well as jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter, it may sometimes be difficult to draw the line between an error which is merely an error of procedure and one that is an error of jurisdiction understood in that sense. There is another way of viewing it, from which it would appear that the term "jurisdiction" could only have been intended to be used in sec. 578 in the sense of pecuniary or local jurisdiction, or jurisdiction relating to the subject-matter. When a Court, which is wanting either in local jurisdiction, or in pecuniary jurisdiction, or in jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter, is made to hear a suit or appeal, the error primarily is the error of the party who invokes the Court's jurisdiction, though that error may also be shared by the Court; and there is always good reason for saying that the order of the Court should be treated as a nullity, and the party who finds that the order he has obtained is infructuous cannot reasonably complain, because it was he who brought the suit or appeal in a wrong Court. Where, however, the defect of jurisdiction is not in the nature of a defect or a want of pecuniary jurisdiction, or local jurisdiction, or jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter, but is a defect of jurisdiction consisting in a Court making an order in excess of its power, the error is primarily one of the Court and may not be at all shared by the party in whose favour the order is made; and to hold in such a case that the order of the Court and all proceedings had thereunder should be treated as a nullity would be to visit the party for an act for which he may not at all be responsible. The anomaly may be intensified in certain cases. Take, for instance, a case in which a remand order is made and a decree in favour of the party in whose favour that order is made is eventually passed after remand. That decree may stand unimpugned for years until it is sought to be used on his behalf when his adversary may say that it was made wholly without jurisdiction and should be treated as a nullity. If the contention of the Appellant is correct, carried to its legitimate consequences, it would lead to this result. We do not think such a result was contemplated by the Legislature; at any rate, it could not have been their intention in a remedial provision like that in sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure which is enacted to cure technical defects, to use the word "jurisdiction" in a sense which may lead to such anomalous consequences. We are therefore of opinion that so far as this question depends upon the construction of sec. 578, it cannot reasonably be answered in favour of the Appellant's contention.

We will now deal with the authorities upon which reliance has been placed. The decision in the case of Ramesh Singh v. Sheodin Singh (3) rests mainly upon the ground that a distinction ought to be drawn between a Court's omitting to do something which it is required by law to do, and its doing something which it is possibly prohibited to do, and that when a Court does any thing of the latter description its act ought to be treated as done without jurisdiction. There is no doubt a distinction between the two classes of acts, but we are not prepared to hold that acts of the latter class are acts which affect the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We may observe that the view taken in this case is to a certain extent inconsistent with that taken by the Privy Council in the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (6). For the erroneous order or decision that was complained of in that case was the decision of a suit upon a wrong view of the effect of a certain previous decision, which was set up as operating by way of res judicata; if the contention of the Defendant in the case was well founded, the Court by sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure was positively prohibited to try the suit; and its trying it in contravention of that positive prohibition was, upon the view taken by the Allahabad High Court, an act done in excess of the Court's jurisdiction. The Privy Council, however, did not take that view, as it held that interference with the decisions of the lower Court under sec. 622 was not warranted in that case.

We were referred incidentally to the case of Dr. Mohan Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chaudhuri (7) as supporting the

(7) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 8 (1892).

MOHESH CHUNDER DAS v. JAHIRUDDI MOLLAH.

Appellant's contention and the view of the law taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Rameshur Singh v. Sheodin Singh (3). It is true the case of Brij Mohan Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chaudhuri (7) is authority for the proposition that when a Court does not do that which it is required by law to do, and does that which the law affords no warrant for its doing, it declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it and acts without jurisdiction within the meaning of sec. 622, C. P. C. But that again is a remedial provision with different object, and having regard to that object, which is to vest the Court of revision with discretionary power to rectify certain erroneous orders in non-appealable cases, the term "jurisdiction" may well be taken to have been used in it in a more comprehensive sense than in sec. 578. With all respect for the learned Judges who decided the case of Rameshur Singh v. Sheodin Singh (3) we must say that we cannot assent to the view which they have expressed.

* As for the case of Subba Sastri v. Bala Chandra Sastri (4), we may observe that in a later case, that is, the case of Mallikarjuna v. Pathaneni (8), sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure was held to be applicable in curing the defect of an erroneous order of remand if it did not affect the merits of the case. And we may add that the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, who was one of the Judges who decided the earlier Madras case, was also a party to the later decision.

(4) I. L. R. 18 Mad. 421 (1894).

(8) I. L. R. 19 Mad. 479 (1896).

The case of Mohesh Chandra Das v. Madhub Chandra Sardar (5) is quite distinguishable from the present case; for there it was not only found that the order was bad as a complete remand, but it was further found that there was no ground even for that partial remand that the Code allows, namely, a remand by the Appellate Court, retaining the case in its file, for taking further evidence on any point; and if that was so, the order was bad on the simple ground that it affected the merits of the case by allowing one of the parties to do that which he had no right to do, namely, to adduce fresh evidence.

On the other hand, we may refer to the cases of Nassurooddeen Chowdhry v. Lall Mahomed Pramanick (9), Savitri v. Ramji (2), and also to the case of Matra Mondal v. Hari Mohun Mullick (10) as supporting the view we take.

Upon reason then as well as upon authority, we think that the first contention urged on behalf of the Appellant must fail.

It remains now to consider the second question. It has been argued that the erroneous remand order of the lower Appellate Court in this case, even if it did not affect the jurisdiction of that Court must be held to have affected the merits of the case, because by that order the favourable judgment which the Appellant before us had obtained in the first Court, and which the lower Appellate Court was bound to set aside before it could make the modified decree that has now been made, had been wrongly set aside, and the Plaintiff-Appellant has not had the benefit of that judgment when the lower Appellate Court last disposed of the case. No doubt this matter requires consideration; but as the Bombay High Court in the case of Savitri v. Ramji (2), just referred to, observed, each case must be considered with reference to its own circumstances in dealing with the question now under consideration, and referring to the circumstances of this case we do not find any good ground for saying that the erroneous remand order has affected the merits of the case.

If the right course had been followed, the first Court should have been directed to take further evidence upon the question as to the position of the river Padma at the date referred to in the remand order, and then the first Court ought to have submitted its finding to the lower Appellate Court, which together with the additional evidence taken on remand would have had to be considered along with the first judgment of the first Court. As events took their course, however, what happened was, instead of the finding of the first Court after remand being laid before the lower Appellate Court, the judgment of that Court was before it; but the Plaintiff was still in the position of a Respondent before the lower Appellate Court as he was originally and as he ought to have been if the right course had been followed. Moreover, there is nothing in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on the last occasion which would show that it was influenced in any way by the last judgment of the first Court being treated as a judgment rather than as a finding; nor is it pointed out that the absence of the first judgment of the first Court from its consideration has in any way affected the last decision of the lower Appellate Court. That being so, the second contention of the Appellant must also fail.

We may add that cases may arise, and a perusal of the concluding portion of the first judgment of the lower Appellate Court which was placed before us, shows that the present was a case of that nature, in which, although a complete remand under sec. 562 may not be warranted by the Code, still nothing short of a retrial of all the issues, rendered necessary by the previous imperfect trial of them, would satisfy the requirements of justice. In such a case the provisions of the Code have to be strained to a certain extent in order to enable the Appellate Court to decide the appeal properly. But that of course is a matter for the Legislature to consider.

In the result the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 64 of 1899.

BAIDYA NATH BAHARA,

RAMPINI, J. Defendant, Appellant,
PRATT, J. v.

1900. DHON KRISHNA SIRKAR and 27, June. others, Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec.
153—Appeal—Second appeal—Rent suit—
Rate of rent—Pleadings.*

RAIDYA NATH BAHARA v. DHON KRISHNA SIKKAR

In a suit for rent for less than Rs. 100, the Defendant pleaded that he was the tenant, not of the Plaintiffs but of some other persons at a rate lower than that claimed in the suit, no issue was raised as to the rate of rent and the lower Court merely decided that the Defendant was Plaintiffs' tenant and decreed the suit :

Held—That the question of the rate of rent not having been raised and decided no second appeal lay.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of January 1899, against the decree of Babu Akhoy Kumar Bose, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Beerbhum, dated the 4th of October 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Nritya Gopal Gossami, Additional Munsif of Bolepur, dated the 21st of December 1897.

The suit, out of which the present appeal arose, was brought by the Plaintiffs for recovery of rent in respect of 12 bighas of land which, it was alleged, the Defendant held at a rental of Rs. 31 a year in terms of settlement. The Plaintiffs alleged that they were tenants in respect of the land of several proprietors and that they had in their turn sublet it to the Defendant. The defence was that the land was let to the Defendant by the proprietors themselves at a rent of Rs. 25 and that the Plaintiffs had no right and title to it. The first Court found on the evidence that the Plaintiffs failed to prove that all the proprietors had let the land to them and that they had a perfect title to it and on that ground dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court found that the Defendant was estopped from denying Plaintiffs' title, for the Plaintiffs let the land to the Defendant and put him in possession of the same; the lower Appellate Court therefore decreed the appeal and the suit of the Plaintiffs. Thereupon the Defendant preferred this second appeal.

Babu Sib Chandra Palit for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal, namely, that no second appeal lies, as the value of the suit is less than Rs. 100 and no question as to the amount of rent annually payable has been decided.

We think that this objection must prevail.

The Plaintiffs sued for arrears of rent at Rs. 31 per annum. The defence of the Defendant was that he was not the Plaintiffs' tenant, but that he held the land under some third person at a rent of Rs. 25 per annum.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the Plaintiffs are the landlords, that the Defendant is their tenant, and that the rent is Rs. 31 per annum.

Now it appears to us that no question of the amount of rent payable has been decided. The Defendant did not dispute that if he was the Plaintiffs' tenant he was liable to pay at the rate of Rs. 31. He stated that the rent of the land payable by him to some one else was Rs. 25. But that was a perfectly unnecessary plea to raise in the suit; and no decision has been given on this point by the lower Appellate Court. All that the lower Appellate Court has decided is that the Defendant is the Plaintiffs' tenant at a rent of Rs. 31. As a matter of fact, there is no dispute as to the amount of rent payable. The dispute was as to whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. That was the only issue in the case, that was the only issue which arose and the only issue decided.

There can therefore be no second appeal in this case, simply because the Defendant chose to plead, in a very unnecessary manner, that the rent of the land payable to some one else, not a party to the suit and a person found not to be the landlord, is Rs. 25.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

This was a rule issued on the 13th November 1900, against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 6th of September 1900, confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Gaya on the 11th of September 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly these:—On the night of Monday, the 26th March 1900, there was a burglary of a serious character in the house of one Brindabun. A box or trunk was taken out of the house. It was afterwards broken open and a considerable amount of money in cash and gold and silver ornaments and clothes were abstracted therefrom. Information was given to the thana on the 27th with a list of the articles missing. The Police took up the enquiry, and the steel trunk was found broken in a corner of the garden towards the north of the house. Suspicion, naturally, fell upon the servants of the house, but the Petitioner Kamala Prasad was not suspected. His position in the house was one of some trust, he being a sort of moshahab to the complainant who used to take his meals with him. On the 29th March, the house of one Dosain was searched and two silver bangles were found in his house and identified as part of the articles stolen. The enquiry into the case proceeded for some time with the object of discovering more articles and connecting the different people whose names Dosain gave as having been perpetrators of the burglary. The case was sent up on the 18th of April, and on the 19th Dosain was convicted under sec. 411, I. P. Code, and sentenced to imprisonment and a small fine of Rs. 5. On the 20th April, warrant was issued against Kamala Prasad. Dosain's statements were taken on two previous occasions, and after he had served out his period of imprisonment his evidence was taken afresh regarding the facts to which he had deposed. His evidence in substance amounted to this, that on the night in question, he went out of the house of Brindabun, where he used to sleep and, hearing some trampling on dry leaves, went towards the spot and found the Petitioner engaged either in opening a box or standing near the box which had been apparently broken open. Two of his companions had gone a little distance on hearing Dosain's footsteps. He enquired what they were there for, and the accused in order to obtain his silence, gave him the two bangles which he produced or which were found in his house on the 29th of March. On trial, Kamala Prasad was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya under sec. 381, I. P. Code, and sentenced to undergo 2 years' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, or, in default of payment, to undergo six months' further imprisonment. On appeal, the Sessions Judge of Gaya confirmed the conviction and upheld the sentence.

The Petitioner then applied for and obtained the present rule to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground that the evidence of the accomplice Dosain, upon which the judgments were based, had not been sufficiently corroborated in law and also on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence to support the conviction. It was argued on behalf of the Petitioner that the matters which had been used for the purpose of holding that the evidence of the accomplice had been corroborated did not in law amount to corroboration.

Mr. Leith for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case, the Petitioner Kamala Prasad was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya under sec. 381, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or, in default of payment, to undergo six months' further imprisonment. He preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge who has confirmed the conviction and upheld the sentence. A rule was applied for and obtained from this Court calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground that the evidence of the accomplice upon which the judgment is based has not been sufficiently corroborated in law, and also on the ground that there is no sufficient evidence to support the conviction. Mr. Roy for the accused has placed the entire evidence before us and has contended that the witness Dosain was an accomplice and that his statements regarding the identity of the accused and the latter's participation in the offence of theft which, there can be no doubt, took place on the night in question in the house of Brindabun Prasad have not been corroborated regarding material particulars by outside evidence, and that, if the statements of Dosain be eliminated there is no other evidence to connect the accused with the offence. It appears that, on the night of Monday, the 20th March last, there was a burglary of a serious character in the house of Brindabun. A box or trunk seems to have been taken out of the house. It was broken open afterwards and a considerable amount of money in cash and gold and silver ornaments and clothes were abstracted therefrom. Information was given to the thana on the 27th with a list of the articles missing. The steel trunk was found broken in a corner of the garden towards the north of the house. Naturally suspicion fell upon the servants of the house, but as the learned counsel for the accused points out, Kamala Prasad was not suspected. His position in the house was one of some trust. It is said he was a sort of moshahab to the complainant and used to take his meals with him. On the 29th of March Dosain's house was searched, and two silver bangles were found in his house and identified as part of the articles stolen. Mr. Roy says that the accused himself produced those articles, but it makes no difference whether he himself produced them or they were found in the search. The inquiry into the case proceeded for some time apparently with the object of discovering more articles and connecting the different people whose names Dosain gave as having been perpetrators of the burglary.

The case was sent upon the 18th of April, and on the 19th Dosain was convicted under sec. 411, I. P. C., and sentenced to imprisonment and a small fine of Rs. 5. On the 20th April a warrant was issued against the present accused. Dosain's statements were taken on two previous occasions and, after he had served out his period of imprisonment, his evidence was taken afresh regarding the facts to which he deposes and upon which stress has been laid by the Courts below. His evidence in substance amounts to this: that, on the night in question, he went out of the house of Brindabun where he used to sleep and, hearing some trampling on dry leaves, went towards the spot and found the present accused engaged either in opening a box or standing near the box which had been apparently broken open. Two of his companions had gone a little distance on hearing Dosain's footsteps. He inquired what they were there for and the accused in order to obtain his silence gave him the two bangles which he produced or which were found in his house on the 29th of March. If Dosain's evidence is believed, there can be no doubt that the present accused was concerned in the burglary and has been rightly convicted by the Courts below. The question of law which has been raised before us is, as we pointed out before, that he is an accomplice and that his evidence requires corroboration and that the necessary corroboration has not been furnished. It is contended that the matters which have been used for the purpose of holding that his evidence has been corroborated do not in law afford that corroboration. It is necessary, therefore, to consider what the position of Dosain was, but before doing so, we think it right to state the law bearing upon the admissibility of an accomplice's evidence and the legality of a conviction founded thereupon. Illustration (b) to sec. 114 of the Evidence Act says that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. Sec. 133 declares that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person, and that a conviction is not illegal, merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The principle underlying the rule against the acceptance of an accomplice's evidence without corroboration proceeds upon certain reasons. These reasons have been set forth in a number of cases to which it is not necessary for us to refer here. Primarily an accomplice's evidence requires to be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny, because it is naturally supposed that, when a person is concerned in a crime and has been discovered as being so concerned, he is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself. It is also supposed that an accomplice, in other words a participator in the crime is a person of bad character, and that his evidence, although given under the sanction of an oath, is open to suspicion and, thirdly, evidence given in expectation of any hope of pardon is sure to be biased in favour of the prosecution. It is for these reasons, although the law declares that a conviction is not illegal, merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, that the Courts have held that, ordinarily speaking, the evidence of an accomplice should be corroborated in material particulars and the practice which has been laid down has become, one may say, a part of the law itself. At the same time it is quite clear from the cases that the amount of criminality is a matter for consideration. When a person is only an accomplice by implication, or in a secondary sense, his evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of the person who is an actual participator with the principal offender. In dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Courts must exercise careful discrimination and look at all the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the facts deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice are borne out by those circumstances or whether the circumstances are of such a nature that the evidence purporting to be given by the alleged accomplice should be supported in essential and material particulars by evidence aliunde as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice. That seems to us to be the general principle and keeping that in view it appears to us that in this case, Dosain Goala is only an accomplice in a secondary sense. He does not say, nor has it been shown, that he was actually concerned in the burglary, that he took any part in the abstraction of the steel trunk, in breaking it open or taking out any of the articles or money. His statement amounts to this that he saw that night certain persons, whom he names, and one of whom is the accused, committing the robbery. He knew that there was a burglary and knowing of the theft he accepted certain articles which were the proceeds of that theft and, for that, he has suffered imprisonment and has now no hope of reward or expectation of punishment. It is difficult for us to see how the principles to which we have referred apply to him. No doubt, having been a receiver of stolen property with a guilty knowledge and having suffered imprisonment, his character is now such that his evidence requires to be scrutinized and carefully considered in connection with the other circumstances of the case. The Courts below seem to have examined the facts with a great deal of care and they have come to the conclusion that there was no reason to disbelieve the direct testimony of Dosain. They do not ignore the fact that he was a receiver of stolen property or that he had been in jail, yet the first Court which had the witness before it and the Appellate Court which dealt with the evidence both have come to the conclusion that his evidence may be accepted. It is difficult for us to say that they are wrong in accepting his testimony nor are we in a position to say, giving every consideration to Mr. Roy's argument, that there are circumstances wanting to support the testimony given. On the whole, therefore, after a careful consideration of the case, we are of opinion that the conviction ought not to be interfered with and we accordingly discharge the rule. The accused being on bail must surrender to undergo the remaining portion of his sentence.

KAMALA PRASAD v. THE EMPRESS.

TROYLUCKHO NATH MOZUMDAR v. PAHAR KHAN (1) and SADHU SARAN SINGH v. PANCH DEO LAL (2) overruled.

This was an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 13th November 1897.

The suit, out of which this appeal arose, was brought to set aside a sale held in execution of a certificate issued against the Plaintiffs for arrears of road-cess under the provisions of Act VII of 1880, B. C.

They alleged that the name of the mehal on account of which the cess was due was wrongly entered—Katalgachi being written for Kalapahar—that in the sale proclamation Katalgachi was wrongly entered for Kalapahar, that the sale proclamation was published in Katalgachi and not in Kalapahar, and that in consequence of such irregularities their property, mehal Kalapahar, which they valued at Rs. 25,000 was sold for Rs. 165, the demand for road-cess being only Rs. 131. It appeared that both in the certificate and in the sale proclamation the towji number and the name of the pargana of mehal Kalapahar were correctly given, the pargana and towji number of mehal Katalgachi being quite different.

This case was referred to a Full Bench with the following opinion by Banerjee and Brett, JJ., to whom the case had been referred under sec. 575, C. C. P., in consequence of a difference of opinion between Rampini and Pratt, JJ., who had originally tried the case.

(2) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 1 (1886).

The Judgments of Rampini and Pratt, JJ., were as follows:—

RAMINI, J.—The Plaintiffs have brought this suit to set aside a sale held in execution of a certificate issued against them for road-cess under the provisions of Act VII of 1880, B. C., and they allege that there were inaccuracies in the certificate, that the name of the property sold was incorrectly given in the sale proclamation, that the sale proclamation was not published on the property and that the property consequently sold for an inadequate price. They further aver that there was fraud on the part of the Defendants Nos 3 and 4, who in collusion with the serving peon fraudulently brought about the sale.

The Subordinate Judge found that there was no fraud on the part of the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, but he held that the sale proclamation was incorrect, and had not been duly published. He therefore on the authority of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3) has decreed the suit and set aside the sale.

The Defendant No. 2, the auction-purchaser, appeals. On his behalf it has been contended—(1) that the suit is not maintainable, as the certificate is not impugned as invalid or void and the suit is not one to set it aside; (2) that the irregularities that have been shown to have occurred in the proclamation of sale with regard to its publication are mere irregularities and do not warrant the sale being set aside.

I will first set forth the facts of the case and then deal with its legal aspects.

The certificate was issued for road-cess, and there is no allegation on the part of the Plaintiffs that the amount mentioned in the certificate is incorrect or was not due from them. Then, there was no averment by the Plaintiffs in their plaint that this certificate was not duly served on them under the provisions of this Act. When the case went to trial they attempted to set up such a plea, but the Subordinate Judge has not dealt with this question in his judgment, because the Plaintiffs never raised any such plea in their pleadings. Moreover, the Defendant adduced ample evidence which appears to me to be quite satisfactory to prove the service of the certificate on the Plaintiffs. All that the Plaintiffs say against the certificate is that the amount entered in it as due from them was due for public work-cess as well as road-cess, and that the name of the mehal on account of which the demand was due was wrongly entered—Katalgachi being written for Kalapahar. The omission to state that the amount was due for public work-cess as well as road-cess seems immaterial. As for the name of the mehal being wrongly given, it is pointed out on behalf of the Appellant that the form given in Act VII of 1880 does not require the name of the mehal to be mentioned at all, and that as all the other particulars of the property are quite correct, the Plaintiffs can have been under no misapprehension as to the mehal for which the demand was due from them. This appears to me to be a sufficient answer to the Plaintiffs' objection to the certificate. But whether it is or not would seem to be immaterial, as the present suit is not brought to set aside the certificate, which, as has been said before, is not impugned as either invalid or void.

(3) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 9 (1887).

RAM TARAK HAZRA v. DIBWAR ALL.

What the Plaintiffs rest their case on is certain irregularities connected with the sale proclamation. In the copy filed with the record, it appears that mehal "Katalgachi" has been incorrectly entered for mehal "Kalapahar." But the other particulars of the estate are correctly entered. It is described as Towji No. 1381, situated in Pergana Haveli, which is quite correct. In the plaint it is further alleged that the property was described as in Division Satgachia. But this is not the case. It is not so described in the sale proclamation. The Respondents' pleader has also objected before us that the Government revenue of the property is not stated in the sale proclamation. But this was not complained of in the plaint or in the Court below; so it is too late to object to this omission now. See Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (5).

It has been found by the Subordinate Judge that the sale proclamation was published in Katalgachi, and not in Kalapahar, and I see no reason to differ from the view taken by him of the evidence adduced by the parties on this point.

* These then are the facts of the case. The sale certificate is a good certificate. The amount for which it was issued was really due from the Plaintiffs. It was duly served on the Plaintiffs under sec. 10 of the Act. But in the sale proclamation the name of the mehal advertised to be sold was entered as "Katalgachi" instead of "Kalapahar," and the proclamation was published at the former place instead of at the latter, the two places being about ten miles distant.

It may be mentioned here that the "lotbundi" and certificate of sale obtained by the Appellant are quite correct. There is no mistake in either of them. The property purchased by the Appellant was Kalapahar. Further, it may be mentioned that at every sale held under sec. 289, Civil Procedure Code, there are two other proclamations issued, one affixed at the Court-house and the other at the Collectorate. In this case, as the Collector held the sale, there was probably only one other copy of the proclamation issued. But neither in the plaint nor at the trial nor before us has any complaint been made as to non-service or inaccuracy of this copy of the proclamation. Before us the Respondents' pleader has argued that the copy hung up at the Collectorate must be identical with the copy filed with the record. This may be so, but it has not been shown to be the case.

Now the Subordinate Judge has found, and the Respondents' pleader has contended before us on the strength of the case of Ram Logan Ojah v. Bhawani Ojah (3) that the sale must be set aside, as one thing was advertised for sale, and another thing was sold. I am unable to see that this was the case. The sale proclamation was correct in every particular except the name of the mehal. The other particulars given, particularly the towzi number, were sufficient for its identification. This was all that was necessary to specify, so as to identify it, as has been held in the case of Amirunessa Khatoon v. Secretary of State (6). This information therefore was quite sufficient for intending bidders. As for the Plaintiffs, they can have been under no misapprehension as to what was going to be sold. They knew very well that

(6) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 66 (1885).

(5) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 656 (1882).

RAM TARACK HAZRA v. DILWAR ALI.

Katalgachi was not the name of the property for which the demand due from them was due. They knew it was not their property. As a matter of fact Katalgachi is situated in Pergana Laldi. Its towzi number is 492, and its owners are perfectly different persons. The Plaintiffs knew all the time that their property of Kalapahar was the estate in default and that that answered to the description of "Pergana Haveli, No. 1381 of the towzi."

The same mistake had been made in the certificate, but they never protested against it or endeavoured to have the mistake set right. Probably they intentionally lay by, hoping that the whole proceedings might be held invalid on this ground. It is open to question whether in these circumstances they can now complain of the mistake in the sale proclamation or whether they are not estopped from doing so. (See Arunachellam Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (7).

But be this as it may, I cannot regard this case as being on all fours with that referred to above, on which the Subordinate Judge and the Respondents' pleader have relied, and in these circumstances I think the sale cannot be set aside on account of these irregularities, however serious they may be, and in support of this view I would cite the case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2), in which it was said—"the only remedy of a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is by way of an appeal under sec. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868." This was expressly followed in Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1). I am aware of no ruling in any way setting aside the rule of law laid down in these two cases, and none has been brought to our notice during the argument in this case. These decisions are decisions of Division Benches of this Court, and under the rules of this Court they must be followed, until set aside by a Full Bench.

I would here interpolate the remark that the Plaintiffs did appeal to the Commissioner against the sale, but without success, their applications being dismissed as barred by limitation. There is nothing to show why they did not appeal to the Commissioner in time.

The Respondents' pleader has called our attention to the following cases on which he relies viz., Lala Mobaruk Lal v. Secretary of State (8) Gujraj Sahay v. Secretary of State (9), Girjanath v. Ram Narain (10), Pryag Lal v. Jainarain (11) Bajjnath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (12), Mohibet Huq v. Shew Sahay Singh (13), Saroda Charan Bandopadhyaya v. Kista Mohan Bhattacharjee (14)

The case of Lala Mobaruk v. Secretary of State (8) lays down that a sale under Act XI of 1859 before the expiry of 30 days is no sale. The same was held under Act VII of 1880 (B. O. in Sadhu Saran v. Panch Deo Lal (2). But both were on this point set aside by the Privy Council decision in Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (15), in which it has been ruled that non-compliance with the provisions of sec. 290, Civil Procedure Code, is a mere irregularity, which does not ipso facto make a sale void. In the case of Gujraj Sahai v. Secretary of State (9), affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council and in the decision of which I was a party, there was found to be no certificate, and there were no arrears of cess due: the arrears had been paid before issue of the certificate. These were the grounds of our decision in this case. There were no other grounds.

In the case of Girjanath v. Ram Narain (10), the certificate was held invalid, as there was no sum due at the time of its issue.

The case of Pryag Lal v. Jainarain (11) relates to a review by a Commissioner of the order of his predecessor setting aside a sale. This review was held to be ultra vires and of no effect.

The case of Bajjnath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (12) is also a case in which the sale was set aside on the ground that the notice under sec. 10 had not been served, and there was consequently no valid certificate.

In the report of the case the ground of the decision of the Judges of this Court was said to be "mainly the absence of proof of the certificate of unpaid demand according to the requirements of sec. 7." I do not see that their judgment in any way proceeded on the ground of irregularities in publishing or conducting the sale. Their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the decision of this Court, because "there was no actual sale," because there was no final, conclusive and definite order confirming the sale, "and because, if no certificate be given, the whole basis of the proceeding is gone." I do not see that any other considerations influenced them.

The case of Mahibul Hui v. Shew Shahai Singh (13) was one in which no notice had been served under sec. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, the want of which notice would of course make the certificate bad. But the only point argued and decided in that case was "whether such a suit would lie without a previous appeal to the Commissioner from the order of the Collector."

The case of Saroda Charan Bandopadhyaya v. Kista Mohan Bhattacharjee (14) was a case in which it was held that when the notice required in sec. 10 of Act VII of 1880 (B. C.) is not served, the whole of the proceedings resulting in the sale are invalid.

Since the present case has been argued the report of Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. Secretary of State (4) has appeared. This was also a case in which the sale was held or admitted to be bad on the ground that no notice under sec. 10 of the Act had been served on the persons whose property had been sold.

None of these cases then afford any justification for the setting aside of the sale in the present case.

I may notice here another argument of the Respondents' pleader, viz., that the Secretary of State who was a party Defendant admitted that the sale proclamation had not been duly served and did not defend the suit. But this does not bind the auction-purchaser who is the Appellant in this Court. And the admission that the sale was void would seem to me to proceed on a misapprehension of the law.

The following cases have been cited on behalf of the Appellant, viz.,—Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mojafer Hossein (16), Nana Kumar Roy v. Golam Chunder Dey (17) and Bagal Chunder Mookerji v. Rameshur Mundul (18).

In Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mojafer Hossein (18), it was ruled that a sale is not to be considered a nullity merely by reason of the absence of any attachment. In Nana Kumar Roy v. Golam Chunder Dey (17), it is said that a sale of the revenue-paying land is not ipso facto void by reason of a copy of the sale proclamation not having been fixed up in the Collector's office, as required by sec. 289, Civil Procedure Code. In Bagal Chunder Mookerji v. Rameshur Mundul (18), the omission to issue a fresh sale proclamation under sec. 291 was held to be only an irregularity which does not vitiate a sale.

To these cases I may add Nooral Hossein v. Ram Coomar Sahce (19) which establishes that the mention of a wrong pergunna in the notice of sale is not a material irregularity in publishing or conducting a sale. I think all these cases establish the principle that where there was a demand due, when the notice under sec. 10 of Act VII of 1880 has been duly served, and there was a good and valid certificate, a sale under the Act cannot be set aside on any ground but fraud (and there has been no fraud established in this case), or on some other ground invalidating and rendering void the certificate.

The irregularities complained of by the Plaintiffs, however serious they may be, are nothing but irregularities, which do not make the sale a nullity, and the proper remedy for which is an appeal to the Commissioner as admitted by Banerjee, J., in his judgment in Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. Secretary of State (4).

To hold that a sale under Act VII of 1880

(B. C.), can be set aside on the ground of mere irregularities would seem to me to be going far beyond the law as hitherto administered by this Court, and to be giving to judgment-debtors in suits under this Act facilities for setting aside the sales of their property not given to judgment-debtors by any other Act. As a rule the certificate of sale cures all defects in publishing and conducting the sales. This is so in the case of sales under the Civil Procedure Code.—See Balkrishna v. Masuma Bibi (20). This is so in the case of sales under Act XI of 1859 and Act VII of 1880.—Bishambhar Haldar v. Bonomali Haldar (21). No sales held under these Acts can be set aside on the grounds on which we are asked to set aside the sale of the Respondents' property in this case. According to the Full Bench ruling just cited sales under Act VII of 1880 are, however, an exception to the general rule, for it has been held that the sale certificate does not cure such defects in their case. But are we to go a step further, and to hold that sales under Act VII of 1880 may be set aside in a regular suit on grounds on which no other kind of sale can be so set aside, when judgment-debtors under Act VII of 1880 have a remedy provided for them in the Act, if they choose to avail themselves of it? To go to this length would seem to me to be detrimental to the interests of such judgment-debtors themselves. For if such be the law, no one will bid an adequate price for their property, when put up to sale.

For these reasons I would decree this appeal.

But as my brother Pratt does not agree with me, and we differ on a point of law, viz., the maintainability of the suit on the grounds on which it is brought, the case must be laid before the Honourable the Chief Justice for reference to a Third Judge.

The Respondents wish to press certain cross-objections not against the Appellant, but against their Co-respondents, the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4. We were unable to see how they could do so, unless they themselves appealed against the decree which they have not done.

PRATT, J.—This was a suit brought by the Plaintiffs as proprietors of an 8 annas 3 gundas 1 krant share of Mouzah Bagh Kalapahar, Towzi No. 1381 of the Burdwan Collectorate, to set aside the sale of that property under a certificate for arrears of cesses, on the grounds (1) that the certificate of arrears was faulty; (2) that the sale proclamation related to Mouzah Katalgachi which is not the property of the judgment-debtors and that no proclamation was published at Bagh Kalapahar and that in consequence a property worth Rs. 25,000 was sold at the very inadequate price of Rs. 165.

There was a further allegation that the sale had been fraudulently brought about by two of Plaintiffs' co sharers, viz., Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in collusion with the auction-purchaser Defendant No. 1, and that Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are in actual possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge, however, held, and I think quite correctly, that this plea was not substantiated, and that in fact the Defendant No. 1 purchased on behalf of Defendant No. 2 who is in possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge found that the sale proclamation was served at Katalgachi and not at Bagh Kalapahar which was the mahal sold, and that the sale is absolutely null and void.

It should be mentioned that the Secretary* of State, who was made a party to the suit, filed a written statement admitting that the notice of sale was not duly published as it was not stuck up in any part of the property sold, and intimating that he advisedly refrained from defending the suit as the sale was bad in law and he was unable to support it.

The Defendant No. 2 appeals, and on his behalf the following contentions have been raised—

(1) That the sale proclamation was in fact published at Bagh Kalapahar.

(2) That the Plaintiffs have not asked to have the certificate set aside, and cannot therefore now impugn it as bad.

(3) That the suit to set aside the sale is not maintainable as arrears of cess were due and the allegation of fraud has been negatived.

(4) That in any case the irregularities complained of furnish no sufficient ground for setting aside the sale.

RAM TARACK HAZRA v. DILWAR ALI.

The learned pleader for the Respondents had in the course of his argument endeavoured to show that the notices required by sec. 10 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1880 were not served, and hence he contended on the authority of several decisions that the subsequent sale was bad. With reference to this contention it would be sufficient to say that no such allegation was made in the plaint and consequently it was not dealt with in the judgment of the lower Court. However I am satisfied on the evidence that the required notices were served upon the Plaintiffs.

Now turning to the facts of the case I find from Ex. 14, which is the certificate of arrears of public demand that the demand was on account of arrears of road-cess of Pergana Haveli, Mouzah Katalgachi, Towji No. 1381.

The towzi number is that of Bagh Kalapahar which is situated in Pergana Haveli, whereas Katalgachi appertains to a different towzi number and pergana, so that on the face of it the certificate is ambiguous in an important particular. There is thus some force in the contention that it was incapable of execution, so long as it remained unamended.

If this had been the sole ground for setting aside the sale, I might have hesitated to pronounce it sufficient. But I think that when taken in connection with the subsequent proceedings the Subordinate Judge was justified in giving the Plaintiffs a decree.

The sale proclamation Ex. 10 describes the property to be sold as Pergana Haveli, Towzi No. 1381, mehal Katalgachi. There is no mention of Bagh Kalapahar, and in the order issued by the Certificate Deputy Collector to the Nazir (Ex. 11) the schedule of property which he is directed to cause to be proclaimed for sale is thus described "mehal Katalgachi appertaining to Towzi No. 1381, Division Satgachia, Pergana Haveli." Here we have the introduction of the name Satgachia which is actually the Police Thana for Katalgachi, while that for Bagh Kalapahar is named Jamalpur. Next we come to Ex. 9 which is the peon's return of service and records that the sale proclamation was published at Katalgachi by beat of drum in the presence of witnesses, three of whom are named, and that a copy of that sale-proclamation was affixed to the Collectorate verandah.

The peon having left the service of Government his return was proved by the former Nazir. Two of the witnesses named in that return have testified to its correctness and their evidence has been corroborated by other witnesses from Katalgachi. Some attempt was made by the Defendant to prove that the service was effected at Bagh Kalapahar. Of the four witnesses examined on this point, two do not reside at Kalapahar while the other two give very vague evidence and one of them has had litigation with the Plaintiffs. This evidence is quite unworthy of credit, and it fails to explain how the peon in his return refers to Katalgachi and correctly names witnesses of that place and why he should have gone to Kalapahar which is 10 miles away and is not at all mentioned in the proclamation given into his hands. To the peon the towzi number would convey no information and he would naturally go to the place named in his instructions.

In the result a 10<sup>4</sup>/<sub>10</sub> annas 13 gundas 3 karas share of Bagh Kalapahar was put up to sale by the Nazir, and knocked down for Rs. 165 to a pleader's mohurir, there being only one other bidder. The Plaintiffs value the property at Rs. 25,000, and on a consideration of the evidence, I am satisfied that at the lowest estimate it must be worth Rs. 10,000 to 12,000. It appears that Plaintiffs' share had been mortgaged for about Rs. 1,500 and that the amount under the mortgage decree was deposited in Court after the sale. It seems to me clear that Plaintiffs have suffered very great loss in consequence of the very irregular proceedings taken in connection with the sale of their property. Adopting the language of the learned Judges in the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawanee Ojha (3), "one thing was advertized for sale and another was sold, so that in fact there was no sale proclamation at all. But even if that did not make the sale a nullity, and if it were necessary to enquire whether any damage had arisen by reason of the irregularity in the sale, there would be no doubt in the matter." In the present instance neither the judgment-debtor who reside at Kalapahar nor any likely bidders of that place were apprized of the intended sale ; for no sale proclamation whatever has issued or been published in or even near Bagh Kalapahar. And persons present at the sale would naturally be deterred from bidding, when it was patent that there was a grave discrepancy between the property advertized and that offered for sale and when the sale proclamation had not been published where it should have been. In fact, I fail to understand how the Nazir with the actual facts staring him in the face could have considered himself authorized to sell Bagh Kalapahar. To the Collector the defects in procedure seemed so patent and material that he refused to defend the suit or support the action of his subordinates. Now I come to the legal aspects of the case.

The contention of the Appellant is that on the facts found such a suit as this is not maintainable, that the only remedy which was available to the Plaintiffs was an appeal to the Commissioner, a remedy which they sought but were refused on the ground that their application was out of time, though they had no notice of the sale and could not have anticipated that the certificate officer would for a small demand of Rs. 131 put up a valuable estate for sale in defiance of the prohibition contained in sec. 245 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the value of the property attached for sale shall, as nearly as may be, correspond with the amount of the decree.

Now under the Act for the Recovery of Public Demands which is at present in force, viz., Act I (B. C.) of 1895 as amended by Act I (B. C.) of 1897, not only does an appeal lie to the Collector or the Commissioner as the case may be (sec. 32), but a sale may be set aside under sec. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure (sec. 20). Sales which are held under Act XI of 1859 may, by sec. 33 of that Act, be set aside on appeal to the Commissioner, or thereafter, by regular suit. But we have to deal with Act VII (B. C.) of 1880. It has been held in several cases that the provisions of sec. 311, Civil Procedure Code, do not apply to sales under Act VII (B. C.) of 1880. See for example Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2) and Ram Lagan Ojha v. Bhawani

(2) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 1 (1886)

Ojha (3). Further in the case of Mohdun Huj v. Shew Sahay Singh (18) which was a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of road and public works-cess on the ground that no notice has been served under sec. 10, Act VII (B. C.) of 1880, and that no sale proclamation had been published on the land, it was held that the suit would lie although no previous appeal had been preferred to the Commissioner, the reason being that sec. 98 of the Cess Act makes cesses recoverable under Act VII (B. C.) of 1880, and not as "arrears of revenue and other demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable" to which alone sec. 33, Act XI of 1859, is applicable.

The same reasoning would also seem to bar the application of sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868, inasmuch as the preamble of that Act indicates that its scope is to amend the law "for the recovery of arrears of land revenue and of public demands recoverable as arrears of land revenue."

No doubt this was not the view taken in the case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2), but the learned Judges who decided that case, while inclined to hold that sec. 33, Act XI of 1859, was inapplicable to sales for arrears of cess, do not appear to have had their attention drawn to the preamble to the Act of 1868 in which almost the same words are used as those in sec. 33 of Act XI of 1859 on which the argument was founded.

Even if it be conceded that the law allowed an appeal to the Commissioner, I fail to see how either in law or reason the Plaintiffs are necessarily debarred from any further remedy by suit. Had the sale been held under Act XI of 1859 a regular suit would lie. As the Plaintiffs were precluded from applying under sec. 311, Civil Procedure Code, the bar to a regular suit which is expressly created by sec. 33 is removed. As regards authority, no doubt most of the cases cited at the hearing referred to suits instituted on the ground either that no valid certificate of arrears was drawn up, or that the notices required by sec. 10 were not served. Still if it be once conceded that a suit will lie under such circumstances, the question naturally arises where should the line be drawn, and why in the absence of a statutory bar should the Plaintiffs be denied a right of suit in order to obtain redress for a grievous wrong resulting from the culpable negligence of executive officers to carry out the provisions of the law, and initiated by a total disregard of the safeguard provided by sec. 245, Civil Procedure Code.

Moreover there is clear authority for the proposition that a suit like the present one is maintainable. In the case relied on by the lower Court [Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhuvani Ojha (3)] the sale was set aside on the ground that there was no sale proclamation for the land actually sold. In Mohibul Haq v. Shaw Sahai Singh (13), previously cited, one of the grounds on which the sale was set aside was that no sale proclamation had been published on the land and that the property had consequently been sold at a very low price. The High Court dismissed the appeal after deciding that an appeal to the Commissioner was not a condition precedent to the institution of such a suit.

In the case of Baigunth Sahai v. Ramyut Singh (12), their Lordships of the Privy Council, while resting their decision on the ground that there was no certificate for arrears and therefore no foundation for the sale, nevertheless do not impugn the finding of the High Court that the sale was likewise liable to be set aside on the ground of irregularities in conducting the sale (vide page 778). Much reliance was placed by the learned pleader for the Appellant on the case of Troyluckho Nath Mozundar v. Pahar Khan (1), where the learned Judges in reliance upon the rule laid down in Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Doo Lal (2) held that "the only remedy of a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is by way of an appeal under sec. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868."

The words "substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale" do not occur in sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 which empowers the Commissioner to annul sales "made under this Act or Act XI of 1859, which shall appear to him not to have been conducted according to the provisions of the said Acts."

I have already intimated why in my opinion this section does not apply to sales held under Act VII (B. C.) of 1880. I may add that it was enacted in lieu of the repealed sec. 25 of Act XI of 1859 from which it differs only as regards the period for appeal and in some slight verbal expressions. The time for appeal to the Commissioner is limited to 60 days from the day of sale. In the present case the Plaintiffs were debarred from that remedy by the very action of which they complain whereby they were kept in ignorance that their property was about to be sold (vide paragraph 12 of the plaint and page 20, line 1 of the paper-book). I cannot persuade myself that it is in consonance with law and justice that the Plaintiff should be confined to a remedy which by the very force of those circumstances of which they justly complain was in their case wholly illusory.

It is noteworthy that the learned Judges who laid down the rule relied upon by the Appellant also conceded that a judgment-debtor has a right of suit for the contravention of sec. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code, which, I think, is after all no more serious than the infringement of sec. 274 relating to the publication of sale proclamation. I would further rely upon the following observations of the learned Chief Justice in the recent case of Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. The Secretary of State for India and another (4), which I find from the paper-book was a case relating to a sale under a certificate for arrears of road and public works cesses:—"It was contended that there is no jurisdiction in the Civil Court to entertain a regular suit to set aside the sale, having regard to the provisions of sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868. But that section only enables the Commissioner of Revenue 'to receive an appeal': it does not make it compulsory upon the judgment-debtor who complains of the sale to appeal to that tribunal, nor does it deprive him of his right to institute a regular suit to set aside the sale. If the case of Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1) decides the contrary, I respectfully differ from its conclusion which appears to me to be inconsistent with the cases to which I am about to refer." Then after citing certain cases the learned Chief Justice proceeds—"The case of Baijnath Sahai v. Ramgout Singh (12), indicates how important it is in cases of this class that the requisites preliminary to a sale should be strictly complied with. In neither of the Privy Council cases to which I have referred was it suggested that a regular suit would not lie to set aside the sale, or that the judgment-debtor's only remedy was an appeal under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1888."

I therefore conclude that there is both reason and authority for holding that the present suit is maintainable, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, the Appellant being allowed to take back his purchase-money.

The cross-appeal, which is directed against some of the Co-respondents and not against the Appellant, cannot, I consider, be sustained.

The Order of Reference made by Banerjee and Brett, JJ, was as follows:—

BANERJEE and BRETT, JJ.—In this appeal, which has been referred to us under sec. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, one of the questions that arise for determination is whether a civil suit lies for setting aside a sale held in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII of 1880, B. C.) on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury, the irregularity complained of being that one property was advertised for sale and a different property sold; or whether the only remedy of the party whose property was sold lies in the appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII of 1888 (B. C.).

The cases of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2) and Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1) are authority in favour of the view that the first branch of the question should be answered in the negative, and the second in the affirmative; while, on the other hand, the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3) is in favour of the opposite view; and the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the case of Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. The Secretary of State for India (4) also supports the same view. In my judgment in this last-mentioned case there is a passage which has been referred to by one of the learned Judges who heard this case in the first instance as being in favour of the opposite view; but that passage, taken with the context, would show that there was no definite expression of opinion on my part on the question stated above, nor was it necessary to express any such opinion in that case, all that was said being to this effect, that even if the Respondents' contention was accepted that would not affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain the suit then under consideration.

But quite apart from the last-mentioned case, there is, as will appear from what we have said above, a clear conflict of authority in this Court upon the question stated at the outset. That being so, the question must be referred to a Full Bench. We may add that the inclination of our opinion is in favour of the view taken by Mr. Justice Wilson in the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3).

There is nothing in Act VII of 1880 (B. C.) to take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit like this; and the only legal provision which takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to enter tain a suit for setting aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity leading to substantial injury, namely, sec. 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not applicable to a sale in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerji, Moulvie Serajul Islam, Babus Govinda Chandra Roy and Tarit Mohun Das for the Appellant.

Babus Lall Mohun Das, Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee and Manindra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question submitted for our determination on this reference is, whether a civil suit lies for setting aside a sale held in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act VII (B. C.) of 1880, on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury, the irregularity complained of being that one property was advertised for sale and a different property sold; or whether the only remedy of the party whose property was sold lies in the appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868.

It has been contended before us that it is open to the Appellant upon this reference to show, having regard to the language of the suit and the question submitted, that a suit will not lie for reasons other than the possible application of sec. 2 of Act VII of 1868, for instance, that secs. 244 and 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure are bar to the suit. I do not think that is so. It might have been so if the first question had stood alone, but the alternative evidences what the real question is, and I read the reference as one merely upon the question of whether the view expressed by the learned Judges in the case of Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1) which followed a previous decision of a Division Bench of this Court, in the case of Sudhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2) which held “that the only remedy of a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Act VII (B. C.) of 1880 and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is by way of an appeal under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868,” is or is not correct having regard to the case of Ram Logan v. Bhawani Ojha (3) which is in favour of the opposite view. That is the only question upon which I propose to express my opinion. The question of whether sec. 244 or 312 of the Code is a bar to the suit has never been raised; there is nothing to show that that point has ever been the subject of conflicting decisions of Division Benches of this Court, and so a fit subject for a Full Bench reference. It would lead to much confusion and be contrary to Rule 1 of Ch. V of the Appellate Side Rules, if we were to go into such points as are now suggested upon the present reference.

We ought to confine ourselves to the precise and specific point of law submitted for our disposal. Nothing I am now saying, will prevent the Appellant from raising any other points before the Division Bench to which this case may be sent back for final disposal, or prevent that Bench from deciding them.

Upon the question submitted to us being such as I have indicated, I am clearly of opinion that the decisions in the two first cases I have referred to are bad in law, for, whether sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 does or does not allow an appeal, there is nothing in that section which prevents the party whose property has been sold under the circumstances stated in the referring order, from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to set aside such sale. There may, of course, be other defences to such a suit, but I hold, unhesitatingly, that sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1880 is no bar in itself to a person who considers he is aggrieved by the sale bringing a civil suit in a Civil Court to have that sale set aside.

I have virtually expressed the same view previously, though perhaps it was not necessary for the decision of that particular case, in the case of Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. The Secretary of State (4), and I have heard nothing to-day which leads me to resile from that opinion. In point of fact the learned vakil who appeared for the Appellant has not attempted to support the point.

In my opinion the answer to the question referred to us is that an appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 is not the only remedy open to the party whose property has been sold in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII, B. C., of 1880) and that that section is no bar to his bringing a civil suit in a Civil Court to set aside the sale.

The costs of this reference will abide the result of the appeal, the hearing fee being assessed at five gold mohurs.

PRINSEP, J.—I am of the same opinion. As I understand the object of the learned Judges in making this reference, it was to obtain an expression of opinion whether in a suit such as this, sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 was a bar to its institution and as expressing the affirmative of that question they refer to the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3). That, as I understand it, was the only point before us, and I agree with the answer which it is proposed to give.

BANERJEE, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that sec. 2 of Act (VII, B. C., of 1868) does not bar a civil suit for setting aside a sale in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII, B. C., of 1880), on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury, and that the case of Troyluckho Nath Morumdar v. Pahar Khan (1) in so far as it affirms that view and lays down that the only remedy of the party whose property has been sold lies in an appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of the Bengal Councils Act of 1868, was wrongly decided. But as I was one of the Judges who made this reference, I feel bound to add that this answers only one part of the question, namely, the latter alternative, and that the other alternative question, namely, whether a civil suit lies for setting aside a sale held in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII, B. C., of 1880) on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury, the irregularity complained of being that one property was advertised for sale and a different property sold, remains unanswered.

At the argument the learned vakil for the Defendant-Appellant raised the question whether a civil suit such as the one contemplated in the first alternative of the question referred to us was not barred by sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but it was held by a majority of this Bench that it was not open to him, upon this reference, to raise that question. From that view I beg respectfully to dissent. I am of opinion that the reference, or at any rate, the first part of the question stated in the order of reference did raise that question; and the reason, why the second alternative of the question referred to the Full Bench was worded in the manner in which it has been, is because the point is so put in one of the conflicting decisions which have led to this reference. The conflict in the decisions of this Court which has led to this reference is that between the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3), on the one hand, holding that a civil suit would lie in a case like the one described in the question, and the cases of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2), and Troyluckho

Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1), on the other, holding that a civil suit would not lie and that the only remedy of the party whose property has been sold is an appeal to the Commissioner. There is thus a conflict in the result; and therefore I and Mr. Justice Brett, who made the reference, thought that by reason of the conflict between these cases the question ought to be referred to a Full Bench. The conflict was in the conclusions arrived at in those cases, though not in the reasoning. But as the question which was sought to be raised in this reference has been held by a majority of the Full Bench not to be open to the Appellant to raise, I will not express any opinion upon it now; and I simply express my concurrence in the answer which the learned Chief Justice has given to the reference so far as that answer goes, reserving my opinion upon that question.

AMEER ALI, J.—I agree with the answer the learned Chief Justice proposes to give to this reference. It appears to me that necessity for the reference arose from the fact that in Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1), which proceeded upon the earlier case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2), it was held that a civil suit was barred inasmuch as the Plaintiff had a remedy in the shape of an appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868. This view, however, was at variance with that taken in the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha (3). There was no conflict on any other point in those decisions. It was not held either in Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1) or in Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2) that the suit was barred under any other provisions of the law. I therefore think as I said before, that the necessity for the reference arose upon the ground which formed the ratio decidendi of the case of Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1). And accordingly in my opinion the answer proposed to be given deals with the exact question raised.

RAMPINI, J.—I concur with my brother Banerjee in thinking that by the referring order in this case two questions have been referred for the decision of the Full Bench, namely, first, whether a civil suit lies for setting aside a sale held in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII, B. C., of 1880) on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury; and, secondly, whether the only remedy of the party whose property has been sold lies in an appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868. Consequently, I do not think that we are fully answering the questions propounded to us when we only deal with the second of those questions. But I understand that when the case goes back to the referring Bench, the first question will be open for discussion; so that perhaps it is not very important whether we deal with it here or not.

I regret I am unable to agree with the opinion of the other Judges constituting this Bench as to the answer to be given to the second question proposed in the referring order. It seems to me that the only remedy of the party whose property has been sold does lie in an appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868. I think I am bound to hold this on the authority of the cases cited in the referring order, namely, the case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panch Deo Lal (2), and the case of Troyluckho Nath Mozumdar v. Pahar Khan (1). The reasons given in these cases for this view are that in sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1880 it is provided that the two Acts XI of 1859 and VII (B. C.) of 1868, together with Act VII (B. C.) of 1880 itself are to be read as one Act. By the provisions of sec. 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 an appeal lies to the Commissioner by a person who is aggrieved and who wishes to complain of any irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, and by the final words of the section the order of the Commissioner in such an appeal is final. Nothing has been said before us to-day which satisfies me that these reasons are incorrect. Indeed no attempt has been made to controvert this reasoning. I must therefore adhere to the conclusion arrived at in those cases.

Of course I must not be understood as implying that no suit will lie in a Civil Court to set aside a sale on grounds other than that of irregularity in publishing or conducting a sale, such as fraud, absence of a good and valid certificate, non-service of notice under sec. 10 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1880 in such

A tenant holding land and paying as rent therefor a sum of money exceeding one hundred rupees per annum is, for the purposes of assessment under the Cess Act, a tenure-holder and not a cultivating raiyat.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th of September 1898, against the decree of Babu Nuffer Chunder Bhutta, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Bhagulpore, dated the 9th of June 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Deb, Munsif of Monghyr, dated the 21st of February 1898.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment of the Court.

Babus Nilmadhub Bose and Mohendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee and Lakshmi. Narain Singh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 9th June 1898.

The suit is one brought by the Plaintiff to recover a certain amount of road-cess and public work-cess from the Defendant. The facts of the case are these:—The Defendant was formerly, i. e., before 1303, a raiya, holding a raiya or cultivating lease of 1,848½ bighas.

The Collector, however, assessed him with road-cess as a tenure-holder. The term of the previous lease expired in 1302. The Defendant then took another lease (so far as we can see admittedly for the same land, with the exception of 48 bighas) for a period of 5 years, viz, from 1303 to 1307. This lease was also granted to him as a cultivating raiya. It was for 1,000 bighas at a rent of Rs. 1,000.

The Plaintiff now sues the Defendant for the road-cess of 1302, 1303, 1304 at the rate assessed by the Collector. The Defendant denies that he is liable to pay at this rate.

The first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree, holding that the Defendant was a tenure-holder and not a cultivating raiya.

The Subordinate Judge affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance, so far as the year 1302 was concerned, but he held that, after the execution of the new lease in favour of the Defendant, the Defendant was not bound by the Collector's assessment, but was liable to pay road-cess, etc., at the rates leviable upon a cultivating raiya.

A. CASPERSZ v. KUMAR SINGH.

The Plaintiff appeals against the Subordinate Judge's judgment, so far as the years 1303 and 1304 are concerned, and we think that the Subordinate Judge has certainly fallen into error so far as the status of the Defendant is concerned. It may be that, within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Defendant is to be regarded as a *raiya*t and not as a tenure-holder, but, for the purposes of the Road-cess Act, the law with regard to what is a cultivating *raiya*t and what is a tenure-holder would seem to be different. Under sec. 4 of Act IX of 1880, B. C., a "cultivating *raiya*t" is defined as a person cultivating land and paying rent therefor not exceeding Rs. 100 per annum; and "tenure" includes every interest in land, whether rent paying or not, save and except an estate as above defined, and save and except an interest of a cultivating *raiya*t. Looking at this definition, it is perfectly clear that under the terms of the law the Defendant, so far as the collection of road-cess is concerned, is a tenure-holder and not a cultivating *raiya*t. We are surprised that the Subordinate Judge should have set aside the judgment of the Munsif on this point in the face of this definition, and set it aside without attempting in any way to show how the Munsif is wrong; and we can only say that, so far as we can see, the Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the Defendant is a cultivating *raiya*t by wilfully shutting his eyes to the provisions of the road-cess law. We must therefore set aside his decision; for we find that according to the road-cess law the Defendant is not a cultivating *raiya*t; but a tenure-holder and is liable to be assessed as such.

The case must therefore go back to the lower Appellate Court for the disposal of the second issue, which is to be found at page 5 of the paper-book, viz, what amount, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled to recover from the Defendant for the years 1303, 1304? Having found this it must dispose of the case accordingly. We, therefore, remand the case to be dealt with in accordance with the above directions. The costs will abide the result.

In a suit on a mortgage for Rs. 49,855 and odd, a consent decree was made whereby the Defendants consented to judgment for the entire amount but subject to the proviso that, if on a certain date the Defendants should pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 35,000, the decree should be considered as satisfied. The decree further provided that if for the payment of the aforesaid sum it should be necessary for the Defendants to sell any portion of the mortgaged properties, they should give the particulars of the properties to be sold to the Plaintiff who should then appraise the same within 30 days and after credit.

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHRY v. MAHARANI DAS.

ing the proper price against the Defendants' debt, should execute a deed of release or deed of consent. The Plaintiff, however, refused to appraise any properties when asked to do so, and by reason of such refusal the Defendants were unable to pay up the amount within the date fixed. The Plaintiff thereupon applied for execution for the whole amount of the decree:

Held—That by reason of the breach of contract by the Plaintiff, he was only entitled to a decree for Rs. 35,000. That that sum must be regarded as having been tendered and refused on the date fixed for payment thereof and would not therefore carry any interest.

This was an appeal from an order of the High Court of Calcutta (Beverley and Ameer Ali, JJ.), dated the 4th January 1894. The appeal arose out of an application for execution of a consent decree obtained by the Plaintiff on the 13th August 1888 under the following circumstances: The Plaintiff held a mortgage in respect of several properties from two persons, Ram Churn Saha and Madan Mohun Saha, both of them since deceased, and represented in the suit by the Respondents. A suit was brought on the mortgage for the recovery of Rs. 49,000 and odd, with interest and costs, which was compromised, and the terms of the solehnama entered into between the parties were embodied in the decree. A decree was entered for the full amount claimed with interest and costs of the suit and the following were the other important provisions of the decree:—

"3. A decree will be made to the effect that the entire amount found on account made to be due to the Plaintiff up to this day for principal and interest due during the pendency of the suit and the cost of the suit, shall be realised by the sale of the mortgaged properties, which shall be liable for the whole amount, and by the sale of the properties of the Defendants and other properties left by the mortgagors, whether standing in their own names or benami for them, moveable and immoveable, as well as by the sale of the Defendants' dwelling-house, and that such sum shall bear interest at the rate of 10 annas per cent. per month from the date of the decree to the date of realisation.

"4. If the Defendants should, within the 30th Srabun 1296 from the date of the decree, pay to the Plaintiff amicably or deposit to his credit in Court the sum of Rs. 35,000, the decree shall be considered as satisfied. The Plaintiff shall not be able to execute this decree again. The balance of the money shall be considered as remitted, and the decree satisfied. Out of the aforesaid Rs. 35,000, the Defendants shall pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 700 within Assin next, and the remaining Rs. 34,300 within the 30th Srabun 1296. If they fail to pay the sum of Rs. 700 within the month of Assin next, then the aforesaid sum of Rs. 700 shall bear interest at the rate of Rs. 5 per cent. per month from the month of Kartic next.

"5. If the Defendants do not pay the aforesaid Rs. 35,000 within the 30th of Srabun 1 as provided by para. 4 or if part should be paid and part remain unpaid, then the whole amount of the decree as stated in para. 3 and the amount of interest which may be due from the date of the decree, after deducting the amount paid, shall be realised by the sale of the mortgaged and other properties, moveable and immoveable, whether standing in their own names or benami for them, and by the sale of the Defendants' dwelling-house. To that the Defendants shall not be able to make any objections, and if they do, it shall be of no effect.

"6. The execution of the decree shall be stayed till the 30th Srabun 1296, which, according to the provisions of para. 4, is the time granted by the Plaintiff for the payment of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 35,000. But if within this time the mortgaged properties or any one of them should be proclaimed for sale for any kind of arrears of rent, and the Defendants should not prevent the sale by payment of the decretal amount, then the Plaintiff shall be competent to realise the whole money due under the decree, by taking out execution without waiting for the expiration of the fixed time under the provisions of para. 5, and the Defendants shall not be entitled to any remission under the terms embodied in para. 4, and they shall not be able to make any objection with respect to it, and if they do, it shall be rejected. If the Plaintiff should save any property under mortgage by paying the money due for arrears of rent, then such money with costs and interest shall be a further charge on the properties, and such money shall be realised by the sale of moveable and immoveable properties of the Defendants, their ancestors and their heirs, and by the sale of their dwelling-house.

"7. If for the payment of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 35,000, it should be necessary for the Defendants to transfer the mortgaged properties or any plots or portions of them or grant pattahs on receipt of salami, then the Defendants shall, on settling who are to receive (the properties), give the Plaintiff the sthit papers in relation to whatever properties they may from time to time determine to sell or lease, before the 30th Assar 1296. Within 30 days from that day the Plaintiff shall, at the Defendants' expense, make an appraisal of the sthit in the mofussil, and after crediting the proper price or the proper salami against the Defendants' debt, shall, at the Defendants' expense, duly execute a deed of release or a deed of consent. The Defendants shall not be able to alienate the mortgaged properties or any portion of them, or confer any right therein by pattah to any one, without a written deed of release or consent from the Plaintiff, and if they do any act contrary to this, such act shall be of no effect."

The sum of Rs. 700 was paid as provided in the decree, but the Rs. 34,300, which was required to be paid before the 30th Srabun 1296, i.e., 14th August 1889, was not paid as conditioned in the consent decree; and an application was made for the execution of the higher amount named in the decree, viz., Rs. 52,000 and odd. The Subordinate Judge granted execution in respect of the amount claimed. The Defendants thereupon appealed to the High Court, contending that they were unable to carry out the terms of the contract on account of certain misconduct which they alleged against the decree-holder. They alleged that they could not make the last payment on account of the refusal of the decree-holder to give consent to certain sales of the mortgaged properties which he was bound to give under para. 7 of the solehnama decree, and that therefore the decree-holder was only entitled to get Rs. 34,300 and not the full amount of the decree. The High Court on the 1st September 1891 remanded the case with directions to inquire whether the mortgagee had, by unreasonable refusal or neglect on his part to take any steps to carry out the terms of the clause authorising the judgment-debtors to sell the properties piecemeal, prevented them from paying the money within the time fixed. The learned Judges (Pigot and Banerjee, JJ.) were of opinion that, "if on inquiry, it should appear that the mortgagee did render it practically impossible for the mortgagors to carry out the intended arrangement, the mortgagee must be limited to the reduced amount agreed on. Unreasonable refusal or neglect by the mortgagee and a reasonable ground for belief that property could have been sold in time for enough to meet the reduced claim but for such conduct, would be enough to entitle the mortgagors to have the mortgagee held to his agreement to take the lesser sum."

Upon remand the Subordinate Judge

found that the mortgagor had unwarrantably and unjustifiably thrown obstacles in the way of the judgment-debtors selling various properties which they had from time to time arranged to sell and thus prevented their making the payment of the smaller sum agreed upon to be paid on or before the 30th Srabun 1296. He also found on the evidence that the judgment-debtors had bargained for the sale of their landed property of the value of Rs. 23,000, and for the sale of their business at Sahebgunge for Rs. 2,000; that they had arranged for a loan of Rs. 5,000 and were about to sell their ornaments for Rs. 5,000 so as to make up the Rs. 35,000; under those circumstances he allowed execution for the lesser sum only and refused interest thereon.

The decree-holder thereupon appealed to the High Court contending, that the facts found by the lower Court were erroneous; that there was no obligation on the part of the decree-holder to take any steps for the purpose of giving his consent to the sales unless he was assured that the entire amount, viz., Rs. 34,300, which remained due after payment of the Rs. 700, would be paid in full; that, assuming, that he was bound to give his consent as alleged by the judgment-debtors, the effect of his not giving consent would only entitle the judgment-debtors to have the sums for which they were going to sell the properties credited against the decretal debt, viz., Rs. 23,000, and lastly, that the lower Court was wrong in refusing him interest upon the lesser sum of Rs. 34,300.

The High Court dismissed the appeal, agreeing with the lower Court on all the points.

The decree-holder now appealed to the Privy Council against the orders of the High Court, the one dated the 1st September 1891 remanding the case to the lower Court, and the order of the 4th January 1894 dismissing the appeal from the order made by the Subordinate Judge upon remand.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DAVEY—This is an appeal by a money-lender in Bengal, who held a mortgage from Ram Churn Saha Poddar, and Madan Mohun Saha Poddar, brothers, for a sum which it is unnecessary to mention. Suffice it to say, that in the early part of the year 1888 the Appellant instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunge against the Respondents to recover the sum of Rs. 49,855-14. The mortgage covered 90 different lots of land, some of them, apparently, from the description in the schedule, being of small value, and others of larger value, but apparently not lying contiguous to each other. After the suit was commenced a compromise was come to, and that compromise is to be found in the consent decree at page 18 of the record. The effect of that decree was this, that the Defendants consented to judgment for the entire amount asked by the plaintiff, but subject to this proviso, that if, on a day which is the same as the 14th of August 1889, the Defendants should pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 35,000, the decree should be considered as satisfied, and the balance of the money should be considered as remitted. Out of the sum of Rs. 35,000 the Defendants were to pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 700 before the 15th of October 1888, and the remaining Rs. 34,300 before the 14th of August 1889. The decree provided that if they failed to pay the sum of Rs. 700 within the month of Assin—that is October—next, then the aforesaid sum of Rs. 700 should bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month from the month of Kartic next. It then contained a clause, which is No. 7 in the decree, and according to the translation given in the record is as follows—the learned Judges of the High Court had it re-translated, but in substance, and for any material purpose, it does not appear to their Lordships that the version given in the judgment of the High Court differs from that in the record (p. 34):—“If for the payment of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 35,000 it should be necessary for the Defendants to transfer the mortgaged properties, or any plots or portions of them, or grant pattahs on receipt of salami”—that is, a premium or bonus for the lease—“then the Defendants shall, on settling who are to receive (the properties), give the Plaintiff the shit papers in relation to whatever properties they may from time to time determine to sell or lease, before the 30th Assar 1296”—that is the 13th July 1889.—“Within 30 days from that day the Plaintiff shall, at the Defendants’ expense, make appraisement of the shit in the mofussil, and after crediting the proper price, or the proper salami, against the Defendants’ debt, shall at the Defendants’ expense duly execute a deed of release or deed of consent. The Defendants shall not be able to alienate the mortgaged properties, or any portion of them, or confer any right therein by pattah to any one without a written deed of release or consent from the Plaintiff, and if they do any act contrary to this such act shall be of no effect.” The meaning of that clause appears to their Lordships to be reasonably plain. No doubt the Respondents, who appear to be a widow lady and her sons, would find a difficulty in raising the money for the purpose of paying the mortgage debt to the decree-holder except by sale, as opportunity offered, of the mortgaged properties themselves. The clause provides means for doing so. But of course the Plaintiff would quite rightly secure himself against any improvident alienation, or any alienation, of the property comprised in his mortgage at an inadequate price, and for that purpose the arrangement is that whenever from time to time the Defendants, the mortgagors, should determine to sell or release they should send to the Plaintiff the particulars, in order to enable him to judge of the propriety of the sale, or the adequacy of the price of any sale, or the bonus, if a lease. Then there is an absolute obligation upon him. It is not left to his option. There is an absolute obligation upon him within 30 days from the day he receives the papers and particulars, to make an appraisement, and if the price is approved, and credited to him against the debt, he is then to execute a deed of release, or deed of consent. On the face of this clause there is not the slightest pretence for saying that the decree-holder was at liberty to postpone the appraisalment of the properties which the Respondents proposed to sell from time to time until sales were proposed of a sufficient amount to pay the whole of the debt. On the contrary, it is expressly contemplated that the Respondents may from "time to time" determine to sell or release; and from the nature of the property, consisting, as has been said, of 90 small lots, it is apparent that they would be more likely to sell in separate parcels than in bulk, so as to raise the whole amount at once. Nor is there any ground for saying, as Mr. Branson suggested, that the Plaintiff, the decree-holder, is not bound to execute a deed of release, or a deed of consent, until the whole debt is paid off. The deed of release, or deed of consent, which is referred to in this clause, is obviously a deed of release, or a deed of consent to the mortgagor selling, in favour of the purchaser. The High Court's observation is, their Lordships think, entitled to great weight, that if the construction which the decree-holder, the Appellant, put upon this clause, that he was not bound to do anything until the whole of his money was forthcoming, was a right construction, they might just as well have had no clause at all; because, of course, if the whole of his money was forthcoming, and they were ready to pay him off the whole of his money, it was perfectly immaterial to him what prices they obtained.

HAHENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHRY v. MAHARANI DASÍ.

What took place on this decree was this. The Rs. 700 were paid in the time stipulated; about that, there is no controversy; leaving, therefore, Rs. 34,300 to be paid before the 14th of August 1889. The present Respondents did arrange for a sale of various lots, and without reading the whole of the correspondence, it is sufficient to take the first letter, which is dated the 7th of Bysack 1296, equivalent to the 19th April 1889, as a specimen. This is from the Respondent, Bindubasini Dasi, the widow. She writes this to the present Appellant:—"I have already written two letters to you, but owing to my misfortune you have not, up to this time, given any reply to them. I have been trying to pay up your money by the sale of properties. The matter has not yet been settled with the purchasers, but the sale of the properties Nos. 55, 52, 68 of the mortgage bond at thirty times the profit,"—that is, probably 30 years' purchase—"has been arranged for with Gobind Chunder Saha and others, and the property No. 79 at thirty times the profit with Judhistir Saha, and the earnest moneys have been taken from both. I send the skit papers of those properties to you per book post;" and then she points out, which is an obvious observation, that "people fear many things before they purchase, and if one transaction is completed with one person, others will be encouraged to enter into (similar) transactions." Or, the sentence might have been put in a negative form: if it is found that these transactions will not go off, and you will not give your consent to my selling these properties as I have agreed to do, then other persons will be shy of entering into contracts for the remainder of the property. Then she asks him in accordance with this contract to "send a man as soon as you can to make an appraisalment of * * * those four properties." What was the answer to that? His answer was dated the 29th of Bysack which would be equivalent to some day in April or May 1889, about ten days afterwards: "It will be very troublesome to make an appraisement if you arrange for the sale of properties in this way. You have in this way procured only Rs. 3,138-8 annas; but you have not said what is to be done about the remaining money. Procure the whole of the money, then an appraisement shall be made of all the properties together, and a deed of release will be executed." That was a plain breach of the contract which the Appellant had entered into. He had, as has been already pointed out, entered into a contract that 30 days after receiving the particulars of sales made from time to time, he would send a man to appraise; but in this letter he refuses to send a man to make the appraisement until the whole of the money is procured, and an appraisement can be made of all the properties together, when a deed of release will be executed. That, therefore, was a complete breach of his contract, and the consequence was that those sales could not be carried out. Then there are subsequent letters to the same effect, and he gives the same answer, that she cannot get a release "until the whole amount is procured according to the terms of the settlement;" and he says it wastes time trying to sell piecemeal. Ultimately she sends a registered letter on the 29th of Assar 1296, that is, the 12th July 1889. She had previously sent her servants to personally expostulate with the Appellant, and she now writes him a letter begging him to send a man to appraise the properties which she had undertaken to sell. He replies, "Nothing can be done unless the whole of the money is procured, and it is of no use to worry me repeatedly. Still, as you say you have secured purchasers for some of the properties mortgaged to me, and of some other properties, for Rs. 23,000, I send my officer Jagat Chunder Chuckerbutty to make an appraisement. Have the consideration money of those among the mortgaged properties for the sale of which you have arranged deposited by the purchasers with some trustworthy pleaders, and mukhtar of Madaripore, and after getting the appraisement made within three days you will pay up the remaining money within the time fixed by the solehnama." In other words he says, "Out of grace and favour to you I will send my officer to make an appraisement, but I make the condition that the consideration money of the mortgaged properties," for the sale of which the Respondent had arranged, "shall be first deposited by the purchasers, and also that the appraisement shall be made within three days, and you will thereupon pay up the remaining money." The man apparently was sent. There is some difference in the evidence as to what took place, but the learned Subordinate Judge has expressed his opinion as to the result of the evidence, and the High Court concur in the view which he takes of the evidence upon that point. It amounts to this: that the man did go, but refused to appraise, and the reason why he refused to appraise was because in accordance, no doubt, with the instructions he had received he required the whole amount of the purchase money to be deposited by the purchasers before he would make the appraisement, which was, of course, a perfectly unreasonable condition, and one which he had no right to make : and he also required the appraisement to be made in three days, which the learned Subordinate Judge says made it practically impossible to carry it out.

Under the circumstances it is not surprising that the Respondents were not able to find the money on the stipulated day, and thereupon the present Appellant presented a petition for realisation of his entire decree by sale of the mortgaged properties. That was resisted by a statement put in on behalf of the Respondents, showing in substance, but not in the detail in which their Lordships have stated them, the facts which have been referred to. The learned Subordinate Judge in the first instance gave the Appellant execution for the whole amount of his decree on the ground that there was nothing in the compromise decree, the solehnama, which requires the Appellant to give his consent to the sale of any of the property. There was an appeal, and the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal expressed their opinion of the construction of the solehnama, and remanded it back to the learned Judge to inquire whether in substance the Appellant had placed unreasonable obstructions in the way of the Respondents realising the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged properties. The learned Subordinate Judge took evidence on the point, and gave his judgment on the 31st of August 1892. After very carefully examining the evidence he says :—"Considering all these facts and circumstances of the case I find that the decree-holder did render it practically impossible for the judgment-debtors to sell some of the mortgaged properties within Srabun 1296 for enough to meet the reduced claim, and therefore, according to the terms of the solehnama as interpreted by the High Court, he is not entitled to get more than Rs. 34,300 for his mortgage decree." It should be mentioned that there was evidence which satisfied the Subordinate Judge, and the High Court also, that if the Appellant had done that which he had contracted to do, and made an appraisement, and given a deed of release of the properties which were proposed to be sold by the mortgagors within the time stipulated for, the Respondents had made arrangements through which, by the sale of other property, including their jewellery, they would have been in a position to pay Rs. 35,000 before the date when it ought to have been paid according to the solehnama.

There was an appeal from this judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The Appeal Court again went very fully into the case, and they came to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was right in the view which he had taken of the facts of the case, and that the Appellant had not performed the contract which he had undertaken to perform, and had rendered it impossible for the Respondent to find the money within the time fixed. They thereupon confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. In other words the substance of their decree is this : that as the Appellant in breach of his contract had prevented the Respondents from paying the sum of Rs. 35,000, as they could have done, and would otherwise have done within the time stipulated for by the solehnama, he must be put into the same position as if that sum had been tendered to him within that time, and he had refused the tender. Their Lordships think that that is the principle of the decree, and that in the circumstances of the case it is a sound principle. It follows that the Appellant cannot get any interest on his Rs. 34,300. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken that view, and the High Court also have taken the same view on that question as was taken by the Subordinate Judge.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed; and the Appellant will pay the costs of it.

Where a Magistrate drew up one proceeding in respect of several plots of lands claimed to be in the possession of different persons and the parties were not prejudiced by the Magistrate not taking separate proceedings but dealing with the matter in one and the same proceeding; and where the course taken by the Magistrate did not preclude any of the parties from adducing evidence in the case concerning the different plots of land:

Held—That the procedure taken by the Magistrate did not vitiate the enquiry and the order made therein.

This was a rule issued on the 1st of August 1900, against the preliminary order of the District Magistrate of Faridpur, dated the 6th of March 1900, as well as the order of the Deputy Magistrate, dated the 26th of May 1900.

The facts material to this report appear from the judgment.

The Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) and Babu Sarat Chunder Khan for the Petitioners.

Mr. Hill, Babus Jogesh Chunder Roy and Dasarathi Sanyal for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case a rule was issued on the District Magistrate and on the 1st party to shew cause why the proceedings of the District Magistrate mentioned in the petition should not be set aside on the ground that they were made without jurisdiction, first, inasmuch as the report of the Sub-Inspector and the petition of Gobind Baidya did not disclose grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace;

ISWAR CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. AMBICA CHURN MAJUMDAR.

secondly, inasmuch as the same proceedings involved the claims of the 1st party as against the 2nd and 3rd parties in respect of lands, some of which were claimed only by the 2nd party, and some of which were claimed only by the 3rd party; and, thirdly, inasmuch as the proceedings related in part to land in respect of which no dispute existed. Cause has been shown on behalf of the 1st party by Mr. Hill, and we are satisfied that there were sufficient materials before the Deputy Magistrate to institute the proceedings under sec. 145, C. Cr. P. Apparently, by some clerical mistake or inadvertence, the words "7th of February" crept in for "the 1st February." We find that, upon the petitions of the 24th January and the 1st February, there are distinct statements regarding a breach of the peace. As a matter of fact, Gobind Baldya stated that there had actually been an affray some days previously which would perfectly justify the District Magistrate in instituting the proceeding under sec. 145.

As regards the second ground, the learned Advocate-General contended that his clients were prejudiced because there was only one proceeding. We have given that contention our best consideration. Assuming that the plots B and C which were claimed by the 2nd and the 3rd parties separately were sufficiently localized, we find that the 2nd and 3rd parties went fully into evidence in the case, and notwithstanding that they gave evidence of their possession in respect of these two plots of land, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the party in whose favour he has made the order was in possession of the entire plot forming the subject-matter of dispute.

We see no reason for supposing that the Petitioners have been prejudiced by the Magistrates not splitting up the matter into two proceedings but dealing with it in one and the same proceeding. It is not suggested that the procedure he adopted precluded any of them from adducing evidence in the case.

The third ground appears to us to have no substance either. We accordingly discharge the rule.

Rule discharged.

Limitation Act XV of 1877, secs. 7, 18 and 28, and Sch. II, Arts. 142, 144—Joint family—Separate estate—Possession, discontinuance of—Property, extinguishment of right to.

Under sec. 7 of the Limitation Act a person under disability cannot bring his suit after 3 years after the disability ceases.

Under sec. 28 of the Limitation Act the right of a person to property is extinguished at the determination of the period limited for bringing a suit for possession of it.

VASUDEVA PADHI KHADANGA GARU v. MAGUNI DEVAN BAKSHI MAHAPATRULU GARU.

This was a suit for partition, and the question involved in the case was whether the two villages in suit were joint or separate property. These villages were granted by the zemindar to Bayana Padhi, the father of the Defendant-Appellant, who died in 1858. At that time the Appellant was 7 or 8 years of age. The Respondent, the Plaintiff in this suit, was the son of one Gurunatha Padhi, the brother of Bayana Padhi, who also died in 1858. The two brothers, Bayana and Gurunatha, were members of a Hindu family joint in property.

There was nothing to show the circumstances under which the grant was made or of the manner in which the property was enjoyed or whether it was treated as joint or separate property from the date of the grant until the death of the survivor of the two brothers in 1858. But on the death of the two brothers, the widows concurred in appointing a manager and it was not denied that during the Appellant's minority it was treated as joint family property; and after he attained his majority in 1870 it continued to be so treated by the Appellant and the Respondent for several years. Subsequently a quarrel took place between the two cousins and the Appellant thereupon asserted his right to the villages as the separate property to which he was entitled as his heir and ousted the Respondent. The Respondent thereupon instituted this suit on the 11th November 1891 for the declaration of his right to and partition of the property.

Mr. Mayne for the Respondent.

LORD DAVEY.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the High Court of Madras, dated the 25th of March 1896, reversing a decree of the District Judge of Ganjam of the 17th of October 1894.

The Appellant, who is Defendant in the action, is the only son of Bayana Padhi, who died shortly before the year 1858. The Appellant was then 7 or 8 years of age. The Respondent, the Plaintiff in the action, is the first cousin of the Appellant, and is the son of Gurunatha Padhi, who died in the year 1858. The Respondent was about two years older than the Appellant. The two brothers, Bayana Padhi and Gurunatha Padhi, were members of a Hindu family, joint in property.

The question in the case is whether the two villages in suit are joint or separate property. It is admitted that these villages were granted to Bayana Padhi by the zemindar of the Chikati Taluq. The deed is not forthcoming, and the only information their Lordships have as to the grant is contained in two orders from the Collector of Ganjam to the zemindar. The 1st order is dated the 10th August 1847, and is in these words:—"I have approved of the permanent cowle you have granted to one Bayana Padhi Khadanga of Jayantipuram under sec. 15 of Regulation XXX of 1802 in respect of the forest land called Rajendrapuram attached to your taluk, fixing a Kattubadi of Rs. 45 a year, and defining the boundaries (Chekubandi). But you are informed that there should be no disputes by the Jalandhra people regarding the boundaries thereof." The other order of the Collector was dated 22nd July 1848. It states that the Collector has "under sec. 15 of Regulation 30 of 1802 approved of the gift of 840 Bbaranams of forest land which was granted to Bayana Padhi Khadanga by the late zemindar of the taluk, Sri Brundavna Chandra Rajendra Dev Garu, after fixing the Kattubadi and the boundaries thereof. You shall inform the said Khadanga that he might improve the said land and make it fruitful, and collect from him every year, commencing from the current year, the Kattubadi fixed at Rs. 50 a year." There is no evidence of the circumstances under which this grant was made, or of the manner in which the property was enjoyed or whether it was treated as joint or separate property from the date of the grant until the death of the survivor of the two brothers in the year 1858. On that event the widows of the two brothers concurred in appointing a manager of the property, and it is not disputed that during the Appellant's minority it was treated or enjoyed as joint-family property; and after he attained his majority in or about the year 1870 it continued to be so treated by the Appellant and the Respondent for several years. The Subordinate Judge fixed the date up to which that state of things lasted as the year 1880; and their Lordships assume that date for the purpose of their judgment. A quarrel took place between the two cousins, and the Appellant thereupon asserted his right to the villages as the separate property of his father to which he was entitled as his heir, and ousted the Respondent. Hence this suit, which was instituted by the Respondent on 11th November 1891. The Subordinate Judge held it to be the separate property of the Appellant; but his decree was reversed by the High Court, who held it to be joint-family property, and decreed a partition. Their Lordships find the question whether the property was the separate property of Bayana, or had been acquired and held by him in his own name for the benefit of the joint family, to be one of some difficulty, owing to the absence of any direct evidence as to the circumstances under which the grant was made, or the manner in which the property was treated during Bayana's lifetime; and they accordingly desired that the case should be argued a second time. On the second argument Counsel for the Respondent raised the question of limitation, and their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the Respondent ought to succeed on that ground. The 7th section of the Act of Limitation is in these terms: "If a person entitled to institute a suit, or make an application, be at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned a minor, or insane, or an idiot, he may institute the suit, or make the application within the same period, after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed." Then there is provision as to double and successive disabilities, and a provision for the case of the continuing of the disability up to the death of the person under disability; and the end of the section is in these terms:—"Nothing in this section applies to suits to enforce rights of pre-emption, or shall be deemed to extend for more than three years from the cessation of the disability, or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which any suit must be instituted, or application made." The effect of that section, therefore, is this,—that a person under disability may institute a suit within the same period after the disability has ceased as he would otherwise have been allowed under the schedule, but subject to a proviso that the time shall not in any case be extended for more than three years from the cessation of the disability. Illustration (b) exactly illustrates the present case. Their Lordships, for the purpose of their judgment, will make the assumption which is most favourable to the Appellant and they will assume in his favour that up to the year 1858, the date of the death of the surviving brother, it was treated as, and was, separate property of Bayana, to which the Appellant was entitled to succeed as his heir. But on that assumption the Appellant was dispossessed, or discontinued his possession of his separate property, in favour of the joint estate at least on the death of his uncle in the year 1858; and the case comes within No. 142 in the 2nd schedule; but if that be not so, the possession of the joint family was at any rate adverse to his separate estate from the same date; and it thus comes within No. 144. It is immaterial for the present purpose which article it comes under. That being so, the Appellant could not have brought an action after the expiration of three years after he attained his majority (say) 1873. Then comes in sec. 28, by which his right to the property is extinguished at the determination of the period limited for bringing a suit for possession of it. The point does not require to be expressly pleaded, as it is only evidence of the Respondent's title; but that question does not arise in this case, as it undoubtedly was a matter of controversy in the Court below, and in fact forms the subject of the third issue: Whether the Plaintiff has acquired any title by possession. The Subordinate Judge finds against the Plaintiff on that issue, but it does not appear on what grounds.

The same point is also raised in the sixth reason for appeal to the High Court, though it was unnecessary for that Court, in the view they took of the case, to express any opinion upon it. The only answer which could be made to the argument would be one founded on sec. 18, namely, that the existence of the original grant was fraudulently concealed from the Appellant. This answer is, perhaps, sufficiently pleaded by para. 3 of the defence, although there is no mention in that paragraph of fraud; but their Lordships do not think that any such case is proved with such precision as is necessary in a charge of fraud. There is, undoubtedly, some evidence that the original grant found its way into the Respondent's possession; and it is not produced by him. On the other hand, the Defendant gave evidence on his own behalf, but merely put in a copy of another document, and did not even say that he was ignorant of the original grant, or when he first discovered it, or say anything about it.

Their Lordships do not think that this is sufficient to support a charge of fraud. They are, therefore, of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed, on the ground that the Defendant's right of possession (if it ever existed) has been extinguished by limitation; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

father-in-law's family, and there is no longer any moral liability on the father-in-law to support her. There being no moral liability on the father-in-law, there is no legal liability on the person who takes his property to maintain the widowed daughter-in-law.

This was a suit for arrears of maintenance and for a declaration of the Plaintiff's right to future maintenance out of the property which the Defendant had inherited from his father. The facts were shortly these: One Buddun Chunder Sarkar, who was governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died in 1888, leaving him surviving his son, the Defendant. The Plaintiff was the widow of one Navadip, a predeceased son of Buddun. Navadip married the Plaintiff some time in 1869 or 1870 and died two years later in 1872 without issue and leaving the Plaintiff, his widow.

The Plaintiff's case was that after the death of her husband she continued to reside in her father-in-law's house and was all along maintained by him up to his death in 1888, that after his death she was supported for some two years by the Defendant, when in 1890 she was turned out of her father-in-law's house; that she then went to reside in her father's house where she remained up to the time of bringing the present suit. The Defendant, on the other hand, alleged that the Plaintiff left her father-in-law's house two years after the death of her husband, namely, in 1874, and went to reside in her father's house; that she demanded and obtained during Buddun's lifetime a Government promissory note of the value of Rs. 500 which belonged to her husband and that she thereupon ceased to be a dependent member of her father-in-law's family, and was not entitled to any maintenance from him.

Messrs. Chaudhuri, Chakravarti and S. R. Das (subsequently Messrs. Knight and S. R. Das) for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. R. Mitra, Sinha and H. D. Bose for the Defendant.

Mr. Chaudhuri (in opening for the Plaintiff).—It has been repeatedly held that it is the duty of a Hindu father-in-law to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law, and further, that the moral obligation in the father-in-law to maintain her becomes a legal obligation in the inheritor of his property, see Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondle (3). It is altogether a question of fact as to whether the Plaintiff left her father-in-law's house in this case without the intention of ever returning to it and whether she took a certain promissory note from her father-in-law belonging to her husband's estate in full satisfaction of all claims to that estate or to maintenance against her father-in-law.

Mr. Mitra.—In the Bengal School the head of the family is the owner. The widow also succeeds under certain circumstances. The Plaintiff therefore was the heiress of her husband in this case. If she left the house as we say she did, she would not be entitled to maintenance. We say that she quarrelled with her father-in-law and the sending of the pleader's letter of demand was an outrage upon his feelings. Even a son who is hostile or inimical to his father is excluded from inheritance. See Mayne on Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 553.

She is not entitled to maintenance as she did not form a member of Buddun's family. Then again she is not entitled to maintenance in money: [COURT.—Do you say that till 1874 she was entitled to maintenance?] Certainly. [COURT.—Is there any authority to show that if she is once entitled to maintenance that right can cease, or has not unchastity or immorality to be shewn?] Yes. There was no actionable claim against the father-in-law at that date. If the moral liability could not be enforced during Buddun's lifetime, that cannot ripen into a legal liability. See Golap Chandra Sastri's Hindu Law (1897), p. 242; Bhugwan Chunder Bose v. Bindoo. Bashinee Dassee (7), Rujjomoney Dassee v. Shib Chunder Mullick (8). Then the lady cannot claim from her father-in-law maintenance in the shape of money, see Macnaghten's Precedents, Case XI; Smriti Chandrika, Chap. 11, sec. 1, para. 34; Khetromoni v. Kushinath (1). If the father-in-law's obligation was a moral obligation and she left, as we say, after quarrelling with Buddun and insulting him by sending the letter of demand, there was no longer any moral obligation. See the Tagore Lectures for 1879, p. 444 [COURT.—Do you say that it is only where the father-in-law succeeds to his son's property he is bound to maintain his widow, and not where he does not inherit any property?] Yes. As my father never maintained the Plaintiff she is not entitled to be maintained by me. If the obligation is broken once I am not bound to create it. In Junki v. Nandram (2) the son was joint with the father and, whilst joint, the father died and it was therefore held that she was entitled to be maintained by the joint estate. That case does not touch me. In Adhibai v. Cursandas Nathu (9) the same thing was held. The distinguishing features in these cases are that the father-in-law inherited some property from the daughter-in-law's husband. In this case there was a complete separation when she took away everything that she was entitled to. See Mayne (6 h Ed.), p. 459; Savitribai v. Luxmibai (10). In Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondle (3), the father-in-law all along maintained the widow and his dying wishes were that she should be maintained. That distinguishes the case from the present. See also Kedar Nath Coondoo v. Hemangini Dassee (11).

SIDDESURY DASSEE v. JONARDAN SARKAR.

Here there is no allegation that she borrowed a rupee for her maintenance.

Mr. Knight in reply.—The case of Rujjomoney Dassee v. Shib Chunder Mullick (8) is rather in our favour. [COURT.—They say that after she left there was no moral obligation on the father-in-law which could ripen into a legal one.] Just so, but in Junki v. Nandram (2) it was held that there is a moral obligation to support us not only during his lifetime but even after his death, and the circumstance of our not residing in the family dwelling-house does not take away that moral obligation. See Bhuttacharjee's Hindu Law, p. 411 where all the cases are collected. (After arguing on the facts of the case).—If your Lordship does not believe either side, even then I am entitled to succeed, for the presumption would be that she still continued in the same position. [COURT—I can assist you to this extent, that in case the evidence is evenly balanced, the fact remains that her husband died in 1872 and the fact of her living away from her father-in-law's house, does not affect her right to maintenance.] In Janki v. Nandram (2), the daughter-in-law had all along resided away from her father-in-law's house. We are entitled to separate maintenance as well as to arrears, see Ram Chandra v. Sagunbai (12), Gokibai v. Lakhmidas (6) and Gunga Dye v. Shama Bibee (13).

SIDDESURY DASSEE v. JONARDAN SARKAR.

Mr. Das followed on the same side.—[COURT—Supposing I find that she left with the intention of living as a member of her father's family, would she still be entitled to maintenance?] I have found no authority expressly on the point. But I would submit that she is still so entitled. I am prepared to show that the only ground on which she can forfeit her right to maintenance is unchastity, see Shama Churn's Vyavastha Darpan (2nd Ed.), p. 319, and the case of Jadumoni Dassee v. Kshettra Mohan Shil (14). That case lays down that the grounds on which the right to maintenance may be forfeited should be restricted rather than enlarged. The principle is shortly this: If a person has property in which her husband had an interest, the widow can legally claim maintenance from him, or, in other words, the daughter-in-law can only claim maintenance from the father-in-law if the latter has taken property belonging to her husband. Following the same principle, a daughter-in-law cannot claim maintenance in the case of a Mitakshara father-in-law who has only self-acquired property and never in the case of a Bengal father-in-law because he has absolute power of alienation over his property, see Janki v. Nandram (2) where all the cases on the subject are considered. But though there is no legal liability under these circumstances, there is always a moral liability in the father-in-law, and this liability obviously does not depend upon the father-in-law having any property of his deceased son as in that case the liability would become legal, see Khetromoni Dassee v. Kashinuth (1); and the cases have gone so far as to say that this moral liability is not merely to provide for her during the lifetime of the father-in-law but even after his death, see Janki v. Nandram (2). This moral liability ripens into a legal one as against those who have taken from the father-in-law, Janki v. Nandram (2), Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondle (3). This moral liability is not dependent upon her residing in her father-in-law's house. See the case of Jadumoni v. Kshettra Mohan Shil (14), Raja Pirthee Sing v. Rani Raj Kower (4), Kasturbai v. Shivajiram (5)

SIDDESURY DASSEE v. JONARDAN SARKAR.

Gokibai v. Lakhmidas Khimji (6). In the Bombay cases she had never resided in the father-in-law's house. The fact therefore that she went to reside with her father would not deprive her of her right to maintenance. [COURT—Can you say that the lady who goes to her father's house and takes an antagonistic position to her husband's family, that even then she would be entitled to maintenance?] I cannot cite an authority expressly on that point, but the only ground on which she may be deprived of maintenance is unchastity, and the case of Judumoni v. Kshettra Mohan Shil. (14) shows that such grounds should not be enlarged. The father-in-law is not entitled to say "you must reside at my house, otherwise I shall not maintain you," Raja Pirthee Sing v. Beni Raj Kover (4). [COURT—Do you say the case of Khetromoni v. Kashinath (1) is not good law?]. No, I do not say that. But that case does not in a way go against my contention. There the suit was against the father-in-law and it was held that there was no legal liability in him inasmuch as he was not in possession of any ancestral property. [COURT—What is the extent of this moral duty? Does it pass away or still remain when she leaves his house and resides with her own father's family?] The moral obligation is merely in abeyance for the time being, since her residing away from her father-in-law's house does not deprive her of her right to maintenance.

That is, if the father-in-law was in possession of any property belonging to her deceased husband, she would be entitled to sue him for maintenance, though she may be residing away from his house, and if the obligation is merely moral, she cannot of course enforce it as against him, but she would be entitled to sue the persons taking from him upon his death. [COURT—Have you any authority for the proposition that even if she goes away and lives with her own father, then the moral duty of the father-in-law does not pass away?] I have no express authority, but the moral duty is to maintain a dependent daughter-in-law. She would not be any the less dependent because she is maintained by the charity of her father or any one else. Before you can get rid of that liability, it must be shewn that she was possessed of property out of which she could maintain herself, Gokibai v. Lakhmidas Khimji (6). It is not even sufficient to show that she has some property, it must be shewn that she has sufficient property, Sib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad (15).

HARINGTON, J.—The Plaintiff in this action, Siddesury Dassee, sues Jonardan Sarkar for arrears of maintenance and for a declaration that she is entitled to future maintenance out of the property which the Defendant has inherited from his father.

The Defendant is the son of one Buddun. Buddun died in 1888 having been the father of a son, named Navadip and the Defendant in the present suit. Navadip married the Plaintiff about the year 1869 or 1870. He survived his marriage only two years, and died in the year 1872 leaving the Plaintiff surviving him.

Under those circumstances the Plaintiff says that as the widow of Buddun's son she is entitled to maintenance from Buddun's estate in the hands of his surviving son Jonardan.

Briefly stated, the Plaintiff's case is that after the death of her husband she continued a dependent member of her father-in-law's family; that she was supported by Buddun up to his death in the year 1888; that after his death she was supported for some two years by the Defendant Jonardan Sarkar, and that in or about the year 1890 she was turned out of her father-in-law's house. She then went to her father's house and resided there up to the time of bringing the present suit.

Shortly, the Defendant's case is that the Plaintiff left her father-in-law's house two years after the death of her husband, viz., in 1874; that she demanded and obtained during Buddun's lifetime the property to which she was entitled, and that she ceased to be a dependent member of her father-in-law's family, having gone back to reside in her father's house as a member of his household.

The Plaintiff in her evidence states that after the death of her husband she resided continuously with her father-in-law or rather in her father-in-law's house until she went to her father's house, and that for one or two years after her father-in-law's death the Defendant maintained her in the family house—he did not give her any money but that he maintained her, and she goes on to describe how she was turned out and went to her father's house.

When cross-examined as to her residence she says that the longest period that she was absent from her father-in-law's house was a month, but when cross-examined further as to what happened when she obtained her property from Buddun it becomes clear that that statement is inconsistent with the story that she tells. She says that she demanded from Buddun a Government promissory note for Rs. 500 which is alleged to have been part of the property of her deceased husband, that the demand was made through a pleader, and the letter by which the demand was made has been produced. The letter is dated January 18th, 1884, and from the terms of it it is clear that at that date the lady was not residing at her father-in-law's house but was residing at her father's house. After that letter there was some further correspondence and the Government promissory note was handed over to the Plaintiff at her father's house and a receipt was given by the Plaintiff for it and the receipt bears date the 3rd of May 1884.

The lady's account is that she lived away from her father-in-law's house as long as this correspondence lasted. She says that she went back there after she got the Government security, and she also says that she went on pilgrimage as soon as she got the security. When she came back from pilgrimage it appears that she did not go to her father-in-law's house, but to her father's house and she said that she remained there two months.

These circumstances show that she must be inaccurate in stating that she resided continuously at her father-in-law's house until she went to her father's house in 1890. It is alleged by the Plaintiff that she was turned out in 1890. Any evidence that there is of turning out or ill-treatment is shadowy in the extreme. It is quite uncorroborated and if in fact she had been turned out in the year 1890 one would have expected evidence of those persons who had seen her immediately after she was turned out. One would expect evidence of remonstrances by her brother with the Defendant for turning her out, and moreover one would have expected the lady would have taken some steps on being turned out to assert her rights. This evidence is not given and I therefore think that the lady fails to establish the allegation that she was turned out of the house in 1890.

To corroborate her evidence she calls Behary Lal Biswas who is her brother and who appears to have married a daughter of Buddun. He in general terms corroborates the evidence given by the Plaintiff.

To show that the lady was in fact a resident in her father-in-law's house after the year 1874, a gentleman, named Jadu Nath Mullick, is called who professed to see the Plaintiff amongst other women from a neighbouring house. I must say as regards Jadu Nath Mullick that I am not inclined to place great reliance on his evidence. That he did see something may or may not be true, but he shows no reason why he should particularly observe the Plaintiff, and I do not think the ladies who were residing in Buddun's house would have exposed themselves to the observation of a strange gentleman in a neighbouring house.

The Defendant sought to show that the lady would not be seen in Buddun's house by Jadu because the place where the ladies are said to have been seen is invisible from the house where Jadu Mullick is said to have seen them, and a plan was produced which shows that the view of one point from the other point was obstructed.

I had very considerable doubts whether this evidence was admissible at all, but having been admitted, the evidence did not carry the case one inch further. The plan did not show where Jadu Mullick is alleged to have stood or where the ladies were alleged to have been when they were seen and in the absence of evidence locating these two spots accurately, the plan was perfectly useless to show that the line of vision from one point to another was obstructed, and moreover the plan merely represents the buildings as they at present stand, and there is some reason for thinking that that part of the building is of more recent date than 1890.

The evidence therefore with regard to the buildings may be dismissed as nothing has been proved inconsistent with the evidence of Jadu Nath Mullick, but for reasons which I have stated I am not inclined to place credence on the story that the ladies allowed themselves to be observed by Jadu Nath Mullick or that he had any opportunity of noticing the ladies.

The other evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff's case is that of the witnesses Profulla and Sadanunda Sircar. Profulla's evidence is open to observation. It deals with the period when she was residing at Simla and she says that the Plaintiff lived continuously at her father-in-law's house until Buddun's death and was never away for more than a month or two the longest.

Sadanunda gives similar evidence as to the residence of the Plaintiff. He says that she was never away more than two or three days—he would have known if she had been away for four to six months. He said there was no dispute with reference to the promissory note and ornaments. That is shortly the evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff.

On behalf of the Defendant, Pannamony Dassee gives evidence. She generally denies the Plaintiff's case and her description of what happened when the Plaintiff left is that some one came for her from her father's house to take her away. She went and Buddun allowed her to go and she has never returned. This incident she places in 1874, two years after the death of Navadip.

The Defendant, Jonardan Sarkar, is called and he gives evidence to the same effect. He is cross-examined as to his having requested the lady to come back, and he says that no request was made to her to come back after the date of the pleader's letter.

The other evidence called to support the allegation that the Plaintiff was not living in her father-in-law's house in 1874 is that of Chuckerbutty who was priest to Buddun and Benoy Kristo Sircar.

As to these witnesses Mr. Knight pointed out with considerable force that they only came here to prove a negative. If they confined themselves to the statement that she was not in the house, no amount of cross-examination would make them say that she was, and it was pointed out that Chuckerbutty, the priest, has an interest in supporting the Defendant's case, and Madan Mohun Sircar, is in respect of his widowed daughter-in-law, in precisely the same position that Jonardan was as to the Plaintiff at the time the suit was brought against him.

That shortly is the evidence called on both sides.

I pass over the evidence of the witnesses called for the purpose of enabling secondary evidence to be given of the letters, the originals of which are lost.

That being the oral testimony, it becomes important to see what light is thrown on the correspondence.

It is clear to my mind when the letter of January 1884 was written that the Plaintiff was not an inmate of her father-in-law's house. The reply in 1884 does not dispute the Plaintiff's right of the promissory note which she demanded. It merely intimates that she has got possession of the ornaments. No evidence is given of any letter in which the Plaintiff's right for the note was disputed, and eventually the correspondence closed with the handing over of the note and the giving of the receipt of May 3rd, 1884.

The conclusion that I come to is that this lady left the house of Buddun before 1884, and that she was continuously absent from Buddun's house for that year. None of the witnesses called on behalf of the Plaintiff admit this breach in her residence. I think what really happened was that she did not reside in her father-in-law's house until some period previous to the year 1884. Probably the evidence which puts her departure at 1874 is true. I think before 1884 she ceased to reside in her father-in-law's house, and in fact that she never returned to reside there again. She takes no proceedings till the institution of the present suit which was begun by a formal petition to me in forma pauperis in December 1897, and that delay in suing has not been explained. The excuse is that she had no money, but her answer to that excuse in the present suit is that she is suing in forma pauperis. The fact is, I believe, that she went to her father's house without having been turned out and without any quarrel with her father-in-law's family with the intention of living again as a member of her father's household.

Is she entitled to recover maintenance from her father-in-law?

There is plenty of authority for the proposition that it is the duty of the father-in-law to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law.

This obligation is legally enforceable where the father-in-law has by survivorship obtained property in which his son had a vested interest—as for example where there is ancestral property in a family governed by Mitakshara law and the father gains by survivorship the interest which his son had—in the ancestral property.

But where there is no ancestral property or where the father on the death of his son does not become entitled to any interest or property which the son had, the obligation to maintain the son's widow is merely a moral one, and cannot be enforced in a Court of law.

The authority for these propositions is to be found in the case of Khetromoni Dassee v. Kashinath (1), but in that case several of the Judges leave open the question whether a dependent widowed daughter-in-law is not legally entitled to receive necessary subsistence in the house of the head of her husband's family.

In the present case the Plaintiff is not settling up a claim to be maintained in her father-in-law's house: so the question left open by some of the Judges in Khetromoni Dassee v. Kashinath (1) need not be considered. She is here claiming a monthly allowance: and Khetromoni's case is an authority for stating that she would not have been legally entitled to obtain such allowance from Buddun.

But there is another proposition on which the Plaintiff relies—namely, that what is a moral obligation in the father becomes a legal obligation in the inheritor of his property. This rests on the principle that an heir does not take property for his own benefit but for the spiritual benefit of his predecessor. This principle is illustrated and affirmed in the cases of Janki v. Nandram (2), and Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondle (3). If therefore it be established that Buddun was morally bound to maintain the Plaintiff—then that moral obligation on Buddun would become in his heir Jonardan an obligation enforceable at law.

There are authorities to show that the right to be maintained where it exists is not necessarily forfeited by a widow who resides away from her father-in-law's house as long as she remains chaste. This has been affirmed by the Privy Council in Raja Pithae Sing v. Ranj Kower (4) and in two cases in the

SIDDESURY DASSEE v. JONARDAN SARKAR.

Bombay High Court, Kasturbai v. Shivaji-ram (5) and Gokibai v. Lakshmidas Khimji (6).

If therefore the daughter-in-law remains a dependent member of her husband's family, it appears to be law that the mere fact of residence elsewhere will not disentitle her to maintenance.

The real question therefore in the present case is, Did the Plaintiff remain a dependent member of her husband's family? If she severed herself from her husband's family, then there could have been no duty on Buddun to maintain her.

I find in fact the Plaintiff left Buddun's house during his lifetime to go and reside in her father's house of her own free will; she made no claim for maintenance as against Buddun; she did claim indeed a promissory note for Rs. 500 and that was given her. She made a claim as against Buddun for property to which she considered herself entitled, and the claim was allowed at least so far as the Government promissory note was concerned; and as to the jewels it was either abandoned or was groundless. But the fact remains that she took away her productive property. There is no evidence that she ever claimed as against Buddun or as against the present Defendant Jonardan any maintenance. In view of her readiness to assert her right to the Rs. 500 note through a pleader one would have expected, that had she intended to remain as a dependent member of her husband's family, she would have asserted a claim to maintenance through the same channel, but there was no demand until 1897 when the demand immediately preceding the present suit was made.

The inference I draw from these facts is that when the Plaintiff left Buddun's house she did so with the intention of residing permanently at her father's house as a member of his household and that when she demanded from her father-in-law the Rs. 500 note, she intended to obtain, and did obtain, all the money to which she considered herself entitled—and that she intended to sever, and did sever, herself from her deceased husband's family.

It has been pointed out in the case of Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pois Mondle (3) that each case must be determined on its own particular merits—that in each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, means and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance the late proprietor was, according to the law, morally bound to maintain the Plaintiff.

Now under the circumstances of this case I do not think Buddun was morally liable to support this lady, because she was no longer a dependent member of Buddun's family. She had gone to her own family, she had taken with her what property she was entitled to through her husband. She was being maintained as a member of her father's family.

This being the state of things which existed, I do not think it could be said that Buddun was morally bound to maintain her, and if Buddun was not morally bound, it follows that the Defendant is not legally bound.

The result, therefore, will be that the present action must be dismissed with Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244—Separate suit to set aside decree and sale—Jurisdiction—Fraud—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 44.

C., and should be brought in the Court in the jurisdiction of which the property is situated, although the decree sought to be set aside was passed by a Court in a different district.*

It may not be competent to the Court to set aside the decree passed by another Court as fraudulent, but it is competent to the Court to investigate the question as to the character and validity of the decree for the purpose of giving relief to the Plaintiff in respect of the land which he lost by reason of the sale.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th of January 1900, against the order of Babu Jogendra Chandra Moulik, Additional Sub-Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 17th of November 1899, reversing the order of Babu Satkarl Haldar, Munsif of Katwa, dated 13th March 1899, and remanding the case to him for trial on the merits.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The facts, which led up to the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, are shortly these:

The Defendant brought a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Krishnagar (in Nadia) for a certain sum of money against the Plaintiff, and obtained an ex parte decree. That decree was transferred for execution to the Munsif's Court at Katwa, and in execution taken out against the Plaintiff a certain property belonging to him was brought to sale, and was purchased by the Defendant himself. Subsequently, he (the Defendant) obtained possession of the said property. Thereupon the present suit was brought by the Plaintiff to have it declared that the ex parte decree, and the sale in execution thereof, were fraudulent and to obtain possession of the property in question. The suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court at Katwa (in Burdwan), that being the Court in which the execution proceedings, including the sale, took place, and within whose jurisdiction the property in suit is situate.

The Munsif, upon an objection being raised in the defence by the Defendant, held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, so far as it seeks to set aside the decree passed by the Small Cause Court at Krishnagar, and that a regular suit for setting aside the sale was barred by sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the Plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge at Burdwan has come to a different conclusion, relying upon the case of Srimati Nistarini Das v. Rai Nanda Lal Bose (4). He has held that, inasmuch as the property which was sold in execution is situate within the jurisdiction of the Katwa Munsif, and a suit to set aside the sale must be brought in that Munsif, the suit was properly brought there, and that the decree which the Defendant obtained in the Court of Small Causes at Krishnagar might be treated as a nullity for the purpose of determining the questions at issue between the parties, if that decree was obtained by fraud. He accordingly set aside the judgment of the Munsif and remanded the case to him for trial on the merits.

Against this judgment, the Defendant has appealed to this Court, and the learned vakil on his behalf has contended that the view adopted by the Subordinate Judge is erroneous, and that inasmuch as the Plaintiff was not in a position to claim any relief unless and until the decree obtained by the Defendant in the Court at Krishnagar was set aside, the Munsif of Katwa had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that it should have been brought in the Krishnagar Court.

The question raised before us is not altogether free from difficulty. In the case of Mewa Lal Thakoor v. Bhujhun Jha (1) it was held that when a decree is sought to be set aside upon the ground of fraud, the proper course is to apply for a rehearing, or a review, to the Court which made the decree. But in more recent cases, it has been held that that is not the only course, but that a separate suit lies to have the decree set aside: Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi (2) and Pran Nath Roy v. Mohesh Chandra Moitra (3). The decree in this case was passed by a Judge of the Small Cause Court, and a separate suit, such as this is, to have the said decree set aside would not lie in that Court, but would have to be brought in the ordinary Civil Court, and if the suit were confined to the decree being set aside, we should have, perhaps, been disposed to hold that it should have been instituted in the Krishnagar Civil Court. But in this case different considerations arise. The suit is not only to set aside the decree, but also the sale which took place in execution in the Katwa Munsifi and also to recover possession of the property sold. In the cases to which we have already referred, Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi (2) and Pran Nath Roy v. Mohesh Chandra Moitra (3), it has been also held that where the decree and the sale held in execution are impeached upon the ground of fraud, a separate suit would lie to have both the transactions set aside, notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 244 of the Code.

Indeed, as it seems to us, in such a case, two separate suits need not be brought, but the entire relief, to which the Plaintiff is entitled, might be obtained in one and the same suit; and it is obvious that in such a case, the suit ought to be brought in the Court which can give the Plaintiff complete relief. If therefore a suit should be brought in one and the same Court for the purpose of obtaining all the reliefs that the Plaintiff is entitled to, the reliefs asked for in the present case being (1) to have it declared that the decree was fraudulent; (2) to have it also declared that the sale held in execution of such decree was fraudulent; and (3) to recover possession of the land sold, which is situate within the Katwa Munsifi, it seems to us that in order to enable the Plaintiff to obtain effectual relief in one and the same suit, it was rightly brought in the Munsifi's Court at Katwa.

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 546 (1897).

In the case of Srimati Nistarini Dasi v. Rui Nanda Lal Bose (4) referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, where the main object of the suit, brought in the Original Side of this Court, was for administration of the estate, and for a construction of the Will, left by the Plaintiff's husband and where the Plaintiff also asked that certain leases in respect of lands in the 24-Pergunnahs executed by the Defendant, the executor, upon the authority of an arbitration decree that had been passed in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, might be set aside, one of the questions raised was, whether the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, the object of which was, among other matters, to have it declared that the decree obtained in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs was fraudulent. Mr. Justice Stanley, on a review of the whole of the authorities bearing upon the question, expressed himself as follows:—

"If the Plaintiff's case be true, I am of opinion that a decree so obtained cannot stand, and that this Court has jurisdiction, if not to set it aside, at least to treat it as a nullity and render its effect nugatory."

And this seems to be in accordance with the provisions of sec. 44 of the Evidence Act which runs as follows:—

Any party to a suit or other proceeding may show that any judgment or order or decree which is relevant under sec. 40, 41 or 42, and which has been proved by the adverse party was delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it, or was obtained by fraud or collusion.

We think that in the present suit, the

KEDAR NATH MUKERJEE v. PROSONNA KUMAR CHATTERJEE.

Court at Katwa is competent to go into the question raised between the parties whether the decree obtained in the Court of Small Causes at Krishnagar was properly or fraudulently obtained, and if it be found that the decree was fraudulently obtained, it might well treat it as a nullity, and not binding upon the Plaintiff, and then give the Plaintiff such relief as he might justly be entitled to.

It may not be competent to the Munsif of Katwa to set aside the decree passed by the Small Cause Court of Krishnagar as fraudulent; but we are disposed to think that it is competent to him to investigate the question as to the character and validity of the decree, for the purpose of giving relief to the Plaintiff, such as he may be entitled to, in respect to the land which he has lost by reason of the sale held in execution of that decree.

For these reasons we think that there is no just reason to interfere with the judgment of the Court below in this case. The result is that this appeal is dismissed. We make no order as to costs in this case.

APPLICATION NOS. 21 AND 22 OF 1900.

PRATT, J.	S. M. BIBI JARAO
BRETT, J.	KUMARI, Appellant,
	v.
1900.	GOPI CHAND BOTHRA
12, November.	and ors., Respondents.

Execution, stay of—Appeal to Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 603, 608.

An application for stay of execution under sec. 608, C. P. C., cannot be granted before an appeal to the Privy Council is finally admitted under sec. 603, C. P. C.

This was a rule issued upon the opposite party, on the application of the Petitioner-Appellant, to shew cause why the execution of the decree appealed against should not be stayed pending the disposal of the appeal to Her Majesty in Council on sufficient security being taken from the Petitioner for the due performance of the decree appealed against or of any order which Her Majesty in Council may make on the appeal. In the meantime and pending the disposal of the rule the sale of the property under attachment in execution of the decree appealed against was stayed.

The Advocate-General and Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to shew cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

A rule was granted by us on the 8th instant on a misapprehension of the facts, and the Advocate-General who appears for the Petitioner intimates that the rule in question will not serve the required purpose, and at his request we direct that it be cancelled. The Petitioner was Plaintiff in a suit which was dismissed. Her appeal to this Court was dismissed with costs.

On the 4th September last on the application of the Petitioner this Court granted a certificate that the case was a fit one for 'appeal to Her Majesty in Council. The security for costs has however not been completed, and the appeal has not yet been admitted under sec. 603, C. P. C.

Now we are asked to give a direction under sec. 608, cl. (d), respecting the subject-matter of the appeal, viz., to call upon the Respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from executing a certain decree pending the disposal of the appeal, and to issue an ad interim injunction to that effect.

Our attention has been drawn to the case of Dame Janbai v. Sale Mahomed Jafferbhoy (1) where it was held that the Court is empowered to order stay of execution of its decree although the appeal to the Privy Council had not been admitted but only a petition presented for the purpose. With due deference to the learned Judges who expressed that opinion, we think from the express terms of sec. 608, C. P. C., that the intention of the Legislature was to confer on the High Court the powers therein indicated only in the event of the appeal having been already admitted. We find upon enquiry that this Court has uniformly refused to grant any application under sec. 608 before an appeal was finally admitted, and we are bound to follow this practice, which appears to us consistent with law and reason. The Appellant is not without remedy, for though she may now be too late to prevent the sale of the property against which execution has been taken out, she would, by depositing the necessary security in cash or its equivalent, have ample time to obtain an order prohibiting the confirmation of the sale.

The application cannot be now granted, but it may be renewed so soon as the appeal has been finally admitted.

Application refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Dispute as to land—Specification of land, if and when necessary—Civil Court decree for possession—Decree, effect of—Magistrate, duty of—Procedure.

Although in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, the disputed land should be thoroughly ascertained by both parties, yet where the parties were not at issue upon the question as to what the disputed lands were and neither the Court nor any body concerned in the dispute was under any misapprehension as to that point, there is no ground for holding that the Magistrate who tried the case had no jurisdiction to make an order under the section for want of proper specification of the lands in dispute.

The duty of a Criminal Court in a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, where there is a decree of a Civil Court for possession in respect of the disputed land, is to find which party held such Civil Court decree, and then to maintain that party in possession; it is not necessary that such decree should be a decree for possession as between the parties to the proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code. 1

S. GORDON SIMS v. JOHURRY LAL.

Stevens, JJ., against an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Beguseral, dated the 26th of September 1900.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

A proceeding was instituted under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, upon a police-report of a dispute between the parties likely to cause a breach of the peace. The dispute was in respect of a certain plot of land of about 80 bighas area near the Indigo factory of Samstipur belonging to Mr. S. Gordon Sims, 1st party. At the trial, evidence of actual possession was adduced by both parties which consisted mainly of evidence of delivery of possession by Civil Court peons. The 1st party also claimed that possession was shewn by the fact of indigo growing on the disputed land and the 2nd party claimed that his possession was shewn by the fact that the land was being cultivated at the time of the order by his *raiya*s who held registered kabuliyats from him. The Sub-divisional Magistrate of Beguseral, in making an order under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, maintaining the 2nd party, Johurry Lal, in possession observed as follows :—

As however it appeared at an early stage of the case that the principal claim of both parties was based on delivery of possession by order of the Civil Court, it became necessary to stay the taking of evidence in the usual way and to consider whether either party, and if so which, was possessed of an order of a competent Court giving him possession of the land in dispute. If there is such an order made out in favour of one of the parties, it becomes the duty of the Criminal Court to uphold it, and to declare possession accordingly. In the case of Daulat Kcer v. Ramessuri Kcer (1) it was ruled that "it is the duty of the Magistrate when the right to possession has been declared within a time not remote from his taking proceedings under sec. 145 to maintain any order which has been passed by any competent Court, and therefore to take proceedings which necessarily must have the effect of modifying or even cancelling such orders is to assume a jurisdiction which the law does not contemplate."

In this case both parties claim to have such orders and it therefore became necessary to examine the nature and validity of the respective claims. On behalf of the 1st party there was filed an order of the Sub-Judge of Monghyr giving possession of an 18 gundas share in Mouzah Sandalpur, Towji No. 2537, and Sudder Jama Rs. 142 to one Mahomed Hashim. This is dated 27th April 1900 and the peon's receipt of delivery of possession is dated 18th May 1900. Another paper is filed, whereby Mahomed Hashim, in order to obtain the funds necessary for the pursuance of his suit for possession, hands over to Mr. Sims his share in Mouzah Sandalpur. This is dated 1st April 1897 and appears to be the basis of Mr. Sims' present claim to possession. No boundaries are stated in these documents or anything to show whether it was a share in an individual estate or a definite portion of land after batwara that was handed over, and without any knowledge of the practice of the Civil Courts in such matters, it certainly seems as though the 1st party had suffered by this ambiguity in the form of the Civil Court order. The 2nd party also filed several documents. Principal is an order of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for delivery of the share of Musst. Hafizunnessa to the 2nd party of her share in Mouzah Sandalpur. It is stated in this order that the towji number was 2537 before partition and since partition it is 2947. The date and receipt of delivery of possession is dated 29th January 1900 and 7th February 1900 respectively. It therefore became necessary to discover whether the portion of land under dispute bears any towji number of its own, and if so whether that number is identical with that of the share purchased by Johurry Lal. A Sub-Deputy Magistrate was deputed to make enquiry. He reported that the disputed area bears Towji No. 2947. I have therefore no option but to maintain this order of the Civil Court and to declare that the 2nd party is in possession of the land until evicted by due course of law and I direct the first party to abstain from interference with that possession until such eviction.

(1) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 625 (1899).

S. GORDON SIMS v. JOHURRY LAL.

Against that order, the Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained the present rule.

Mr. Abdur Rahim, with him Babu Nagendra Nath Mitter, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy, with him Babu Dasarathi Sanyal, for the Opposite Party.

The order complained of in this case is an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Beguseral maintaining the opposite or second party in possession of certain land which he finds that party held under a Civil Court decree for possession. This order is taken exception to on two grounds. It is contended in the first place that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to institute these proceedings at all inasmuch as, in the initiation of these proceedings, no specification of boundaries of the disputed land was made and, that being so, it is contended that the Court ought not to have entertained the present proceedings for ascertaining which party was in possession. Now, having regard to the terms of sec. 145, C. Cr. P., it seems to us that the main question which the Criminal Court has to determine is as to the possession of the disputed land. There must be a dispute and a dispute about land, and there can be no question that what is required is that the disputed land should be thoroughly well ascertained by both parties. Our attention has been directed to the proceedings in this case and to the report of the Magistrate deputed to inquire into the subject-matter of dispute, and we think it is abundantly clear that, from first to last, the parties were not at issue upon the question as to what the disputed lands were and not only were the parties not at issue on this matter but neither the Court nor anybody concerned in this dispute was under any misapprehension as to this point. The real question in dispute was which party held a Civil Court decree for possession of this land. That was the point to which the attention of the Deputy Magistrate was directed, and he finds that it was the second party which held the Civil Court decree for possession and the effect of his order is to maintain that party in possession of the land. It seems to us, therefore, that there is no ground for interfering with the proceedings so far as the first ground of objection is concerned.

The next objection is that there has been no finding of actual possession as regards either party. That possibly is the case, but it seems to us that the course which the Deputy Magistrate has taken is the correct one, and it is the course which is laid down by this Court in the case of Doulat Koor v. Ramessuri Koori (1). The duty of the Court was, under the circumstances of the dispute between the parties, to see which party it was that held the Civil Court decree for possession in respect of the disputed land and, having come to the conclusion that it was the second party which held such decree, the lower Court has maintained that party in possession. We think, having regard to the ruling just olited that that was the proper course for the Court below to adopt. It is said that the decree ought to have been a decree for possession as between the parties, but we are aware of no ruling which prescribes that the Magistrate is to maintain a party in possession in accordance with the decree of the Civil Court, only when the opposite party is a party to that decree. If the duty of the Magistrate were confined in that way, the result might be to bring the Civil Court into conflict with the Criminal Court. As a matter of fact, the Deputy Magistrate has confirmed that party in possession which the Civil Court has said was entitled to possession and, that being so, we think there is no reason for our interfering on this ground either. The rule is, therefore, discharged.

Held—That the order of the Magistrate based upon the report of the jury, was neither reasonable nor legal, and must be set aside.

This was a reference made by B. K. Mullick, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tippera, on the 20th April 1901, under sec. 438, Cr. P. Code, against the order of J. Vas, Esq., Assistant Magistrate of Chandpore, dated the 28th February 1901.

The facts of the case appear from the letter of reference which was as follows:—

"By an order, dated the 17th of January, the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Chandpore, in consequence of a police-report, directed a number of prostitutes to remove their 'trade and occupation' from the slopes and neighbourhood of the Bagadi Road, which, I understand, is within Chandpore town. At the request of the prostitutes a jury was appointed, three members being nominated by the Sub-divisional Magistrate and two by the prostitutes themselves. On the 28th of February the jury submitted their report, and on the same day the Sub-divisional Magistrate made his order of the 17th of January absolute under sec. 139, Cr. P. Code. Against this order the prostitutes, the Petitioners, invoke the revisional powers of the Hon'ble High Court.

"It is recommended that the whole order be set aside, being bad in law,

BASANTA BAISTABI v. THE EMPEROR.

"The Sub-divisional Officer says that the houses of the prostitutes on the roadside, interfere with the 'physical comfort' of the public. Three members of the jury report, as the result of their enquiries, that the prostitutes sometimes quarrel in their houses under the influence of liquor and sometimes sit on the road, and suggest that they should be directed to mend their habits; the other two members deny that there is any cause for removing them at all. The report of the majority on which the Sub-divisional Magistrate has based his final order does not recommend that the Petitioners should remove their houses, and I think the order of the Magistrate was neither reasonable nor proper nor legal. If the prostitutes commit affrays on the public road or disturb people at night by their songs, they can be dealt with under the Penal Code. Ordering them to remove their houses does not appear to me to be a reasonable or legal remedy."

No one appeared on this reference.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Assistant Magistrate of Chandpore on a police-report issued an order upon a number of prostitutes to remove their trade and occupation from the slopes and neighbourhood of a certain road. This was on the 17th of January 1901. On the 1st February he issued "a conditional order" and the prostitutes appearing in a body to show cause, a jury was appointed. After the report of the jury the order was made absolute by the Assistant Magistrate. The Sessions Judge has reported this order to this Court as bad in law. There appears no report of the jury on the record. This should have been sent up. But we gather from the Sessions Judge's report that there was a division of opinion among the members of the jury and that the majority did not recommend that the prostitutes should remove their houses.

The learned Sessions Judge very rightly points out that the mere existence of the houses of the prostitutes by the roadside and the fact that they ply their trade in those houses cannot affect the "physical comfort" of the passers-by. If offences are committed they can be prosecuted and punished: and we agree with the Sessions Judge in holding that the order of the Magistrate is neither reasonable nor legal. We accordingly set it aside.

Order set aside.

sec. 290, I. P. C., and had no opportunity to give evidence in rebuttal thereof, the conviction could not stand.

This was a rule issued on the 29th of November 1900, against the order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Nattore, dated the 20th of August 1900, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahye on the 3rd of November 1900.

The Petitioner who was the accused was called upon to answer a charge under sec. 447, I. P. C., of having committed criminal trespass. The accused extended the steps of his premises and verandah etc., by brick building over a drain running along a road controlled by the District Board; some time previously he had made the drain pucca in front of his premises. He asserted his landlord's title to the soil of the drain and claimed that by making the drain pucca he had possession to the exclusion of the local authority, so that there was no trespass. The first Court convicted him under secs. 447 and 290, I. P. C., and sentenced him to one day's imprisonment and Rs. 20 fine. The accused was never called upon to meet the charge under sec. 290. The Sessions Judge was of opinion that it was doubtful whether the act of the accused came within the definition of criminal trespass but that sec. 290, I. P. C., was wide enough to cover the case and he therefore dismissed the appeal.

Sir Griffith Evans, with him Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Joy Gopal Ghosha, for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner in this case was called upon to answer a charge under sec. 447, I. P. C., of having committed criminal trespass on what was alleged to be land in the possession of the District Board. The Sub-divisional Officer convicted him under secs. 447 and 290, I. P. C. As has been already noticed, the Petitioner was never called upon to meet the charge under sec. 290 the ingredients of which are totally different from those constituting an offence under sec. 447 nor had he any opportunity to give evidence in rebuttal of the case alleged against him under sec. 290. The Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that it is hardly possible to maintain the conviction of the Petitioner under sec. 447, but he is of opinion that sec. 290 is "wide enough to cover the act." He does not seem to have noticed that the Petitioner had no opportunity to 'rebut the allegations made against him under sec. 290, I. P. C. This rule was issued upon the District Magistrate calling upon him to shew cause why the conviction of, and sentence passed upon, the Petitioner should not be set aside on that ground. We think, having regard to the matters to which we have referred, that the rule ought to be made absolute. We accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences and send the case back to the Sub-divisional Officer to be tried under sec. 290 giving the Petitioner an opportunity to meet the charge laid against him under that section. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

MOULVI MUHAMMAD ABDUL MAJID v. MUSSUMAT FATIMA BIBI (1) and TOOLSHI PERSHAD SINGH v. RAJAH RAM NARAIN SINGH (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Blennerhasset, the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, who had reversed, on second appeal, the decisions of two lower Courts in Oudh, that of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli and also of the District Judge of Rai Bareli.

The question involved in this suit was whether the Appellant was entitled to the declaration she sought that the right to receive Rs. 70 per month which Chhedu Khan, the Respondent's father, had obtained a decree for, had ceased at his death.

Plaintiff is the grand-daughter of one Abdul Hakim Khan to whom one moiety of the Amanwan Talukdari estate belonged. Her interest was one-fourth in that estate. The other Defendant to the suit was Mahommad Said Khan, the talukdar of the 12 annas portion; he admitted Defendant-Respondent's right to receive the said allowance. Abdul Hakim Khan was the brother of Chhedu Khan, and uncle of the Respondent.

Chhedu Khan died on 20th December 1889, and the Respondent had since received the said annuity and was in receipt of it when this suit was instituted.

The ownership of the whole estate Amanwan before the eight-anna share of it came to Abdul Hakim Khan, was with one Alladad Khan; he had two daughters, one of whom married Abdul Hakim Khan, and the other one married Saadat Khan, and these two sons-in-law became, in right of their wives, the owners of one moiety each of the estate.

During the rebellion these two brothers were in confinement, when by means of the exertions of Chhedu Khan with the rebel Government, they were released. They had been taken prisoners by one Raja Jagpal Singh, the talukdar of Tiloi.

By way of return for such services, on the 31st January 1858 (15th Janadi-us-Sani 1274 Hijri), Abdul Hakim Khan executed an agreement which covenanted that in consideration of the services rendered, “I shall have no objection to the giving of my brother's half share in the estate, when I get into possession of the estate, rather, at the time of the execution of the lease, I, the declarant, shall myself get the name of the said brother entered therein conjointly with my own."

In addition to the above agreement, there was a special contract made before Major Orr, Deputy Commissioner, attested by him, and signed by Abdul Hakim Khan and Saadat Khan, they stipulating that the names of Chhedu Khan brother of Abdul Hakim Khan, and of one Shujaat Khan, brother of Saadat Khan, should be entered in the Khewat.

Considerable litigation took place between Chhedu Khan and his brother Abdul Hakim Khan, in 1860, 1863 and 1868, Chhedu Khan claiming a moiety of Abdul Hakim Khan's share for himself and his heirs for ever.

On the 5th August 1863 Major Macandrew, the Deputy Commissioner, decreed to Chhedu Khan Rs. 70 per month from the date Abdul Hakim Khan entered into possession of the Amanwan estate chargeable against the Defendant's share.

Abdul Hakim Khan appealed to the Commissioner, Colonel Barrow. He referred the matter to arbitrators; certain talukdars met by consent of parties and addressed the following award to Col. Barrow.

"Under your orders this case was committed to us for disposal. Accordingly we having summoned both the parties, and enquired into the case, took from them a deed of agreement to abide by our award. After having taken the deed of agreement, we decide as follows:—

"That from 1271 F. Abdul Hakim should always pay to Chhedu Khan Rs. 70 per mensem, and that the latter should give up his claim in respect of previous years, and should realise from Abdul Hakim Khan Rs. 70 every month.

"Parties being present, our decision stated above was read over to them. Chhedu Khan accepted it but Abdul Hakim Khan did not.

"The arbitration award, together with the deed of agreement, is submitted to you for orders.

"Moreover (we hold) that Chhedu Khan should always remain obedient to Abdul Hakim Khan."

Thereupon Col. Barrow passed the following order:—

"In every way Abdul Hakim's obligation to provide for his brother is proved, and it has been likewise acknowledged by public opinion, for a former punchayet awarded, in September 1859, that he should pay Rs. 100 per annum. They did not consider the deed marked B a valid one, but still they decreed the money payment. Mr. Capper in the Revenue Court and Colonel Macandrew in the Civil Court have decreed Rs. 70 per mensem as the sum that should be paid monthly by Abdul Hakim to Chhedu Khan, and now these talukdars without the remotest interest in the matter have fixed on the same amount. They have remitted the arrears, and all things considered, I do not conceive a better decision can be come to. I uphold then the decision of the lower Court awarding Rs. 70 (seventy rupees) a month to Chhedu Khan to be paid by Abdul Hakim, but reverse so much of the decree as awards arrears of instalments."

Such allowance having been continued as aforesaid to Chhedu Khan's son, the present suit was instituted by the Appellant. She succeeded in two Courts, but ultimately her suit was dismissed by the said Judicial Commissioner, and she now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Degruyther for the Appellant relied on the arbitration award, urging that the right to receive payment was limited to the life of Chhedu Khan and pointed to various misstatements in the Judicial Commissioner's judgment. He referred to Moulvi Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Massumat Fatima Bibi (1) and to Toolshi Pershad Singh v. Rajah Ram Narain Singh (2).

Mr. C. W. Arathoon first raised a preliminary objection to the appeal, urging that as the Appellant's right to the annuity was to one-fourth of the sum of Rs. 70 a month, the Judicial Commissioner under sec. 596 could not give leave to appeal, the amount in appeal between the parties to the suit being under the appealable value.

LORD LINDLEY.—But the decision would govern the whole annuity.

Mr. Arathoon.—The Appellant is not interested in the Respondent's right to get the three-fourth from her co-sharer owning the three quarters of the taluk, who moreover has admitted Respondent's right. Chhedu Khan's claim against Abdul Hakim Khan was to half the estate and a claim based on a contract, not a maintenance claim granted out of favour. The obligation Col. Barrow referred to was a legal obligation. Mr. Arathoon referred to the earlier proceedings.

Mr. Degruyther was not called on to reply.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—The question in this appeal is the construction of an award made on the 11th December 1863 in the proceedings which followed the institution of a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Rai Bareli by Chhedu Khan against Abdul Hakim Khan. The facts which led to it are these: Taluk Amanwan was formerly the property of Alladad Khan. He had two daughters who married Abdul Hakim Khan and Saadat Khan and after the re-annexation of Oudh this estate was settled with the husbands of these ladies and a sanad was granted to them. Chhedu Khan and Abdul Hakim were brothers and on the 13th December 1859 Chhedu instituted a suit in a Revenue Court against Abdul Hakim for a quarter share of the taluk as in accordance with an agreement with Abdul Hakim and Saadat said to be embodied in the proceedings, dated 4th June 1858, of the Court of Captain Orr, late Deputy Commissioner of the District of Rai Bareli. These proceedings are not in the record of this appeal, but there is in it an agreement, dated 31st January 1858, by which Abdul Hakim after stating that his brother Chhedu Khan by instituting the proceedings got his brother Saadat and himself released from prison said "I hereby declare and commit it to writing that I shall never and on no account be on bad terms with the said brother and shall have no objection to the giving of my brother's half share in the estate when I get possession of the estate, rather at the time of the execution of the lease." The suit was dismissed on the 13th October 1860 on the ground that the claim was not cognizable by a Revenue Court, Chhedu being told that he was at liberty to have recourse to the Civil Court for damages incurred from time to time on account of Abdul Hakim's breach of promise.

Thereupon Chhedu Khan brought a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Rai Bareli against Abdul Hakim claiming Rs. 70 a month from the 15th September 1860 "compensation for breach of contract" in not giving him a share of the taluk as promised in the agreement and the Deputy Commissioner made a decree for him for "Rs. 70 per mensem from the date that Defendant entered into possession of his share of the taluk Amanwan chargeable against Defendant's share." Abdul Hakim appealed to Colonel Barrow, the Commissioner at Lucknow, who appears to have doubted if Chhedu could recover any damages. In his judgment (Rec. p. 33) he says "the document A (the agreement) is no specific contract, for no amount is mentioned in it, but it is a clear expression of Appellant's determination to do something for his brother (Respondent) but the allusions here are also to land and not to cash." The Commissioner followed this by saying that the case was susceptible of adjustment out of Court. After the judgment was delivered the parties being present agreed to refer to three native gentlemen who were named the decision as to the amount that should be paid by Abdul Hakim to Chhedu Khan. The award was made on the same day (11th December 1863) and is as follows: "That from 1271 Fasli (1864) Abdul Hakim shall always pay to Chhedu Khan Rs. 70 per mensem, and that the latter should give up his claim in respect of previous years and should realise from Abdul Hakim Khan Rs. 70 every month. Parties being present, our decision stated above was read over to them, Chhedu accepted it but Abdul Hakim Khan did not. This arbitration award together with deed of agreement is submitted to you (the Commissioner) for orders. Moreover (we hold) that Chhedu Khan should always remain obedient to Abdul Hakim Khan." Thereupon the Commissioner upheld the decision of the Deputy Commissioner awarding Rs. 70 a month to Chhedu Khan to be paid by Abdul Hakim but reversed so much of the decree as awarded arrears of instalments.

Chhedu Khan has died, and the question in this appeal is whether the Respondent who is his son is entitled to the Rs. 70 per month, a suit having been brought by the Appellant, the grand-daughter of Abdul Hakim, for a decree declaring that the right to receive it ceased at the death of Chhedu Khan, the payment of it having continued to be made to the Respondent by the lambardar of the estate. The Subordinate Judge who first heard the suit held that the agreement was purely and simply a grant to Chhedu personally and not to his heirs and made the decree prayed for. On an appeal to the District Judge of Rai Bareli he held the same and referred to the sentence in the award that Chhedu was to continue to obey his brother as being a personal obligation. He dismissed the appeal and there was then a further appeal to the Judicial Commissioner who reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The reasons which he has given in his judgment for this decision are unsatisfactory. He begins by saying that the District Judge had based his judgment almost entirely on the interpretation of the word hamesha (always or for ever) and that there are several circumstances which the Court does not appear to have considered, and it has held that Chhedu Khan had a valid agreement in his favour which would have entitled him to claim half the estate. The District Judge did not hold this, on the contrary he says in his judgment that an agreement was said to have been executed admitting Chhedu Khan to share in a moiety of the taluk, that the Rent Courts rejected the agreement as not genuine, the Civil Court of first instance accepted it, but the Appellate Court doubted its genuineness and held it to be invalid. The Judicial Commissioner then says that, construing the award together with the circumstances he refers to it, appears to him that the word hamesha used therein was intended to grant an estate of inheritance and sets aside the decree of the District Judge and dismisses the suit. Now it has been held by this Board that the words "always and for ever" in a Will do not per se extend the interest given beyond the life of the person who is named (Moulvi Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Mussumat Fatima [1]). They are not inconsistent with limiting the interest given but the circumstances under which the instrument is made or the subsequent conduct of the parties may show the intention with sufficient certainty to enable the Courts to presume that the grant was perpetual (Toolshi Pershad Singh v. Rajah Ram Narain Singh [2]). This ruling applies equally to the award and the Commissioner's order upon it. Their Lordships do not see in the circumstances under which the award was made any which would enable them to pronounce that the Rs. 70 a month were to be paid after the death of Chhedu Khan. The last line of the award seems to indicate that it was for him personally. If Chhedu had any title to a share in the taluk before the Government took possession of it in 1858, he had none after the sanad which was granted by the Government as his name was not in it. This is noticed by the Commissioner in the judgment he gave before the reference to the arbitrators. Chhedu's right was only under the agreement and the Commissioner concluded his judgment by saying that the issue was reduced to "what consideration is Chhedu Khan entitled to in consequence of Abdul Hakim's promises and agreements with him?" The arbitrators say in the award that they had inquired into the case and they may have considered that justice would be done by giving to Chhedu the Rs. 70 per month for his life that being a sufficient reward for his services in obtaining the release of Abdul Hakim and Saadat from prison.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to reverse the decree of the Judicial Commissioner and order the appeal to him to be dismissed with costs.

The Respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

REF. NO. 44 OF 1900.

AMEER ALI, J. } THE QUEEN-EMPRESS

Under sec. 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate powers either to order a commitment upon the evidence already taken or to direct a fresh enquiry.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHNABHAT (1) referred to.

It is improper to accept a portion of the evidence given by a witness which is in support of the case for the prosecution and to discard or discredit the other portions which go against it; and so far as the accused is concerned, he is entitled to ask the Court to consider all the facts deposed to by that witness and to shew to the Court that his evidence, taken as a whole, is in material contradiction of the evidence of the other witnesses.

admissible; they must be proved in the ordinary way, viz., by evidence of a primary character and not by hearsay testimony.

This was a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan on the 1st of December 1900, under sec. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, from an acquittal by the jury of the accused Surendra Nath Sarkar upon a charge under sec. 302, I. P. Code.

The facts of the case appear fully from the judgment of the Court.

At the hearing of the reference on the 17th January a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the accused that the District Magistrate had no power to order the committal of the accused when he had been discharged by the Deputy Magistrate.

Mr. Gordon Leith (Deputy Legal Remembrancer) in support of the Reference.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Jadunath Kanjilal for the Accused.

THEIR LORDSHIPS delivered the following judgment on the preliminary point:—

Mr. Roy takes a preliminary objection to the trial in the Sessions Court on the ground put forward in the Court below (p. 3 of the paper-book). It appears that an inquiry was held in this case by a Deputy Magistrate who discharged the accused under sec. 209, C. Cr. P. The District Magistrate, upon going through the record, came to the conclusion that the prisoner had been improperly discharged; he thereupon called upon the accused to show cause why he should not be committed to the Court of Session and after hearing his pleader directed his commitment.

Mr. Roy's contention is that the commitment is bad and ought to be quashed under sec. 532, C. Cr. P., as the District Magistrate had no power himself to commit; he could only direct the officer who had discharged the accused to do so. In support of this contention, he refers to the language of secs. 436 and 437, and urges that the words "order him to be committed for trial" in sec. 436 mean that the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate can only order the inferior Court to commit the accused for trial. In our opinion sec. 437 deals with a totally different class of subjects. In considering the present objection we have to confine our attention to sec. 436 with its provisos. We think that under that section the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate powers to order a commitment upon the evidence already taken instead of directing a fresh inquiry. The first part of the section runs as follows:—"When, on examining the record of any case under sec. 435 or otherwise, the District Magistrate," as in this case, "considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested." The second part goes on to say:—"and may thereupon," that is, upon the recorded evidence, "instead of directing a fresh inquiry order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been in the opinion of the District Magistrate improperly discharged."

As mentioned before, the latter portion of the section is divisible into two parts: The District Magistrate may either direct a fresh inquiry by the inferior Court which has improperly discharged the accused or he may, in his discretion, order the commitment of the accused for trial before the Court of Session. This meaning is made clear by the proviso which follows:—

"Provided that the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause to such Magistrate why the commitment should not be made," not to be made by any body else but by the Magistrate himself. The second proviso declares:—"If such Judge or Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused, such Judge or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to inquire into such offence. Proviso (a) taken in connection with proviso (b) cannot leave any reasonable doubt that the commitment there intended is a commitment upon the record by the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate who, upon a perusal of the evidence, is of opinion that the accused has been improperly discharged. This view of ours is in accord with the case of Queen-Empress v. Krishnabhat (1) and no authority holding the contrary view has been laid before us. We therefore overrule the objection.

On the 21st January, their LORDSHIPS delivered the following judgment on the appeal:—

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was a follows:—

This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan under sec. 307, C. Cr. P., from an acquittal by the jury of the accused Surendra Nath Sarkar upon a charge under sec. 302, I. P. C. The deceased Assam Baistabi, was a public prostitute who plied her trade sometimes in Burdwan and sometimes in her native village Mankar. On the morning of the 21st April, at about 2 A.M., she was found by a number of people who had gone to her house with Dhiru Chowkidar lying murdered on the pira of her hut. She appears to have returned from Burdwan some three weeks before this event. The case for the prosecution is that the chowkidar heard groans issuing from her house. He woke up a number of neighbours, and, with them, proceeded to the hut. They found what is called the sadar door closed or rather hooked from inside and were unable to open it for some time, until some sort of instrument was brought and the hook was raised. They then entered the house of the deceased. Dhiru Chowkidar says that he saw the present accused running out of the house through a khirki door which is towards the east of the hut opening towards the north. The accused was pursued but he entered his house which is not far off and bolted the door. Dhiru says that he went and informed Raghu Nath Singh Constable who was in the village at that time. The constable came and placed some guards round the house of the accused and also at the Railway station to prevent persons suspected of the crime from absconding. Dhiru then states that, at about 3 in the morning, he went off to the Galsi thana to give information regarding the murder. He arrived there at about 9 A.M. His information was taken down and he returned to the village later in the course of the day. After Dhiru had left the village the accused is alleged to have been arrested outside his house when he had come out to answer a call of nature. He was kept under arrest until the arrival of the Daroga or Sub-Inspector of Police who says he arrived at the place between 10½ and 11 in the morning. The prosecution has called a number of other witnesses whose evidence we shall have to refer to in some detail. Enough to say at this stage that that is substantially the case for the prosecution, but it seeks to establish the guilt of the accused by several other circumstances which, it is alleged, corroborate the direct testimony of Dhiru that the accused was the man directly concerned in the crime. It is alleged that, when the inner room of the deceased woman's hut was broken open, the constable, on entering it, found under a pillow a black serge coat from the pockets of which certain post-cards and letters were taken out, all addressed to the accused, and it is suggested that the finding of the letters in the coat in that house is a piece of circumstantial evidence which is conclusive against the accused. It is unnecessary to refer to the other circumstances upon which the learned Sessions Judge relies in his charge to the jury as well as in his reference to this Court, for, we shall have to deal with them in the course of the examination of the evidence. It is necessary, however, to mention the exact position of the house which was occupied by the murdered woman. It seems to be an ordinary one-roomed hut with a sort of compound wall forming a semicircle in front. The sadar door is stated to be towards the west. The khirki door is, as has already been mentioned, towards the east opening towards the north upon a piece of bare ground where there are some trees and a khejur jungle not far off. There are houses close by, the house of Jagannath Das being only about 25 cubits from that of the deceased. Her brother-in-law, Kunja Das, also lives close by. On the east is the house of Ram Das. Another near neighbour is Mani Metoni. The place Kalitola whence the chowkidar heard the groans is said to be 2 russis off. The witnesses state that a lane or, as the Sessions Judge calls it, an alley leads to the khirki door towards the east. Before the Deputy Magistrate, the chowkidar stated that the lane or alley was about 12 or 13 cubits in length. Before the Sessions Court, he stated that it was about 2 or 2½ cubits in length which would make it probably about the width of the pira, and the khirki door then would be along the line of the wall of the inner room of the hut. The house of the accused is on the other side of a tank called the Bhundry tank, and the allegation is that the accused ran through the khirki door round the house of the deceased, crossed a water passage towards the west of the deceased's house, jumped over a wall and then after rounding a tank, entered his house. Admittedly the khirki door is so small that the accused or the person who escaped on that night through that door, had to bend himself considerably to get out of it. The Deputy Magistrate who held the enquiry and who discharged the accused appears to have gone to the house and seen the khirki door himself. We have looked into his judgment and find a very clear description of that khirki door in it. He says "the khirki door is a very small one. It is like the door used in the privy of a poor woman's house. I can never believe that the accused who is a tall healthy man escaped through it."

THE QUEEN-EMRESS v. SURENDRA NATH SARKAR.

Another circumstance of material importance in considering the value of what is called the corroborative circumstantial evidence deserves notice. Indra Narain Biswas, the Sub-Inspector, was not at Galsi thana on the day in question. He appears to have been away on some other duty. He was returning by rail from Chuck Tantulia to Burdwan. At the Galsi station, he met another chowkidar by name Gosta, who gave him the information regarding the murder of Assam Baistabi. The Sub-Inspector says that he sent off Gosta to the thana to fetch a pair of hand-cuffs. By the next train he went to the Mankar Railway Station and arrived there at 10 or 10-30 A.M. His statement is that, on his arrival, he went to the place where the accused was and found him in custody outside the house of Assam Baistabi. He states further that he did not search the house of the accused until late in the afternoon. Upon the evidence of the other witnesses, however, it is perfectly clear that the Sub-Inspector, upon his arrival, did, as one would naturally suppose, he would do, go to the house of the accused and thereafter came back to the deceased's hut. Jonab Ali, witness No. 9, states in cross-examination as follows:—"Darogah on his arrival went to Surendra's house to search it after he had been to Assam's house for a short time. He did not then inspect her body nor caused the door of the room to be opened." According to another witness there seem to have been two visits paid to the house of the accused, one about noon and the other later on. The bearing of these facts will be observed, when we come to deal with the letters and post-cards found in the pocket of the serge coat. The Sub-Inspector was in the village the whole of that day (21st) and apparently also on the 22nd. He came to Burdwan on the 23rd on which date he received certain instructions from the Inspector of Police, and on the 24th he took the statements of the boy Khetra Nath Dass. Up to that time apparently there was no evidence forthcoming against the accused of any motive on his part for the crime. Khetra's evidence before the committing Magistrate is of a meagre character, but before the Sessions Court he made a long statement both in chief and in cross-examination deposing to facts upon which the Sessions Judge has laid considerable stress in his charge as proving the visit that night of the accused to the house of the deceased and also as showing some degree of motive on his part. With these remarks, we proceed to deal with the evidence of Dhiru Chowkidar and of the other persons who accompanied him to the hut of the deceased Assam Baistabi. Dhiru Chowkidar states that he was on his rounds at about 11 P.M. in the night. He called out to the woman, got an answer and proceeded to other places. He came back to her house at about two in the morning. He called out to her again but received no answer. He then went to Kalitola to which reference has already been made to have a smoke. There he heard groans from Assam Baistabi's house whereupon he proceeded shouting in that direction. He goes on to say that Kalidas Bairagee, Jagannath Bairagee, Gosta Das Bairagee and Ram Das Bairagee then came out and told him to see why Assam had cried out. He went to the sadar door of Assam Baistabi. There they all began to call out to her, but got no answer, and as they were unable to open the outer door which was secured by a hook inside, they called Kunjadas Bairagee, the brother-in-law of the deceased woman, who came with an instrument and opened the door. The chowkidar further states that as he passed through the sadar door and entered the house, he saw Surendra Nath Sarkar, the accused, open the khirki door and pass out when he at once gave chase. Kali Bairagee who was on the north side of the hut attempted to seize the accused, but being threatened with a weapon the accused had in his hand, Kali could not catch him. The accused then ran up to the Bhundari tank with the weapon in his hand pursued by the chowkidar and others. But he got to his house, pushed open the sadar door and, after entering, bolted it. Dhiru says that he, Kali Bairagee and Jagannath Das had pursued the accused. It is quite clear, upon the evidence of the other witnesses, that the khirki door of the murdered woman's hut cannot be seen from the sadar entrance. This was put to the chowkidar in cross-examination. He saw the force of it and in page 11, he states as follows :—"I could see accused Surendra on entering the sadar of Assam, because he had not then gone into the lane leading to the back door. If he had entered the lane then I would not have been able to see him." In connection with this matter, we may mention that before the Magistrate he had stated as follows :—"When I saw the accused I saw him standing near the khirki door."

The statement that he made in chief was, no doubt, similar to, if not identical with, what he had stated before the Magistrate, but when cross-examined he saw the difficulty of his position, and he began then to prevaricate. His evidence in cross-examination comes to this that although he could not have seen the accused if the latter had entered the lane or got to the back door he saw him because he had not entered the lane leading to the back door. Kali Prosad who also is a witness for the Crown, but whose evidence has been, to some extent, discredited by the Sessions Judge as it did not wholly support the case for the prosecution, tells quite a different story. It is not easy to imagine how a portion of Kali Prosad's evidence is to be taken in support of the case for the prosecution and the other portion which goes against it discarded or discredited. So far as the accused is concerned, he is entitled to ask the Court to consider all the facts deposed to by Kali Prosad, and his evidence, taken as a whole, is in material contradiction of the evidence of the other witnesses; the accused is entitled to any benefit that may accrue to him therefrom in the consideration of the case. Apparently, Kali Prosad had gone round to the back door after having been in front before, for he says as follows :—

"Kunjadas went home and fetched thence a pair of tongs. Ramdas peeped through an opening between the leaves of the door and said "who are you sitting on the pira, open the door." I then went round the back door with a view to see if any man came out of the house that way. As I was standing there, I saw a man open the back door and come out of it. The door was closed before. As the man got out I caught hold of him round his waist. He had a weapon in his hand. He aimed a blow with it at me and I let go my hold on him. The man then ran toward the west, I could not recognise him." He then gives the names of the persons who pursued the man, viz., Jagannath, Gosta and Dhiru Chowkidar. It will be noticed that Dhiru Chowkidar does not mention Gosta as having given chase to the accused. He mentions only Kali, Jagannath and himself as the pursuers of Surendra. Kali Prosad then goes on to say "when the pursuers returned, I questioned Dhiru Chowkidar who the man was. He said the man has gone in the direction of the Sirkar's house, can he be Surendra?"

In cross-examination the witness says :—"The alley behind the back door was dark when the back door was opened by the man. There are trees on one side of the alley and their shade makes it dark and that is why the alley was dark then. When the man came out, none said he was Surendra Sarkar. Dhiru Chowkidar did not then cry out there goes Surendra." He states further that the man had a white "jama on and a cloth round his head covering his cheeks and chin. He had shoes on when running away." Jagannath Das whose house, as we have said, is only about 25 cubits distant from that of the deceased says :—"Dhiru Chowkidar woke me up that night at 2 or 2-30 A.M. I asked him why he woke me up." The difference between the two statements will be noticed at once. The witness goes on :—

 “He said why is Assam groaning, let us come and see. Ram Das, Gosta, Kalu, Bolai, Moti and myself went with the chowkidar to the sadar door of Assam’s house. We began to call up to her but got no answer . . . . I brought a pair of tongs and with it opened the sadar door. Dhiru Chowkidar entered the house and we all of us stood outside. As Dhiru entered the house, the man inside it ran out of the khirki door. At that time none said anything about that man to us. Kalu stood outside the khirki door. Kalu called out to me ‘Dada, come and catch the man, he is running away.’ I saw the man from a distance. I ran after him as far as the uthan of Mani. He had a weapon or a lathie about 2 cubits long in his hand, and just as I was about to seize his jama he flourished the weapon towards me. As I wanted to ward off the blow, I fell down near a wall. The man ran away through the cavity or along the bank of Bhundry tank. He ran towards the west. I was not able to recognize that man. Dhiru Chowkidar and Gosta had been after the man. They came back from the pursuit. I asked him who the man was. He said the man entered the house of the Sirkars. He also said he could not recognize the man well but he appeared like Surendra.”

And he adds in cross-examination “from the sadar door, the khirki door is not at all visible. The man had a white jama while he ran away. He had a cloth wrapped round his head covering chin and cheeks and the lower end of the nose. He had shoes on. I did not go with the chowkidar Dhiru that night to the house of the Sirkars. Gosta ran with Dhiru part of the way. The man jumped over the wall standing in the uthan of Mani. I struck against that wall and fell. The wall was then about one cubit high. I cannot say what the man did with his weapon. When the man jumped over the wall, his weapon slipped out of his hands.” Gosta Behari was the other man who came with Dhiru and pursued the man who was seen running away. He corroborates Jagannath as to what took place at first. He says :—

 “Dhiru Chowkidar woke me up that night. It was then 2 or 2-30 o’clock. I came out and asked ‘Dhiru what was the matter. He said ‘why did Assam groan?’ Then Jagannath, Kalu Das, Ram Das and myself went to the sadar door of Assam with the chowkidar. We pushed the door and found it shut from inside. We called out to Assam but got no reply. Dhiru then fetched Kunja Das the brother-in-law of Assam. He also called out to Assam but got no response. Dhiru then opened the sadar door with a pair of tongs. Dhiru then entered the house. I saw a tall and powerful man ran away across the uthan of Mani Metoni towards the west. The man was tall and powerful like the accused Surendra. I could not recognize him. I did not tell any one that I had recognized the man. I ran after the man to some distance, that is, as far as the eastern ghat of Bhundry tank. Dhiru ran after the man followed by Jagannath and myself. I cannot say how far Dhiru pursued the man. He ran a longer way than me. I cannot say which house the man ran to. I did not tell previously to any one that the man entered a particular house.”

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SURENDRA NATH SARKAR.

Further on, the witness says "I asked the chowkidar who was the man and where had he gone. He said either that the man went in the direction of the house of the Sirkars or that he had ran into the Sirkar's house, which statement he made I do not exactly remember. He did not tell me at all who was the man." This is all in chief. In cross-examination he states as follows:—"It is a fact that at that time no one said that he had been able to recognize the man. Dhiru even did not say that he had recognized the man. I do not remember if Dhiru or any one else said where the man had run to. On his return from the pursuit Dhiru Chowkidar did not say he had recognized the man. The man had no jama or coat when running away. He had no pagri round his head or any cloth round his face and chin. His chin and face were perfectly bare. I did not particularly note whether he had any weapon in his hand." The seventh witness Ram Das Bairagee was not examined before the committing Magistrate. He is brought forward to say that the chowkidar did mention that night he had recognized Surendra as the person running away and that he had seen him enter the house of the Sirkars. His statements in cross-examination, however, are peculiar. He says as follows:—"I did not give evidence before the Deputy Magistrate. The Police did not send me up as a witness. The Police did not examine me. I cannot see well at night. The chowkidar came back to Ashat-tola and there he spoke of having chased the man. Kali, Jagannath and Gosta and others were then present. Gosta and Kali and myself asked the chowkidar who was the man that had run away from the house. The chowkidar said it was Surendra who did so. The chowkidar said Surendra ran away. I recognized him. Then he says:—"I do not remember exactly whether the chowkidar said 'the man appeared like Surendra.' When they cried out—'there he goes through the khirki door,' no name was mentioned." The other witness to the incidents of that night is Kunja, the brother-in-law of the deceased. After stating how he with others went to the house of the deceased, he goes on to say:—"Dhiru Chowkidar, Jagannath, Gosta and myself entered the house. The chowkidar first entered it, Gosta and Jagannath entered next, I entered it after them. Dhiru called out 'who are you.' The answer was 'ho!' This was given not by Assam but by some one else. The voice came from near the khirki door. I could not see the person. Dhiru Chowkidar said 'Surendra, is this your work?' I did not then go in the direction of the khirki door as I was pouring water into the mouth of Assam. She was then dead." He then says:—"I did not tell any one that I had recognized the murderer but the men who had recognized the murderer named him to me. There were Kali Baistab, Dhiru Chowkidar, Gosta Das and Jagannath Das. They gave me the name of the murderer immediately after they came back from the pursuit. They named Surendra Sarkar." It is needless to observe that this statement is in direct contradiction of the statements of the other witnesses. Before the committing Magistrate, this man did not say that Dhiru Chowkidar said 'Surendra, is this your work?' His statement there was in the following terms:—"Dhiru Chowkidar went ahead towards the khinki of the house and shouted 'who are you!' I did not see the man whom the chowkidar addressed. I heard the opening sound of the khinki door." After he had been examined for some time in chief the Court put to him a somewhat peculiar question: "Is it not a fact that Surendra Sirkar used to visit Assam and got annoyed if any other man visited her?" The answer was "I do not know." We cannot help expressing our opinion that the question put <sup>by</sup> the Court was not a proper one nor does it appear to us that any reason was shown why this man should be regarded as a witness hostile to the prosecution or that any case was made out for allowing him to be cross-examined. However, he was allowed to be cross-examined and the answers he gave did not help the case in any way. In cross-examination by the accused's pleader he said what he had stated in the Court below that he neither saw Surendra nor was he able to recognize him that night. One statement, however, made by this witness in answer to the Government prosecutor is of some importance, namely, where he says that his son Khetra used to sleep with him at night. We suppose he means to say when the boy used to be at Mankar. This is all the evidence relating to the incident of the night including the discovery of the murdered woman and the running away of a man from her house.

The next stage begins with the information given by Dhiru Chowkidar to Raghu Nath Singh Constable. Dhiru states that he went and spoke to Raghu Nath Singh Constable that Assam Bais-tabi was murdered and named Surendra Nath as her murderer. Raghu Nath in the Sessions Court corroborates that statement. In cross-examination, however, he was asked whether as a matter of fact Dhiru Chowkidar did not really tell him that night only that a murder had taken place without mentioning the name of the person who was supposed to have committed it, and his answer is as follows:—"I did not depose before the lower Court 'Dhiru Chowkidar simply told me there was a murder. He did not say anything else,' and then he goes on 'I do not remember whether I deposed then. When I came to the house of the deceased with Dhiru Chowkidar, I saw there nobody else.'" There can be no question whatever that before the Deputy Magistrate Raghu Nath's statement was as follows:—"Dhiru Chowkidar, simply told me there is murder. He did not say anything else. When I came to the house of the deceased with Dhiru I saw there nobody else."

No doubt some sort of guard was placed around the house of the accused that night. It is also clear that the accused was arrested when he was either going out of his house or returning.

The next important stage begins with the arrival of the Darogah. The Darogah, as we have already said, came first to the house of the deceased for a little while, then he went to the house of the accused, and he came back to the deceased's house and drew up the surathal which is on the record; and it was while he was there drawing up the surathal that the coat was discovered in the pocket of which the letters and post cards produced are said to have been found. The witness Kali Prosad states: The constable put his hand into the pillow below the door sill from outside and picked up some letters which he handed over to the Darogah. The Darogah read them and said they are letters. Kailash Constable was the man who picked up the letters. He did not enter the room. Kailash Constable, however, has not been examined, and so we do not know what he would have said on the subject. The other witnesses, however, state that, when the room was opened one of the constables entered and brought out a jama or coat and from its pocket took out the post-cards and letters and handed them to the Darogah. Before we proceed further with the examination of this evidence, it is desirable to deal with the statements of Khetra Nath Das as his evidence has been relied upon for the purpose of showing that the accused visited the house of the deceased on the night of the 20th. It is to be noted that this boy was found only on the 24th. He states that on the night of the occurrence he had gone to take his meal as usual at the deceased's house. Surendra came there, saw him and told him to leave the place. He came to his father and told him that Surendra had driven him away. He goes on to say: "Surendra used to visit Assam now and then" and in chief he adds "on the day of the murder itself, Assam went to a tank and a Brahmin also went there when Surendra told the latter if you come to-day I shall make you lie on a bed of flowers. That very night Assam was murdered." He goes on to say: "I did not go to the tank when that conversation took place, but I heard it from Assam." He was cross-examined upon this statement and to that cross-examination we shall presently refer. The Sessions Judge thinks that Khetra's statement regarding what he heard from the woman is admissible under four different sections of the Evidence Act, viz., secs. 6, 8, 11 and 14. We think, however, that the learned Judge is in error on this point. Khetra's statement is unquestionably hearsay and is not admissible under the sections referred to. Those sections declare certain facts to be relevant under certain circumstances, but those facts, although relevant, must be proved in the ordinary way, viz., by evidence of a primary character and not by hearsay testimony. In this case Khetra says that he heard something from Assam regarding something which she had heard accused say to a totally different person. No threat had been held out to her so that what she told Khetra could not be treated as a complaint. If the jury had convicted the accused upon this hearsay statement which, in our opinion, was wrongly admitted and wrongly placed before them, it would have been our duty to exclude it from consideration. But in this case notwithstanding Khetra's testimony they came to the conclusion that the prosecution had failed to make out a case. It is therefore necessary for us to express some opinion upon the facts deposed to by Khetra.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SURENDRA NATH SARKAR.

Upon a careful consideration of his evidence both in chief as well as in cross-examination, we have no hesitation in holding that he cannot be believed.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SURENDRA NATH SARKAR.

It is impossible to suppose unless the deceased was insane that after hearing the threat uttered by the accused she would come back to her house repeating it loudly so as to be heard by Khetra. Has there been any incident of the character desposed to by the boy, primary evidence of that circumstance would have been forthcoming from the man against whom the threat was uttered, but no such case was made either before the Court of the committing Magistrate or before the Sessions Court. Again the threat was uttered against the Brahmin who is said to have been on friendly terms with the deceased. It was not uttered against the woman herself, and it is difficult to conceive the motive of the attack upon the woman herself that night. There is no evidence to show that the Brahmin in question visited the deceased that night or that the accused happened to go there, and that in consequence of any favouritism shown by her the accused attacked her in the way in which she is proved to have met her death. If we eliminate the evidence of Khetra, which, upon full consideration, we have no hesitation in doing, the least semblance of motive disappears and there remains nothing except the testimony of Dhiru Chowkidar as to the accused being the man who was seen running out of the deceased's house that night. We may put out of our consideration the foot marks on the uthan which, it is said, tallied with those of the accused, because although one witness does state that they coincide, another flatly contradicts him. We have already shown that the Bairagee witnesses do not profess to say that they recognized the man who ran away from the house after they entered, and three of them state that Dhiru did not mention to them that he had recognized the man. Ram Dass' evidence regarding the chowkidar's recognition is inconclusive, as he himself admits that he does not remember what he exactly said. The whole case, therefore, rests upon the evidence of Dhiru and the corroboration which it is said to receive from the discovery of the letters and post-cards. The coat has not been identified as that of the accused, and considering the way in which this case has been managed by the investigating officer, we have very grave doubts whether these letters and post-cards were really found in the pocket of the coat, as it is alleged they were, on the 21st when the room of the deceased was opened. Considering the statements of Kali Prosad and the other witnesses and the way in which the constable was sent in first in the room, if he did really enter the room at all, we are led to the conclusion that these letters and post-cards were probably introduced into the pocket of that coat. A little consideration would show the absurdity of the idea that the accused would go to the house with incriminatory letters in his pocket, take off his coat, fold it up carefully and put it under the pillow and after committing the murder, leave the coat behind in a locked up room, materials which would furnish incontrovertible evidence against himself. It is not that he had no time to take away what he had brought with him, for, according to the evidence of the witnesses the men who had gathered with Dhiru Chowkidar at the sadar door were there nearly 2 ghories trying to open the door. It is extremely unlikely that the accused who was in no hurry would make no effort to carry away his coat with the papers which were in the pocket. That circumstance also throws distrust on the story of Dhiru Chowkidar that when he entered the sadar door, he saw the accused entering the lane. Taking a reasonable view of the matter it is obvious that if the neighbours had collected together and were making a noise at the sadar door of the woman's house, any man who had committed the crime would have at once decamped from the spot and not waited to be recognized by the men who were trying to enter the house. From Dhiru's various statements it is quite clear to us that he could not possibly have recognized the man whom he said he pursued afterwards. With witnesses of this character, suspicion very soon leads to belief and the belief soon gathers force and becomes personal knowledge, and it is not unlikely that, from the appearance of the man and the direction he took when running away Dhiru suspected the accused. There are certain other circumstances which we cannot overlook in dealing with the reference made by the Sessions Judge. Upon the evidence of some of the prosecution witnesses it is clear that the woman used to be visited by various people, and that, on that very night, a number of men had come to her house. The accused's statement is that although he was intimate with her some years ago, that intimacy had ceased. The chowkidar admits, and it must be remembered that he is the chowkidar of the village, that he never saw Surendra, the accused, in the deceased's house except on that night, whereas he gives the names of other persons who frequently visited her. Having regard to all these facts, it is impossible for us to hold upon this evidence that the prosecution has succeeded in making out a sufficient case against the accused. We have gone into the facts in some detail in view of the length of the reference and the strong opinion expressed by the Sessions Judge. We are of opinion that it has not been established in this case that the accused murdered the woman Assam Baistabi, and we accordingly acquit him and direct that he be set at liberty.

An arbitrator has no power to alter the devolution of property in a mode at variance with the ordinary principles of the law governing the parties, in the absence of a special custom prevailing in the family. He has no power to make property which is divisible by law indivisible for ever.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh modifying the decree of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The litigation related to the property of one Syed Ashik Ali, a Shiah Mahomedan, who died on the 15th January 1885, leaving him surviving two widows, Ajabunnissa and Najibunnissa, and two daughters by the former, the Appellant Jafri Begum, and Abbasi Begum, the mother of the minor Respondent.

In or about 1881 Jafri Begum married the 2nd Appellant, Tassadduk Husain, and three years later Abbasi Begum married the abovenamed Mahomed Reza.

At the time of Syed Ashik Ali's death Tassadduk was 25 years of age and Mahomed Reza 18 years of age. Upon the death of Ashik Ali questions arose regarding the rights of the various members of his family in and to his estate.

Special family custom was asserted and in order to ascertain amicably the rights of the respective claimants one Mahfuz Ali, the brother of Ashik Ali, deceased, was appointed arbitrator by mutual consent.

The reference was as follows:—

"As the deceased Syed Ashik Ali has, on the 15th January 1885, departed this mortal world therefore we, with our free will and consent, appoint Syed Mahfuz Ali Sahib, Rais of Karba Pihani, Hurdoi District, who is our elder and patron as umpire for the decision of the arrangement (or management) of the estate and adjustment of the dispute of the heirs of the deceased one with another."

The award provided—

That the two daughters should be absolute owners of the whole property in equal shares, that neither should have the right to partition her share.

That Tassadduk Husain should be the manager of the whole property and render half-yearly accounts to each of the daughters. The fifth clause of the award was in the following terms:

"5. That since the partition and subdivision of an integral estate belonging to a well-known gentleman, is calculated to lead to its ruin and destruction, the principle of partition should not be considered legal (i.e., eligible) in this estate, so that the constitution of the estate should continue as usual, and there may be no occasion for the mischief-monger to raise troubles."

The said award was presented to the Sub-Registrar of the district for registration on the said 19th January 1885, when, being of opinion that under sec. 88 of Act III of 1877 (the Indian Registration Act), which deals with documents executed by a public functionary, he was entitled to refer to the arbitrator for information respecting such document, and to require of him a description of the property according to the provision of sec. 21 of the Act, he sent the said award back to the arbitrator calling upon him to specify the property dealt with by such award.

The said arbitrator, upon receipt of the said award, drew up a list of the property which he had dealt with by his award and in the "remarks" column thereof he stated that out of the village Kukargoti, 5 biswas was given to Jafri Begum as dower and belonged to her.

Disputes soon after arose and Abbasi Begum's title being denied in the Revenue Courts, she was referred to a civil suit.

On the 22nd March 1890 she instituted the present suit, and on her death her son, the present Respondent, was put on the record as her representative.

By her plaint she claimed separate possession by partition of one-half share of the estate of Ashik Ali with mesne profits. She alleged that the whole 8 biswas, 5 biswansis recorded in Ashik Ali's name at the time of his death constituted a portion of his estate, and that 5 biswas thereof had never been gifted to Appellant. She also alleged that on 21st September 1883 Tassadduk Husain had from funds in his hands as manager purchased in his own name a share of the village Ludhai and she claimed one-half of it.

The Defendants filed a very lengthy written statement, but the material pleas may be reduced to five.

- (1) That the suit was barred by limitation.
- (2) That by special family custom, the widows of the deceased excluded the daughters from inheritance.
- (3) That the Plaintiff could claim no title under the award, giving her a right to partition, and independent of the retention of Tassadduk Husain as manager.

(4) That 5 biswas in Kukargoti constituted the separate property of Jafri Begum, and

(5) That the share in Ludhai was acquired by Tassadduk Husain from his separate funds.

The District Judge fixed 18 issues raising these, and a number of collateral and immaterial questions. On a subsequent date he began the examination of the first witness Tassadduk Husain, and on the 20th April 1892 came to the conclusion that he would dispose of certain legal arguments, and postpone the determination of the amount of mesne profits till execution of the decree.

On the 21st April 1892, he delivered judgment, and decided that Plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the estate, that it was inadvisable to partition, that sufficient cause had not been shown to remove Tassadduk Husain from his position as manager, and decreed Plaintiff one-half of the profits, the exact amount to be determined at the time of execution of the decree.

From this decree the Plaintiff alone appealed, and the Judicial Commissioners remanded the case for proper trial and determination of the other issues.

Further evidence was taken on remand, and on questions now material, the District Judge found

- (1) That the suit was not barred by limitation.
- (2) That the custom relied on by Defendants had not been established.
- (3) That the 5 biswas in dispute in Kukargoti had been given by Ashik Ali to Jafri Begum as dowry, but that the award in regard thereto was not binding, because the arbitrator was functus officio at the time of expressing his opinion.

- (4) That Tassadduk Husain had purchased the share in Ludhai from his private funds.

After the receipt of these findings, the Judicial Commissioners passed final judgment. They confirmed the findings that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the alleged custom had not been proved. They also agreed with the District Judge that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers in attempting to decide that Jafri Begum was the owner of 5 biswas in Kukargoti, but came to the conclusion that the gift of this property to Jafri Begum had not been established, and that Ludhai had been purchased from the profits of Ashik Ali's estate. They also held that the clause in the award in restraint of partition was invalid, and that Tassadduk Husain could be removed from the post of manager. In the result a decree for separate possession of one-half of the property in suit was passed in favour of the Plaintiff, together with mesne profits.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant, inter alia, contended that the suit, so far as it was to set aside an award, was barred by Art. 91 of the Indian Limitation Act, having been acted upon more than three years before suit. That the proceedings of the Registrar did not affect or invalidate the award.

That the first Court was right in its finding as to Mouzah Ludhai, that under sec. 211, C. P. C., mesne profits could only be given by the decree until possession or until expiration of 3 years from the date of decree.

Mr. Degruyther for the Respondent supported the decision of the Judicial Court. He submitted that the opinion of the arbitrator after the return of the award to him by the Registrar was gratuitous, outside the reference to arbitration and was made when he was functus officio; so far as the award deals with specific interests it is good. He referred to the Transfer of Property Act, sec. 11.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD LINDLEY.—This is a family dispute between a daughter and a grandson of a Shiah Mahomedan named Syed Ashik Ali who died on the 15th January 1885. He left two widows, Mussammats Ajabunnissa and Najibunnissa, and two daughters by the former, viz.:—Jafri Begum, the Appellant, and Abbasi Begum, the mother of the Respondent. In or about the year 1881, Jafri Begum married Tassadduk Husain, the other Appellant, and about three years later Syed Mahomed Reza married Abbasi Begum. At the time of Ashik Ali's death, Tassadduk Husain and Mahomed Reza were respectively about 25 and 18 years of age. Ashik Ali had no children by his second wife.

After the death of Ashik Ali disputes arose between his daughters, and on the 19th January 1885 they agreed to refer these disputes to the arbitration of a friend of the family named Syed Mahfuz Ali; and on the same day he made his award.

His decisions were, so far as is material, as follows:—

1. That mutation of names of all the property left by the deceased should be effected in the names of the two daughters of the deceased in equal shares, and that the management of the said estate should be entrusted to the Appellant Syed Tassadduk Husain, who was to manage the said estate, and render to the two daughters half-yearly accounts of such management.

2. That the said Tassadduk should look after the education of the said Syed Mahomed Reza, and support and maintain him.

3. That the two widows of the said Syed Ashik Ali should be treated with due respect, and properly provided for.

4. That the two daughters were the owners of, and had full authority over, all the property left by the deceased, except that which was in possession of the widows which would be theirs for their lives, and that the two daughters were to see to proper provision being made for the said widows.

The 5th clause of the said award was as follows (Rec. 75, l. 6) :—

5. That since the partition and subdivision of an integral estate belonging to a well-known gentleman, is calculated to lead to its ruin and destruction, the principle of partition should not be considered legal (i.e., eligible) in this estate, so that the constitution of the estate should continue as usual, and there may be no occasion for the mischief-monger to raise troubles.

This award was signed by the arbitrator, the two widows and by both the daughters and their husbands.

The said award was presented to the Sub-Registrar of the district for registration on the said 19th January 1885, and he sent the said award back to the arbitrator to specify the property dealt with by such award.

The arbitrator accordingly drew up a list of the property, and the award and the list were afterwards registered.

One of the properties which had belonged to the said Syed Ashik Ali, was a share in the village Kukargoti; of this share, it was stated in the said specification of the property (Rec. 76, column 3), that its extent was 8 biswas 5 biswansis, and in the 4th column, under the heading "remarks," was the following note :—

"Out of 8 biswas 5 biswansis of village Kukargoti entered in this list, 5 biswas was given by the ancestor as dower to his elder daughter Mussammat Jafri Begum, in respect of which mutation of names should be effected in favour of the said lady. The remaining 3 biswas 5 biswansis should be entered in the names of both the daughters in equal shares."

On the 26th January 1885, the said document with the said specification of property was registered (Rec. 78, l. 1), and the Appellant Tassadduk took upon himself the management of the said estate under the said award.

On the 18th August 1885 the names of the two daughters were substituted for the name of their father in the Revenue registers and later in pursuance of an order, dated the 28th September 1885, the entry of the name of Jafri Begum alone was sanctioned in respect of 20 biswas. These 20 biswas represented the 5 biswas share of Kukargoti already mentioned. This change in the register appears to have been procured by Tassadduk Husain as manager of the property and without the knowledge of the Plaintiff's mother.

Tassadduk Husain's management gave rise to disputes. The right of his wife to the 5 biswas in Kukargoti was denied by her sister and some land in Ludhai which Tassadduk Husain said he had bought with his own money was claimed by his sister-in-law as part of Syed Ashik Ali's estate on the ground that it had been paid for out of income of such estate.

On the 20th March 1890 the present suit was instituted by the Plaintiff's mother Abbasi Begum against Jafri Begum and her husband Tassadduk Husain. The Plaintiff's mother died shortly after the suit was instituted, indeed on the same day, but it was revived in May 1890 by her son Ali Reza, the present Plaintiff and Respondent. For all practical purposes, therefore, the suit may be regarded as an original suit by him and it has been so treated in the Indian Courts. The suit is for partition and for the removal of Tassadduk Husain as manager and for an account of his receipts and payments. The suit is based upon the award of Mahfuz Ali, but the Plaintiff disputes the validity of the 5th clause prohibiting partition so far at any rate as it applies to him; he also disputes the title of Jafri Begum to the 5 biswas share of Kukargoti, and he claims the land in Ludhai as joint property.

The Defendants filed a long written statement of defence. The material defences are:—

- (1) That the suit was in effect to set aside the award and was barred by limitation.

- (2) That by special family custom, the widows of the deceased excluded the daughters from inheritance.

- (3) That the award prohibited partition and the removal of Tassadduk Husain as manager.

- (4) That five biswas in Kukargoti constituted the separate property of Jafri Begum, both by the award and by reason of a gift made to her on her marriage.

- (5) That the share in Ludhai was acquired by Tassadduk Husain from his separate funds.

The District Judge fixed 18 issues raising these, and a number of other questions.

On the 21st April 1892, he delivered judgment, and decided that the Plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the estate, but not to partition, that sufficient cause had not been shown to remove Tassadduk Husain from his position as manager, and decreed Plaintiff one-half of the profits, the amount to be determined at the time of execution of the decree. The Judge said nothing about the five biswas share of Kukargoti nor about the Ludhai property.

From this decree the Plaintiff appealed, and the Judicial Commissioners remanded the case for another trial and the determination of the other issues.

Further evidence was taken and the District Judge found:—

- (1) That the suit was not barred by limitation.
- (2) That the custom relied on by Defendants had not been established.

MUSST. JAFRI BEGUM v. SYED ALI REZA.

(3) That the five biswas in dispute in Kukargoti had been given by Ashik Ali to Jafri Begum as dowry, but that the award in regard thereto was not binding, because the arbitrator was functus officio at the time of expressing his opinion.

(4) That Tassadduk Husain had purchased the share in Ludhai from his private funds.

On these findings, the Judicial Commissioners passed final judgment. They confirmed the findings that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the alleged custom had not been proved. They also agreed with the District Judge that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers in attempting to decide that Jafri Begum was the owner of five biswas in Kukargoti, but came to the conclusion that the gift of this property to Jafri Begum had not been established, and that Ludhai had been purchased from the profits of Ashik Ali's estate. They also held that the clause in the award in restraint of partition was invalid, and that Tassadduk Husain could be removed from the post of manager. In the result the Plaintiff obtained a decree for everything he claimed with costs.

As regards the defence that the suit is barred by limitation of time, their Lordships are of opinion that the suit is based on the award and is not a suit to set it aside. No doubt the Plaintiff contends that the 5th clause prohibiting partition is invalid or at any rate is not binding upon him; and that the arbitrator having made his award was then functus officio and had no jurisdiction to make the entry which he afterwards did make respecting the 5 biswas share of Kukargoti. But these contentions do not bring the case within Art. 91, Sch. 2 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. Under that Act a suit to cancel or set aside an award must be brought within three years from the time when the facts entitling the Plaintiff to have it cancelled or set aside became known to him. It is obvious that this limitation has no application to the controversy respecting the five biswas of Kukargoti. A Plaintiff who contends that an arbitrator has no power to make an unauthorised addition to an award already made and sought to be enforced by him is not in any sense seeking to cancel or set aside the award. Neither does the contention that the 5th clause is ultra vires and invalid bring the case within the Act. The Plaintiff disputes the legal effect of that particular clause, but does not seek to cancel or set aside the award. On the contrary he seeks to enforce it so far as it is operative in point of law. As regards the effect of the 5th clause their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioners that it affords no defence to the present action. It may have bound the parties who agreed amongst themselves to abide by it. But as against the present Plaintiff the clause has no effect whatever. The arbitrator had no power to alter the course of legal devolution in a mode at variance with the ordinary principles of Mahomedan law in the absence of a special custom prevailing in the family. He had no power to make property which was divisible by law, indivisible for ever.

MUSST. JAFRI BEGUM v. SYED ALI REZA.

As regards the alleged family custom by which the widows of Syed Ashik Ali excluded his daughters from the inheritance, it is sufficient to say that the award excludes its application, and that even if it did not, the alleged custom is not proved. Both Courts below have found against the existence of the custom; and the evidence in support of it is far too inconclusive to induce their Lordships to differ from the Courts below on this matter and to depart from their general rule not to disturb a finding of fact concurred in by two Courts who have investigated it.

The claim of Jafri Begum to a 5 biswas share of Kukargoti rests upon an alleged gift to her by her father Syed Ashik Ali on his marriage.

It is for the Defendants to prove that this gift was made and they called several witnesses who say that many years ago Ashik Ali gave her this property as her dowry. But no entry of the gift was made in his lifetime; no change of possession is proved; no separate receipt of rents is proved. Nothing in fact is proved sufficient to turn a loose verbal expression of a gift actual or intended into a completed gift or into a clear and distinct trust in favour of the daughter. Having carefully considered the evidence upon this part of the case their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the alleged gift is not proved. It is hardly necessary to add that the entry made by the arbitrator in the schedule of property after he had made his award is no part of his award and cannot confer any title on the Defendants.

There remains the share of Ludhai, purchased by the Defendant Tassadduk

Husain, in September 1885 for Rs. 4,000. If the Defendant bought this out of his own money, he of course will not be entitled to credit in respect of it on taking the accounts of Ashik Ali's estate. On the other hand if he paid for this share out of money for which he has to account he will get credit for the amount so paid, but then the share of Ludhai will belong to that estate. Until the accounts of Ashik Ali's estate are taken, and the application by the Defendant of the moneys he has received from it has been ascertained, it is difficult, indeed it is impossible, to determine out of what funds the purchase-money of the Ludhai share was paid. At present the case stands thus, there is no direct proof that Tassadduk Husain in fact bought the Ludhai share out of moneys which came to his hands as manager of Ashik Ali's estate. He has given no account of the application of his receipts. He has adduced evidence in order to show that he had in September 1885 means of his own sufficient to pay for the Ludhai share, but there is no satisfactory proof that he had; and no evidence that he did in fact pay for the share out of his own money. The District Judge thought that he had means to pay for it and found the share to be his. The Judicial Commissioners took a different view; they were not satisfied that in September 1885 Tassadduk Husain had means of his own sufficient to enable him to pay Rs. 4,000, and in the absence of any statement by him of the application of the revenues of Ashik Ali's estate, they held the Ludhai share to belong to that estate. Their Lordships consider the evidence insufficient to come to any satisfactory decision on this point.

MUSST. JAFRI BEGUM v. SYED ALI REZA.

one way or the other; and they are of opinion that its decision should be postponed until the accounts are taken.

The result therefore will be that they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree appealed from, should be varied by inserting a declaration that if on taking the accounts under the decree it shall appear that the whole or any part of the Ludhai share was paid for by the Defendant Tassadduk Husain out of his own separate property, then such share or such part thereof as may be found to have been so paid for is to be treated as his separate property.

Their Lordships are of opinion that in substance the appeal has failed, and that, notwithstanding the modification in the decree as regards the share of Ludhai, the costs of the appeal must be borne by the Appellants.

dwelling-house, it is impossible to compensate a person in respect of such a material misstatement, and the Court must either enforce the contract or rescind the sale. It is different in the case of land occupied for agricultural or such like purposes where there is a deficiency in area.

Ordered—That it be referred to the Registrar to enquire and report whether a title can be made to the property by the vendor. Further hearing adjourned until the return of the report.

This was an application by one Mohendra Nath Dutt, the purchaser of premises Nos. 38 and 38/1, Cathedral Mission Lane, sold by the Registrar under an order of this Court in the above suit, to be discharged from such purchase. The facts are shortly these:—One Digamber Dey died intestate in November 1894 leaving a widow and seven sons and, it was alleged, possessed of the house and premises in question. Administration to his estate was granted to his widow, the Defendant abovenamed, and she applied to this Court for liberty to raise a sum of Rs. 5,000 on a mortgage of the property of Digamber Dey in order to satisfy the outstanding liabilities of the estate. Permission was given to her to mortgage the property of the deceased, and she executed a mortgage of the above premises in favour of the Plaintiff. The present suit was instituted on the said mortgage, and on the 4th August 1898 the ordinary preliminary mortgage decree was made. The property was subsequently put up for sale under an order of this Court and was purchased by the applicant on the 11th August 1900 for Rs. 9,500.

The conditions of sale provided, inter alia, that the purchaser should furnish requisitions and objections, if any, within a fortnight after delivery of the abstract of title and upon the expiration of a fortnight (and in this respect time was to be deemed of the essence of the contract) the title was to be considered as approved of and accepted by the purchaser, subject only to such objections and requisitions, if any. Condition 14 provided as follows:—"There are no documents of title in the possession of the Plaintiff except the abstracted documents. The purchaser will not be entitled to call for any other documents or the original of documents of which the Plaintiff has only copies—he will assume that the recitals and statements contained in the abstracted documents are true and will accept the title as shown in the abstract of title."

On the 16th of August the abstract of title was furnished to the purchaser. The abstract started with the following recital:—"Digamber Dey was the owner of the premises No. 38, Panchanuntollah Lane (which lane has since been changed into Cathedral Mission Lane) in the town of Calcutta." Later on it stated "Digamber Dey died intestate on the 17th of November 1894, and his widow, the Defendant, Obhoy Kali Dassee, obtained letters of administration to the property and credits of her said deceased husband Digamber Dey, comprising, amongst others, the said premises No. 38, Panchanuntollah Lane, since changed into No. 38, Cathedral Mission Lane." On the 28th August the attorney for the purchaser inspected the documents of title; no objection or requisition whatsoever was made by the purchaser. On the 10th September he made an application to the Court for liberty to lodge the balance of the purchase-money. Permission was granted and he lodged the same without reserving his right to object to the title.

The purchaser now alleged that he had been misled by the representations contained in the conditions of sale and the abstract of title furnished to him into believing that Digamber Dutt was entitled to the whole sixteen annas share in the property sold to him, whereas he had since discovered that Digamber's interest in the said house was only eight-twelfths. According to the case made out by the applicant by his affidavit it appeared that on the 5th November he caused his attorney to write and send a letter to the tenant of the said premises demanding payment of the rent, and shortly thereafter he communicated with the adult sons of the said Digamber and his widow and asked them to attorn to him as tenants which at first they agreed to do; later on he was informed by them for the first time that he was not entitled to the whole of the house, but that there were other owners thereof than Digamber whose interest alone was sold at the Registrar's sale. The applicant thereupon made searches and inquiries and discovered that Digamber was only entitled at the time of his death to four-sixths of the house, that subsequent to the date of his death and on the 7th March 1895 the seven sons of Digamber had purchased the share of the only son of Gunga Narain Dey, a brother of Digamber, that on the 18th of March 1895 they had again purchased the shares in the property of two of the sons of Mathur Mohan Dey, another brother of Digamber. That is to say, he found that three-twelfths of the house belonged to the sons of Digamber in their own right and one-twelfth to the two other sons of Mathur Mohan who did not sell their interest. He therefore applied that the sale be rescinded and liberty given to him to withdraw the purchase-money which was still in Court to the credit of this suit.

Mr. Pugh (Mr. Biswas with him) for the Applicant.—We are not too late in making this objection. So long as the purchase-money remains in Court, the Court will in a proper case rescind the contract and not force upon the purchaser such a title as has been shewn in this case. We were clearly misled in the purchase by the statement in the abstract of title that Digamber was the owner of the house. See In re Banister, Broad v. Munton (5). That was a stronger case than the present, and yet the Court rescinded the contract.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the vendor-Plaintiff.—The purchaser is not entitled to re-open the matter now. He inspected the documents of title, but he raised no objections and made no requisitions for any other documents. The facts which he alleges he has discovered, he could have discovered then if he had made the ordinary searches. The sale has already been confirmed by the Court, and it is too late for him now to put forward objections and requisitions. Upon confirmation of the sale and the payment of the purchase-money, a purchaser must be deemed to have accepted the title. At all events, a reference should be made to the Registrar to inquire and report whether a title can be made to the property.

Mr. Pugh replied.

Mr. Aveloom for the Defendant.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

STANLEY, J.—The application in this case is made by one Mohendra Nath Dutt to be discharged from the purchase of premises Nos. 38 and 38/1, Cathedral Mission Lane, in the town of Calcutta, which was sold under an order of this Court in suit No. 158 of 1898. The grounds of his application are that he was misled in the purchase by misrepresentation or misrepresentations contained in the conditions of sale and the abstract of title furnished to him by the vendor. The suit was instituted on the 19th of February 1898 by Upendra Nath Mitter against Sreemutty Obhoy Kali Dassee as administratrix of the estate of Digamber Dey for recovery of monies due to him and secured by a mortgage of the 9th April 1897. The circumstances under which the mortgage was granted are as follows :—

Digamber Dey died intestate on the 17th of November 1894 leaving a widow and seven sons and possessed of the house and premises in question or of shares in this house. Administration was granted to the widow and she applied to the Court under sec. 90 of Act V of 1881 as amended by Act VI of 1889 for liberty to raise a sum of Rs. 5,000 on a mortgage of the property of the deceased Digamber Dey in order to satisfy outstanding liabilities of the estate. Permission was given to her so to mortgage the property of the deceased

Upendra Nath Mitter agreed to make the requisite advance, and a mortgage of this house abovementioned in his favour was executed. The mortgage debt having been called in and not having been paid, Upendra Nath Mitter instituted a suit for recovery of the amount due to him, and on the 4th of August 1898 the ordinary preliminary mortgage decree was made. The debt was not paid within the time limited by the decree and in consequence the property was put up for sale and was sold to Mohendra Nath Dutt on the 17th August 1900 for a sum of Rs. 9,500. On the 16th of August the abstract of title was furnished to the purchaser, and on the 28th of August the attorney for the purchaser had an opportunity of inspecting and he inspected the documents of title. No objection or requisition whatever was made by the purchaser, and on the 10th September he made an application to the Court for liberty to lodge the balance of the purchase-money and the same was lodged unconditionally, that is, without reserving his right to object to the title. Now the conditions of sale were somewhat stringent. It is necessary for me to refer to two, viz.: Conditions 6 and 14. By condition No. 6 it was provided that the purchaser should furnish requisitions and objections, if any, within a fortnight after delivery of the abstract and upon the expiration of a fortnight (and in this respect, time was to be deemed of the essence of the contract), the title was to be considered as approved of and accepted by the purchaser subject only to such objection and requisitions, if any. Condition 14 provides as follows :

UPENDRA NATH MITTER v. OBHOY KALI DASSEE.

"There are no documents of title in the possession of the Plaintiff except the abstracted documents. The purchaser will not be entitled to call for any other documents or the original of documents of which the Plaintiff has only copies; he will assume that the recitals and statements contained in the abstracted documents are true and will accept the title as shewn in the abstract of title."

No condition could be much more stringent than the 14th. Now the case which the purchaser makes is set out in an affidavit which has been filed by him on the 13th December 1900, and his case appears from a perusal of a few of the paragraphs in that affidavit. He says after referring to his purchase that on the 5th November 1900 he caused his attorney to write and send to Suresh Chunder Biswas, the only tenant of the said premises, a letter demanding payment of the rent, and shortly thereafter he communicated with the adult sons of the said Digamber Dey and his widow and asked them to attorn as tenants to him which at first they agreed to do, but later on he was told by them for the first time that he was not entitled to the whole of the house, and that there were other owners thereof than Digamber Dey whose interest alone was sold at the Registrar's sale. He then says he made searches and enquiries, and he discovered that Digamber Dey was only entitled at the time of his death to four-sixths of the house and premises; then he refers to two purchases made by the seven sons of Digamber Dey subsequent to the date of his death, one purchase being on the 7th of March 1895 of the share of the only son of Gunga Narain Dey, one of the brothers of Digamber Dey, of the share which Gunga Narain had in the property, and the other was a purchase made on the 18th of March 1895 of the shares in the property of two of the four sons of Mathur Mohan Dey, another brother of Digamber Dey. He alleges that three-twelfths of the property belong to the sons of Digamber Dey in their own right, and one-twelfth belongs to the two sons of Mathur Mohan Dey who did not sell their interest in the transaction of the 18th of March 1895. If this be correct, then it is clear that the administratrix of Digamber was only entitled to eight-twelfths of the property whereas, according to the abstract of title, it was represented to the purchaser that he was purchasing the entire sixteen annas share of the house and premises. If there was a misrepresentation such as is alleged, it appears to me to be clear that the matter is not one for compensation, but that the Court must either enforce the contract or rescind the sale. It would be impossible to compensate a purchaser in respect of such a material misstatement in the case of a purchase of a dwelling-house. In the case of land occupied for agricultural or such like purposes a deficiency in area, if it were not a deficiency of very great extent, would not entitle the purchaser to rescind his contract but would be a proper subject of compensation but to say that a purchaser, who believed that he was the purchaser of an entire dwelling-house and then discovers that what he is purchasing is not the entire but only an undivided share of such house, is to accept the undivided portion with compensation in respect of the remaining shares under his contract, is a very different matter and appears to me to be wholly unreasonable and contrary to fairness and justice. Whether the allegations contained in the affidavit of the purchaser are well founded or not, it seems to me it would not be proper for me without further investigation to determine. The evidence which he has furnished, undoubtedly, leads me to suspect that at all events two of the sons of Mathur Mohan Dey have some interest in the property. I should not, however, be justified in making any absolute order upon this application without giving the vendor an opportunity of having the entire title thoroughly sifted.

Mr. Woodroffe on behalf of the vendor however has argued and argued with great force that the purchaser is not entitled, having regard to his conduct and to the fact that the sale has already been confirmed by the Court to re-open the matter, and that it is too late for him after confirmation of the sale to put forward objections and requisitions. The administratrix has given the Court no assistance although presumably she must be aware of the purchases alleged to have been made by his sons in 1885. She has not given any explanation as to these purchases. She led the mortgagor undoubtedly to believe that Digamber was entitled to the entire dwelling-house in question and she induced him to advance his monies on the faith of her representation that such was the fact. Whether the purchases were made by her sons out of the assets of their father I am unable to say. It very possibly is the case that the purchase was so made.

Even, however, if it were shown that their interest in equity belonged to the estate of Digamber, there still would remain the difficulty to be dealt with as regards the interest which is stated to be enjoyed by the two sons of Mathur Mohan Dey.

Mr. Pugh on behalf of the purchaser contends that the purchaser is not too late in making this objection. He says that so long as the purchase-money remains in Court, the Court will in a proper case rescind the contract and not force upon the purchaser such a title as is the title which has been shewn in the present case.

Now let us see what are the misleading statements alleged by the purchaser. By order of this Court the administratrix was empowered to sell the interest of Digamber in his immoveable property. The abstract of title starts with the following recital:—

“Digamber Dey was the owner of the premises No. 38, Panchanuntollah Lane, (which lane has since been changed into Cathedral Mission Lane) in the town of Calcutta.” This is a positive statement that Digamber was the owner of the premises No. 38. Was there anything to justify this statement? Further on in the abstract, before the recital of this grant of letters of administration to the widow of Digamber, is the following statement:—“Digamber Dey died intestate on the 17th of November 1894, and his widow, the Defendant Obhoy Kali Dassee, obtained letters of administration of the property and credits of her said deceased husband Digamber Dey, comprising amongst others the said premises No. 38, Panchanuntollah

UPENDRA NATH MITTER v. OBHOY KALI DASSEE.

Lane, since changed into No. 38, Cathedral Mission Lane." There again is a positive statement that the property which has been put up for sale were the premises, (I take it the entire sixteen annas share) No. 38, Cathedral Mission Lane. Such a statement was undoubtedly in my opinion calculated to mislead a purchaser. I don't say that it was inserted in the abstract fraudulently or intentionally. On the contrary the statement was inserted, I believe, perfectly bonâ fide and in the belief induced by the conduct of the administratrix that Digamber at the time of his death was possessed of the entire sixteen annas share in the premises. If it was necessary for the purchaser to establish any case of fraudulent misconduct or wilful misleading on the part of the vendor in the preparation of the abstract, I should be unable to say that he had succeeded in doing so. Is then the objection which is now raised open to the purchaser, having regard to the fact that he has accepted the title so far as acceptance can be inferred from raising no objection or requisition and from paying the balance of the purchase-money into Court without reserving any right to object to the title, and having regard to the rule of Court which declares that upon confirmation of sale and payment of the purchase-money a purchaser is to be deemed to have accepted the title? I think so.

In the case of Lachlan v. Reynolds (1) there was a sale by the direction of the Court; the particulars of sale stated, that Lot 12 comprised a house "at present in the occupation of a Mrs. Clark at a rental of per annum £42."

The purchaser of this lot paid the deposit, and his purchase was confirmed by order absolute, and he then obtained an order for payment of the remainder of the purchase-money into Court. The purchaser afterwards discovered that Mrs. Clarke was not tenant to the vendors, but to some person who claimed by an adverse title. It was held by the Court that this representation "amounted to such bad faith on the vendor's part, as would induce the Court to discharge the purchaser from his contract."

It is to be observed in this case that the Court found bad faith on the part of the vendor. I only cite the case for the purpose of establishing the proposition that the Court will set aside the sale even after the sale has been confirmed by an order absolute. In the case of M'Culloch v. Gregory (2), a purchaser under a decree having accepted the title and paid the purchase-money into Court discovered that a Will had been misstated in the abstract, in such a manner as to conceal an important defect in the title. Upon petition before conveyance, the purchaser was discharged from his purchase, and his purchase-money was ordered to be repaid but without interest inasmuch as his solicitor had omitted to examine the original Will though reminded to do so by the counsel who advised upon the abstract. For the same reason the purchaser was ordered to pay the costs of all parties except of the person who had the conduct of the sale. It was further held that a purchaser is not conclusively bound by the acceptance of the title by his counsel; but if he pays his purchase-money into Court, he is bound. This rule, however, does not apply to a case where the counsel is misled by the abstract of title.

(1) Kay's Re p. 52 (1853).

(2) Kay & Johnson 286 (1855).

UPENDRA NATH MITTER v. OBHOY KALI DASSEE.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood says at p. 291 :—"The purchaser here received an abstract which he supposed to be correct. It often happens with regard to copies of instruments of this description, that the purchaser rests satisfied, although the conveyancer invariably suggests, as he did in this case, that the probate or an official extract of the Will should be examined. If the conveyance had been executed, the purchaser must have taken all the conveyances, and, as it is said in Thomas v. Powell (3), he must have rested on the covenants, and having neglected the opportunity of examining the original documents, he could not now rescind the purchase."

These are cases in which there was misleading by the abstract. In Else v. Else (4), where a sale was made by the Court of Chancery under conditions which precluded the purchaser from objecting to the title prior to the document chosen as root of title, and which made recitals in deeds more than twenty years old conclusive, a recital, covered by this condition, was so framed as to conceal a defect of title prior to the date fixed for commencement of title. The purchaser inquired into the prior title, and refused to complete on the ground that the prior title was bad; and the Court, being of opinion that such objection was well founded, held that the sale being by the Court, the purchaser was not precluded by the conditions from raising the objection, and ought to be discharged from his purchase.

Lord Romilly at p. 200 says :—"I am of opinion that these conditions of sale are not such as a Court of Equity can enforce on a purchaser. They amount to a condition, in fact, to the effect that if you find you have not got the property, and cannot keep it, you shall not object. Practically this is a condition saying that although you imagine you have been sold the fee, still, though you find that you have only bought an estate for the life of a man advanced in years, you must keep the property and pay the price because you have been foolish enough to buy subject to such conditions of sale. The argument is, that you have shut your eyes, and have got the property at a reduced price (which is probably true); and you therefore have run the risk of being ultimately ejected against the reduction of price. I do not mean to express any opinion as to how the Court would look at this question if it arose between two strangers.

"A buyer, no doubt, knows that unusual conditions of sale are framed to meet peculiar difficulties; and these are quite fair, even where framed by the Court, if they will still, in the opinion of the Court, leave the purchaser in the complete possession of the thing he has bought, even though he does not get what is called a marketable title; but if not, the Court has no right to enter into such contests, and try to fence with and outwit purchasers, and sell on the chance of the purchaser being able to resist a suit for the recovery of the possession of the lands on a defect not disclosed to him. I am of opinion that such a condition would be bad as a fraudulent misleading condition in any sale, for it professes, or induces the buyer to believe, that the recital accurately represents the Will, which it does not. But in a sale under the authority of the Court of Chancery, which, above all things, ought to teach others, and set them the example of straightforward dealing, and telling the truth, and the whole truth, such a condition under the circumstances of this case, is, in my opinion, binding on no one. No good title being shewn, and the purchaser not being bound by the conditions of sale to accept a bad one, he must be discharged from his purchase, and have his costs of the whole proceedings."

(3) 2 Cox. 394 (1794).

(4) L. R. 13 Eq. 196 (1872).

UPENDRA NATH MITTER v. OBHOY KALI DASSEE.

Mr. Pugh relied very strongly on the case of In re Banister, Broad v. Munton (5). In that case there was a provision in the conditions of sale, that the purchaser should be satisfied with the title which had been acquired by one Esther Banister, the predecessor in title of the vendor. "The condition further stated that it was not accurately known, and could not be satisfactorily explained, how she, Esther Banister, acquired the property, and it was expressly stipulated that no other title than as above should be required or inquired into."

It turned out on inquiry that Esther Banister was a mortgagee in possession and had no title against the mortgagor except under the statute of limitations by adverse possession and these facts were known to this vendor. The learned Judges in the Court of Appeal in holding that the condition was misleading, and that the purchaser was entitled notwithstanding the condition to have a good holding title or else to rescind his contract, carefully abstained from finding that there was any fraudulent conduct on the part of the vendor in the matter of the conditions. Lord Justice Brett refers to the doctrine upon which I am prepared to base my decision in this case and which appears to be sound and consistent with the practice of the Court of Equity. At page 147 he observes as follows:—

"But then there comes in the doctrine that if there be a misrepresentation of facts, however innocently made, the Court of Equity will not enforce the performance of the contract. Now here you have facts which were known to the trustee before the condition was drawn up, which when shown to the Court oblige the Court to say that it would be wrong to ask the purchaser to assume that which is the purport of the assumption he is required to make. And there are facts which were known to the trustee which when shown to the Court oblige the Court to say that it might have been accurately known and satisfactorily explained how Esther Banister acquired the property."

Under the circumstances he held that the title could not be forced on the purchaser. In the present case, the vendor knew or at all events had before him the means of knowing that it was only the interest of Digamber Dey in this property which was comprised in his mortgage, and therefore it appears to me that if the allegations of the purchaser are true and as a matter of fact a third of the beneficial interest in the house and premises is not vested in the vendor, the conditions of sale were misleading, and this Court ought not to enforce this contract,

UPENDRA NATH MITTER v. OBHOY KALI DASSEE.

Mr. Woodroffe has asked me, in case I should be against him upon the question as to the right of the purchaser to have a rescission of the contract, under any circumstances I should first refer it to the Registrar to enquire and report whether a title can be made to the property, and, as I have already intimated, this is a proper course in my opinion. I shall therefore refer it to the Registrar to ascertain and enquire whether title can be made by the vendor and I shall adjourn the further hearing of this application until the return of the report. It appears to me that in any event the purchaser who has been very negligent in carrying out this sale and who purchased with his eyes open under stringent conditions of sale and now seeks to be relieved of his purchase, must bear the costs of this application, but for the present, I prefer to reserve the question of costs. I may observe as regards the administratrix that she appears not to be entitled to any consideration in the matter of costs; however I shall also reserve the question of costs in her case, as also the vendor's costs. The case is one of no little difficulty. Whatever be the result of the enquiry I have directed, it is perfectly clear in the matter of this small mortgage transaction that the parties have subjected themselves to a very heavy burden in the matter of costs.

and the meaning of the others at the best ambiguous and doubtful, the plain language of the one ought not to be over-ridden or controlled by the obscure utterances of the others.

Where it was alleged that the interpolation of the words "but of a lower class" in Manu, Chap. IX, verse 122, was by mistake attributed by Sir William Jones to Kalluka Bhatta whereas it was interpolated by a later and inferior commentator and the interpolation had been accepted by the Indian Courts:

Held—That the maxim communis error facit jus is a sound maxim.

Manu, Chap. IX, verses 122 to 125 discussed.

The suit related to the succession of the taluk of Pawansi which after the annexation of Oudh was by a sanad granted to a lady, named Kablas Kunwar, widow of Mahpal Singh. Her name was entered in the first and second lists under sec. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act. In Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council had held that the sanad conferred a full proprietary and transferable right in the estate upon Kablas and her heirs male according to the rule of primogeniture, and that the succession to her descendants must be governed by the provisions of sec. 22 of Act I of 1869, and that accordingly the estate descended to Janki Kunwar, the daughter and only child of Kablas Kunwar.

Janki Kunwar died childless on the 16th December 1888. There was no dispute that the succession must be to the heirs of her father and both or one or other of the sons of Raghunath if living would be entitled to succeed to the taluk on her death.

The parties were related to Raghunath in the following manner:—

RAGHUNATH.

Bishnath Kunwar, 1st wife.	Raj Kunwar, Junior wife.
Sitla Baksh.	Shankar Baksh.
Jagdish Bahadur, great-grandson and heir, (Plaintiff).	Sheo Pertab, (Defendant).

Shankar Baksh was born before his half-brother Sitla Baksh. The suit was originally instituted by Sitla Baksh on the death of Janki Koer, and the present Appellant was substituted in his place on his death.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant.

Mr. Mayne and Mr. Cowell for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DAVEY.—The present Appellant is the great-grandson and heir of Sitla Baksh, the original Plaintiff, and was substituted for the latter on his death after the commencement of the suit. The Respondent is the son and heir of Shankar Baksh. Sitla Baksh was the son of Raghunath by his first wife Bish Nath Kunwar. Shankar Baksh was also the son of Raghunath but by his junior wife Raj Kunwar. Shankar Baksh was born before his half-brother Sitla Baksh and was therefore the elder-born son of Raghunath.

The suit relates to the succession of the taluk of Pawansi which after the annexation of Oudh was by sanad granted to a lady, named Kablas Kunwar, the widow of Mahpal Singh. Her name was entered in the first and second lists mentioned in sec. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. In the case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Rane Janki Koer (1) the succession of the taluk on the death of Kablas Kunwar was determined by this Board. Their Lordships there held that the sanad conferred and was intended to confer a full proprietary and transferable right in the estate upon Kablas and her heirs male according to the law of primogeniture and as regards the succession they considered that the rights of the parties claiming by descent must be governed by the provisions of sec. 22 of Act I of 1869. This Board, therefore, held that under cl. 11 of sec. 22 the estate descended to Janki Kunwar, the daughter and only child of Kablas Kunwar, as the person entitled under the ordinary law to which persons of her mother's religion and tribe were subject.

Janki Kunwar died childless on the 16th December 1888. It is not disputed that the succession must be to the heirs of her father and both or one or other of the sons of Raghunath if living would be entitled to succeed to the taluk on her death.

The Plaintiff by his plaint claimed to be entitled to the entire taluk together with all other moveable and immoveable property of Janki on the ground that being born of the first wife he was entitled to inherit the entire taluk and other property according to the custom obtaining among his clan and by law. Alternatively he contended that the taluk was or had become partible and claimed to be entitled to a 9 annas share as son of the first wife of Raghunath or at any rate to an 8 annas share.

The latter claim was maintained on the ground that Janki having succeeded under the provisions of clause 11 of sec. 22 the estate was no longer subject to the provisions of the Act of 1869 but descended from her as an estate under the ordinary Hindu law and not as an impartible estate and was therefore partible between the two brothers. By his defence the Defendant contended that the estate was impartible by custom. A vast amount of evidence was taken upon this question but in the opinion of their Lordships unnecessarily. The point is concluded by authority. In the case of Dewan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (2) their Lordships said:—"A question might arise upon the construction of clause 11 of sec. 22 whether the estate descended as an impartible estate. Their Lordships are of opinion looking to the provisions of Act I of 1869, list 2, sec. 8 and sec. 22, that it was the intention of the Legislature that the estate should descend as an impartible estate."

The only question which remains as regards the succession therefore is whether the original Plaintiff as son of the first wife of his father was either by custom or by the common law entitled to succeed in preference to his elder brother born of a junior wife. Evidence was taken by the District Judge on the claim by custom, and that learned Judge, after an exhaustive review of the evidence, came to the conclusion that the alleged custom was not proved, and that decision was affirmed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. There being thus two concurrent judgments on a question of fact, their Lordships are relieved from examining the evidence and were not asked by counsel to do so.

The question involved in the claim of the Plaintiff by law apart from custom has been considered by this Board in two cases. In Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (3) this Board decided that the son of a junior wife was entitled to succeed to an impartible zemindary in preference to the later-born son of a senior wife. It is true that in that case the mother of the younger son, although married before the mother of the elder son, was not the first wife and therefore it is said not to be a direct authority. In Pedda Ramappa Nayanivaru v. Bangari Seshamma Nayanivaru (4) a first-born son, though by the fourth wife, was held to be entitled to succeed in preference to a younger son born of the third and senior wife whose marriage was subsequent to the deaths of the first two wives. The grounds of the judgment are shown very clearly in the passages which are quoted at length by the Judicial Commissioner (Rec. p. 456) and their Lordships will not repeat them. It was laid down that the principles upon which the Board held in the former case that the first-born was entitled to succeed apply equally to a son of a first-married wife and sons of other wives and that being so it lay upon the Defendant to show some positive rule of Hindu law supported either by ancient text or modern decision to the contrary effect which had not been done.

The grounds upon which the learned counsel for the Appellant endeavoured to escape from the authority of these cases were these. The verses of the laws of Manu which were referred to by their Lordships are those numbered 122 to 125 in Ch. 9. In Sir William Jones' translation the 122nd and 125th verses are as follows:—"122. A younger son being born of a first-married wife after an elder son had been born of a wife last married but of a lower class it may be a doubt in that case how the division shall be made. 125. As between sons born of wives equal in their class and without any other distinction there can be no seniority in right of the mother but the seniority ordained by law is according to the birth." The words printed in italics were accepted by Sir William Jones as being and, until recently, were generally believed to be, the interpolation of an ancient commentator of great eminence named Kalluka Bhatta. It is said to have been discovered by the research of scholars that the interpolation was not made by Kalluka Bhatta but by a later and inferior commentator named Prakash, and that statement seems to have been accepted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It is thereupon argued that verse 122 (with the omission of the interpolated words) and the two following verses are inconsistent with verse 125 which thus loses any binding authority.

Their Lordships assume for the purposes of their judgment that Sir William Jones was mistaken in attributing the words interpolated in verse 122 to Kal-luka Bhatta. But they observe that Sir William Jones' version was probably founded on the tradition of the time at which he wrote and has been accepted in the Indian Courts without question. Communis error facit jus is a sound maxim. Their Lordships, however, do not rely upon this consideration alone. The Judicial Commissioner has learnedly discussed the various translations which have been proposed by scholars and the interpretations given by them to the four verses in question and their relation to each other, and he refers to the opinion expressed by Dr. Jolly in his Tagore Lectures, 1883. The Judicial Commissioner concludes:—"As the correct translation of verse 123 is doubtful, and as Manu's own answer to the question propounded by him in verse 122 cannot be clearly ascertained, it appears to me that the Appellant has failed to establish satisfactorily his contention by the texts quoted by him."

(4) L. R. 8 I. A. 1 (1880).

JAGDISH BAHADUR v. SHEO PERTAB SINGH.

Their Lordships think this is firm ground for decision. The language of verse 125 is reasonably free from ambiguity while the meaning of the previous verses is at the best ambiguous and doubtful. The plain language of the one ought not to be overridden or controlled by the obscure utterances in the other. They, therefore, think that no sufficient reason is shewn why they should not follow the two previous decisions of this Board and that they ought to do so. They, therefore, hold that according to Hindu law the Respondent who represents the eldest son of his father is entitled to succeed in preference to the Appellant who represents the younger son though born of the first wife. Their Lordships will only add that this decision appears to them as it did to their predecessors to be in accordance with the religious tenets of Hindus. It is by the birth of his first-born son that a Hindu discharges the duty which he owes to his ancestors and obtains spiritual benefits for himself and therefore it is to that son that pre-eminence should be given.

A subsidiary point was raised by the Appellant's counsel, viz., whether any difference is to be made in the succession to the moveable property of Janki. No such point was raised by the plaint in which the moveable and other immoveable property is treated in the same category with the taluk itself, and the same considerations are treated as applicable to the whole property as one corpus. The fifth issue is whether the Plaintiff is by law or custom entitled to the whole of the taluka with other property pertaining to it. And no issue is directed to any distinction between different portions of the property claimed. The District Judge held that the question did not arise and if it did, there was no evidence to show that such property was subject to a different rule of devolution. He also referred to the case of Thakur Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh (5) before this Board.

The Judicial Commissioner took the same view and their Lordships entirely agree.

They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed and the Appellant must pay the costs of it.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Appellants to recover money due under a mortgage deed executed by the Defendants in favour of the predecessor in title of the Plaintiffs, and for certain other sums of money claimed as damages, on the allegation that the mortgage security has been impaired by reason of a decree obtained by one Bhagoban Chandra Naskar against the Plaintiffs, and that the Plaintiffs had to incur expense in the litigation with Bhagoban Chandra Naskar.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to refer to it for the purposes of this appeal, was a denial of liability, on the ground of no money having been borrowed on the mortgage deed, and also on the ground that the Plaintiffs' prayer for foreclosure and sale was illegal, and on the further ground that the mortgage security was not impaired by any wrongful act on the part of the Defendants.

The first Court held that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree for sale of the mortgaged property, but that they were entitled to a decree making the Defendants personally liable for the amount claimed by reason of the mortgage security having been impaired through the wrongful conduct of the Defendants.

Against that decree the Defendants preferred an appeal; and they were allowed by the Appellate Court to take the objection, not raised by them either in the first Court or in their memorandum of appeal, that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree by reason of their not having taken out a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, VII of 1889; and the lower Appellate Court has given effect to that objection and dismissed the suit under sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act.

From that decision of the lower Appellate Court the Plaintiffs have preferred this appeal; and it is contended on their behalf that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was a bar to the maintenance of this suit, and that the Court of Appeal below was further wrong in allowing the objection under that section to be raised in the appellate stage of the case, without giving the Plaintiffs an opportunity of producing a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act.

If the first branch of the Appellants' contention is right, it will be unnecessary to go into the second. We are of opinion that the first branch of the Appellants' contention is correct. The mortgage in this case was a usufructuary mortgage, and one of the objections successfully urged by the Defendants in the first Court was that the Plaintiffs were precluded by the terms of the mortgage deed from suing for the money, the ground upon which the Plaintiffs were held by that Court to be entitled to a decree was that by reason of events that subsequently happened their mortgage security was impaired, and they acquired the right to obtain a personal decree against the mortgagors. If that was so, can it be said that the money for which this suit has been brought was a debt due to the estate of the deceased mortgagor within the meaning of sec. 4, sub-sec. 1, cl. (a) of the Succession Certificate Act? We are of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. The case before us is not like a case in which the money was due to the deceased person upon the expiry of a certain time when it fell due. The case before us is one in which, if the security had remained unimpaired, the right to demand payment of the money would never have accrued to the mortgagee or his legal representatives, and the right to obtain a personal decree against the mortgagors arose only upon the happening of a contingency which might never have happened, namely, the obtaining of a decree by Bhagoban Chunder Naskar which deprived the mortgagee's heirs, the Plaintiffs, of a part of the mortgaged property. That decree was obtained not against the original mortgagee but against the Plaintiffs themselves. That being so, we think the right to demand payment of the money accrued for the first time to the Plaintiffs, and sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was therefore no bar to the Plaintiffs obtaining a decree in this suit.

In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider the second branch of the Appellants' contention; but we may observe that it is open to doubt whether the District Judge was right in allowing the objection under sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act to be taken in the appellate stage of the case, when the objection was not raised before the first Court, without giving the Plaintiffs an opportunity of meeting it by producing a succession certificate.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside, and the case sent back to that Court in order that it may dispose of the other points raised in the appeal before it.

The Appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal. All other costs will abide the result.

under secs. 193, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

The proceedings which gave rise to the present rule arose out of the case of the King-Emperor against Sadak Ali and others under sec. 302, I. P. Code. The Petitioner, who was holding at the time the office of District Superintendent of Police of Noakhali, was cited as a witness for the defence in that case. He was, however, called by the Sessions Judge himself on the 16th of January 1901, and was examined for three consecutive days. On the 7th of February he was ordered to enter into recognizances for appearance in the Sessions Court on the 11th following, and on any subsequent date to which the case might be adjourned. On the 15th February the Sessions Judge delivered his judgment in the case, and on that day he had the Petitioner arrested and committed to jail on charges under secs. 193, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The 25th was fixed for commencing the preliminary inquiry. No proceeding was, however, drawn up on that date (the 15th), the order which is the subject of the present rule being recorded only on the following day, viz., the 16th of February.

The order was in the following terms:—

"In the course of the Sessions trial of Empress v. Sadak Ali and three others decided yesterday, I came to the opinion, for reasons stated in my judgment then delivered, that W. Y. Reily, Superintendent of Police of this district, has committed offences under secs. 193, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code, and that it is my duty to hold an inquiry preliminary to committing him to the High Court to be tried for those offences.

Mr. Reily was yesterday arrested and committed to jail. There was then no time owing to the lateness of the hour to draw up this formal proceeding. He will be produced before me as directed in the warrant on the 25th February, when evidence will be taken."

After the disposal of the appeal in the murder case (Empress v. Sadak Ali and others) in the High Court, the Petitioner applied for and obtained the present rule in the following terms:—

"Let a rule issue on the Magistrate of the district to show cause why the proceedings instituted against the Petitioner under secs. 193, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code by the Sessions Judge of Noakhali on the 16th February last should not be set aside, first, on the ground that they are not warranted by law, as there was no formal proceeding drawn up on the day when he was committed to jail; secondly, on the ground that no specific statements are set out in the proceeding drawn up on the 16th of February upon which the Petitioner is charged with having committed perjury; thirdly, on the ground that there are no statements in the said proceeding showing the character of the forgery charged against him under the sections referred to above; and, fourthly, on the ground that otherwise there is no foundation for the proceeding against the Petitioner or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem fit and proper."

"Meanwhile all proceedings will be stayed. The usual time for making rules returnable from the district of Noakhali is a fortnight, but as the records are here, and the Petitioner states in his verified petition that he is a public officer under suspension, we make this rule returnable this day week."

"We have ascertained from the officer of the Court that in special cases this has been done and we see no reason why we should not take the same course."

"Let the rule be issued to-day."

Mr. Henderson and Babu Kritant Kumar Bose for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to shew cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This proceeding arises out of the case of the King-Emperor against Sadak Ali and others disposed of by us on the 17th instant. The Petitioner, who was holding at the time the office of District Superintendent of Police at Noakhali, appears to have been cited as a witness for the defence in that case. He was, however, called by the Sessions Judge himself on the 16th of January and was examined for three consecutive days. On the 7th of February he was ordered to enter into recognizances for appearance in the Sessions Court on the 11th following, and on any subsequent date to which the case may be adjourned. On the 15th of February the Sessions Judge delivered his judgment in the case, and on that day he had the Petitioner arrested and committed to jail on charges under secs. 193, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The 25th was fixed for commencing the preliminary inquiry. No proceeding was drawn up on that date (the 15th), the order now before us being recorded only on the following day, namely, the 16th of February. That order is in these terms :—"In the course of the Sessions trial of Empress v. Sadak Ali and three others decided yesterday, I came to the opinion, for reasons stated in my judgment then delivered, that W. Y. ## IN THE MATTER OF W. Y. REILY v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure, which provides that "subject to the provisions of sec. 444 the Court of Session may charge a person for any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding and may commit or admit to bail and try such person upon its own charge." It is an empowering section, and authorises a Court of Session when an offence referred to in sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been committed before it or brought under its notice as mentioned in the section, to charge the offender and to commit, or admit to bail and try him upon its own charge. We observe that the Sessions Judge in one part of his judgment thinks the word "may" ought to be read as "must." There is no warrant, however, for that view. Having regard, then, to the phraseology of the law, it appears to us that if a Court of Session proceeds to take action under sec. 477 it must in the first instance frame a charge so as to enable the accused to know the exact nature of the offence he is alleged to have committed. A charge is a precise formulation of the specific accusation made against a person, who is entitled to know its nature at the earliest stage. After the accusation has been formulated in the shape of a charge, the Sessions Court may then either commit the accused for trial before itself upon the charge so framed, or admit him to bail for the same purpose. In the matter before us the Sessions Judge had framed no charge when he had the Petitioner arrested and sent to jail, nor was his proceeding of the 16th of February in any sense a charge or order of commitment. It contains no particulars of the statements made and acts done by the Petitioner upon which perjury and forgery are charged against him. In our opinion the proceeding of the 16th of February was not warranted by law. The order states that "Mr. Reily was yesterday arrested and committed to jail. There was then no time, owing to the lateness of the hour, to draw up this formal proceeding. He will be produced before me, as directed in the warrant, on the 25th February, when evidence will be taken." So that the Petitioner against whom no definite accusation had been formulated up to that time, and in whose case, according to the Sessions Judge himself, a preliminary inquiry was necessary, was to be kept in jail for nine days before even the matter could be inquired into. A preliminary inquiry is necessary for the purpose of determining whether there is a prima facie case against the person accused. As the Sessions Judge did not charge the Petitioner as he was empowered to do, and as he considered a preliminary inquiry necessary, it seems to us that until then, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge, there was not even a prima facie case against the Petitioner. In view of these facts we cannot help regarding the action of the Sessions Judge with the strongest disapproval.

Apart from the illegality of the order as already mentioned, and dealing with the merits of the case, we are of opinion that there is no foundation for the proceeding. We have already expressed our opinion in the judgment in the main case respecting the allegations of perjury made against the Petitioner. We do not desire to repeat our observations. We may add, however that we have again gone through the judgment of the Sessions Judge, and beyond surmises and assumptions we find nothing to justify the view that the Petitioner wilfully perjured himself or intentionally gave false evidence in Court.

There is less ground even for the charge of forgery. On the 15th of September the Petitioner had visited the village and had a sketch map prepared of the locality by the writer head-constable Mohim Chunder. A fair copy was made afterwards and both the draft and the fair copy were produced at the trial and are marked respectively as Exhibits Aa and A. Exhibit A bears the signature of the Petitioner, and the date 15th September. The learned Sessions Judge thinks that Exhibit A could not have been prepared on the 15th, and he therefore comes to the conclusion that the Petitioner had purposely antedated his signature, "because he did not want Mr. Ezechiel to know that Exhibit A was a copy. He wanted Mr. Ezechiel to believe that it was a plan made by himself on the 15th instead of being, as it really is, a copy made after the 15th of a plan made partly in and in great part (and that the most important part) out of Mr. Reily's presence on the 14th, 15th and possibly subsequent dates." It is worthy of note that not a single question was put to the Petitioner to enable him to explain the circumstances under which he came to put the date on the map as the 15th September. Again, it appears that there are two pencil marks on Exhibit Aa which the Petitioner states were intended to indicate two breaks on one of the roads. These two pencil marks are not shown on Exhibit A. The Petitioner explains the absence of those marks by saying:—"It might be an omission on the part of Mohim Chunder. The Sessions Judge, however, thinks that the Petitioner tampered with Exhibit Aa after it had been prepared. We must quote here the Judge's own language. Referring to the draft he says as follows:—

"The rough map is Exhibit Aa. Mr. Reily admits that he had it in his hand two days before Tarak Babu examined him, i.e., on the first day of his examination. He had therefore the opportunity of tampering with it. And it is very significant that Bharat Babu, who says in cross-examination that he saw the draft as it was made, declared, even without taking it into his hand, that he did not see Exhibit Aa the plan Mr. Reily swears is the draft, and when pressed says that he cannot say for certain whether or not it is the draft. I think most likely it is the draft, but that Bharat Babu knows it has been added to and does not want to be asked about the additions. Both Exhibits A and Aa are the work of the head constable Mohim Chunder Mozumdar. And as Exhibit A has nothing of Mr. Reily's but his signature and the date, so Exhibit Aa has nothing of his but certain pencil marks shortly to be noticed. Both the entries are false documents within the meaning of sec. 464 of the Indian Penal Code; for in each case Mr. Reily's intention, when he made the entry was to make people (in the first case Mr. Ezechiel, in the second this Court) believe that the entry was made at a time later at which he knew that it was not made, and as the documents purported to be made by a public servant in his official capacity, Mr. Reily, by making them, appear to have committed offences under secs. 466 of the Indian Penal Code, and by using them, as genuine, to have committed offences under sec. 471." In page 127 occurs this remarkable passage :—"I now come to the draft Exhibit Aa. Mohim Chunder Mozumdar who made this draft says he did not show any break in it at all, that he was never told to, and did not think it necessary to. But Mr. Reily points to two pencil marks at the place marked Exhibit Aa and says he made these to indicate the break, and so I have no doubt he did make them, but I have equally little doubt that he made them on the 16th January 1901, and not on the 15th September 1900. Mr. Reily explains the absence of any such marks from Exhibit A by saying it might be an omission on the part of Mohim. But the far more obvious explanation is that Mr. Reily was unable to tamper with Exhibit A."

IN THE MATTER OF W. Y. REILY v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It is needless to refer to the absence of sequence in the reasoning or the assumptions on which it proceeds. Taking it however that Exhibit A was purposely antedated to deceive Mr. Ezechiel, and that the pencil marks were put in Exhibit Aa after it had been prepared, we fail to see how the Petitioner could be charged under secs. 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. Sec. 463 which defines the term "forgery" runs as follows :—"Whoever makes any false document or part of a document with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person or to support any claim or title, or to cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract, or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery." Sec. 464 then explains the expression "making a false document." The elements of fraud or dishonesty, as explained in the Penal Code, must be present in the mind of the person accused to bring his act under secs. 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. In our opinion the charge against the Petitioner of committing forgery or making use of a forged document even upon the assumptions of the Sessions Judge cannot be sustained. But in our judgment there is no ground for the assumption of the Judge that Exhibit A was purposely antedated. The inspection of the locality having unquestionably taken place on the 15th and the results noted in Exhibit Aa, the fair copy, when ever prepared (and excepting the hypothesis of the Sessions Judge there is nothing to show it could not have been prepared on that day) would naturally bear the date of the inspection, and any other date would misrepresent the fact.

As regards the pencil marks on Exhibit Aa, there is absolutely no reason for suggesting them to be dishonest interpolations by the Petitioner or for not accepting the explanations regarding their omission from Exhibit A. It was no doubt wrong on the part of the Petitioner not to have insisted on the breaks being shown on the maps, and that error of judgment is deserving of censure, but in our opinion the imputation of forgery and of having used a forged document is not only groundless but a straining of the law as well as the facts.

We may observe in this connection that the offence of giving false evidence under sec. 193 is bailable, so also is the offence of using a forged document, sec. 471, whilst forgery, sec. 466, is non-bailable. It was unfortunate that the Sessions Judge applied sec. 466 against the Petitioner in the way he has done, as it gives colour to the suggestion made at the Bar that it was purposely used to deprive the Petitioner of the right of bail.

We regret to observe that in dealing with this matter the Sessions Judge does not seem to have maintained a judicial balance of mind.

* For these reasons we think that his order must be set aside, and we set it aside accordingly.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 215 OF 1901.

AMEER ALI, J.	}	MOHIM CHUNDER
PRATT, J.		MOZUMDAR, Petitioner,
1901.		v.
17, April.		THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 195, 477—Bail, order for, before commitment—Preliminary enquiry—Charge, framing of, if absolutely necessary—Jurisdiction—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193—False evidence, giving of.

Sec. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates that there should be a charge upon which the commitment is based; in other words, the person accused of having committed the offence should know the specific nature of the accusation against him so as to be able to answer it.

Where an order was made directing a witness to give bail before a Court of Session, and to appear when called upon before such Court to answer charges under sec. 193, I. P. Code, without any reference to the specific false statements alleged to have been made by the witness in the course of a judicial proceeding, it was held that the order could not be regarded as a commitment under sec. 477, Cr. P. Code.

Such an order is not warranted by law and is without jurisdiction.

This was a rule issued on the 12th of March 1901, against the order of the Sessions Judge of Noakhali, dated the 16th of February 1901.

The rule was in the following terms:—

Let a rule issue on the Magistrate of the District to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge of Noakhali made on the 16th February last requiring the Petitioner to give bail of Rs. 300 to appear when called upon before the Court of Session to answer charges under sec. 193, I. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground, firstly, that it is wholly irregular and made without jurisdiction, and, secondly, that no opportunity was given to the accused to read over his deposition, nor was any charge framed, against him so as to enable him to know the nature of his offence, nor any enquiry made as required by sec. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem fit and proper: and let the record and proceedings connected with this matter be sent for.

Pending the hearing of the rule all further proceedings will be stayed.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The Petitioner, a suspended head constable of Police, was a witness for the defence in the case of Empress v. Sadak Ali and others in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Noakhali.

He was examined before A. P. Pennell, Esq., Sessions Judge of Noakhali, on the 21st January 1901.

On the 16th February 1901, the day after the judgment in the case of Empress v. Sadak Ali and others was delivered, the Sessions Judge of Noakhali recorded an order by which the Petitioner was committed to the Court of Session to take his trial for offences under sec. 193, I. P. C.

Before the order of commitment of the Petitioner to the Court of Session was passed, no proceedings against him were drawn up in which the reasons of his having committed offences under sec. 193, I. P. C., were set forth; nor was any formal charge drawn up against him and the Petitioner was not required to give in his list of witnesses he wished to summon to give evidence on his trial.

Mr. C. R. Das and Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This rule arises out of the case which we disposed of to-day, in which three people were convicted under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code by the Sessions Judge of Noakhali.

The Petitioner, Mohim Chunder Mozumdar, who was the Court head constable and prepared a map of the locality, was cited as a witness for the defence. On the day following the conclusion of the case, namely, the 16th February, the Sessions Judge recorded an order against the Petitioner in the following terms :—

“The witnesses Krista Chunder Bhadra and Mohim Chunder Mozumdar are Police head constables. It is necessary in my opinion that they should be committed to the Sessions, but as I am about to take proceedings in the capacity of a committing Judge against Mr. Reily, and their case is mixed up with his, it may perhaps be desirable that I should not try them myself. It is also highly probable that an Additional Sessions Judge will be sent here before long. It is therefore ordered that these two witnesses do give bail of Rs. 300 each to appear when called upon before the Court of Session to answer charges under sec. 193, I. P. C.”

This is hardly a commitment under sec. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which requires, as we read it, that when an offence referred to in sec. 193 is committed before a Court of Session or is brought to its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, that Court may commit the case to itself and try the same, or admit the accused to bail, and try the case upon its own charge. If any offence was committed by the Petitioner before the Sessions Judge, the matter would, no doubt, fall under sec. 477, but the section contemplates that there should be a charge upon which the commitment is based, in other words, the person accused of having committed the offence should know the specific nature of the accusation against him so as to be able to answer it. In the order under consideration there is not the slightest reference to what the offence alleged to have been committed by the Petitioner is, or what the specific false statements are for which he is to be tried. The order is absolutely vague and indefinite. It requires him to give bail to appear when called upon before the Court of Session to answer charges under sec. 193. We have referred to the judgment in the case itself to see whether there is any indication there of the specific false statements alleged to have been made by Mohim Chunder, but we failed to discover any.

We think that the whole proceeding is bad in law and made without jurisdiction; and we accordingly set it aside.

H. P. C. Rule made absolute.

Partition suit—Preliminary decree—Final decree—Appeal—Right to question preliminary decree in appeal from final decree.

Held—By the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C. J., and RAMPINI, J., dissenting), that in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law.

BOLORAM DEY v. RAM CHUNDRA DEY (7) overruled.

(7) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 279 (1895).

BISWA NATH CHAKI v. BANI KANT DUTTA (8) approved of.

This was a reference to a Full Bench made by Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., on the 14th of August 1900, in appeal from original decree, No. 14 of 1899.

The facts of the case appear from the following order of reference:—

In this appeal, which arises out of a suit for partition and which was preferred after the final decree in the suit was passed by the Court below, the Appellant seeks to impugn the propriety of the preliminary order or decree for partition though he did not prefer any separate appeal against that order. The learned vakil for the Respondents contends that it is not competent for the Appellant to do so, as the preliminary order for partition was, as has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1), a decree, within the meaning of sec. 2, C. P. C., and was therefore appealable, and no appeal having been preferred against it within the time allowed by law, it is become final and conclusive; and in support of this contention, the case of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (7) is cited. The learned vakil for the Appellant, on the other hand, argues that though the preliminary decree for partition was appealable, and no appeal was preferred against it, that does not preclude him from questioning its correctness when he has appealed against the final decree in the case; in support of this argument the case of Biswa Nath

KHADEM HOSSEIN v. EMDAD HOSSEIN:

Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8) is relied upon. These two cases, which are both in point, being in conflict with one another, we submit for the decision of the Full Bench the following question:—

“Whether in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law.”

Babu Hari Charan Sarkhel for the Appellant.

Babu Uma Kali Mukerjee for Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question submitted for our decision is “whether in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law.”

The first point to consider is whether the preliminary order or decree is a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Full Bench case of Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1) is a distinct authority to the effect that such an order is a decree within sec. 2, and this view is clearly supported by the recent case of Raja Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bejai Bahadur Singh (2) before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in which judgment was given on the 21st July 1900. There it was held that an order upon an issue, “For what period are mesne profits recoverable” was final and not interlocutory, that it was a decree within the definition of sec. 2 of the Code and consequently appealable under sec. 540. Their Lordships then say:—“Treating the question as if it were whether the order under consideration is final or interlocutory in its nature, and testing it by the ordinary principles applicable to such questions their Lordships think not only that the High Court are right in the particular circumstances of the case, but that there is not any need to rely upon the accident that the District Judge took the convenient course of trying the liability to account in a separate issue and deciding it in a separate judgment. His decision is a final one in its essence and would be so equally whether it stood alone or was combined with decisions on other points. It resembles in principle a decree for account made at the hearing of a cause which is final against the party denying liability to account and is appealable; though it is also in another way interlocutory and may result in the exoneration of the accounting party or even in the award of a balance in his favour. And it can make no difference in point of principle whether the decision be in favour of or against the liability to account. It is equally final in its effect and as such equally open to appeal.” If a decree adjudicating upon the question of liability to account be final, a decree in a partition suit, which completely determines the shares of the parties must equally be so. It is clear then that the preliminary order here was a decree appealable and final as opposed to being interlocutory in its nature. I am not dealing with the question whether a statement in a judgment as to the rights of the parties where no formal decree has been drawn up and where the declaration of such rights has not been embodied in a formal decree, is a decree within the meaning of the Code. That point is not now before us. I would only add for the guidance of Judges in the mofussil, that, in my opinion, preliminary orders in partition suits and in suits for account, if they declare the rights of the parties either as to their shares of the property to be partitioned or as to liability to account, ought to be drawn up formally as decrees in compliance with sec. 206.

(1) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 463 (1892).

(2) 5 C. W. N. 52; s. c. L. R. 27

KHADEM HOSSEIN v. EMDAD HOSSEIN.

But now arises the question submitted to us and upon this there are the two conflicting decisions mentioned in the reference.

Neither party suggests that the case is within sec. 591, which appears to me to have codified in a statutory form the principles involved in the Privy Council cases of Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3), Forbes v. Ameeroonissa Begum (4) and Sheonath v. Ramnath (5). The question is whether the principle of these cases apply to a final order, an order which finally decides the rights of the parties as to the shares to which they are entitled, and which is appealable. In Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3) their Lordships said—the point being whether it was open to the Appellant to impugn the regularity of certain proceedings to grant a review—"We are of opinion that this objection cannot be sustained. We are not aware of any law or regulation prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon the suitor to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not so do, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the Appellate Court. No authority or precedent has been cited in support of such a proposition, and we cannot conceive that anything would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon the suitor the necessity of so appealing; whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. We believe there have been very many cases before this tribunal in which their Lordships have deemed it to be their duty to correct erroneous interlocutory orders, though not brought under their consideration until the whole cause had been decided and brought hither by appeal for adjudication." The same opinion was entertained by their Lordships in the cases of Forbes v. Ameeroonissa Begum (4) and Sheonath v. Ramnath (5) and again in Shah Makhun Lal v. Sree Kishan Singh (6). But as I read these judgments they were all cases of interlocutory as opposed to final orders and the question now before us is whether the same principle applies to the case of a decree which is final in its essence and effect. In all these cases the orders are referred to as interlocutory orders. If they were intended to apply to final as well as to interlocutory orders then the present case is covered by their authority, by which we are bound. But as I have said I do not so read these cases.

It is said that sec. 396 indicates that there can be only one decree in a partition suit, and that decree after the Commissioner's report: but this argument is inconsistent with, and cannot be reconciled with the view that the first order which declares the shares of the parties is a final and not an interlocutory decree. The Code affords us but little direct assistance on the point, but upon the best consideration which, looking to the Code, to principle and to the authorities, I can give to the case, I am of opinion, when there is in a particular suit a decree declaratory of the rights of the parties, a decree which is, in point of law, final as regards those rights, and also appealable, and the time allowed for appealing has expired, that decree cannot be challenged upon an appeal from a subsequent decree in the suit, say, the decree confirming or dealing with the Commissioner's report. To hold otherwise would be to extend the time for appealing to an indefinite period, contrary to the period of limitation defined by the legislature. The inconvenience and costs to the parties of the opposite view is manifest. All the expense incident to a partition by metes and bounds, of the Commissioner's report and so forth,—proceedings which might occupy years,—would be thrown away, and though, no doubt, such useless expenditure might in some cases be met by special provision as to payment of costs by those who had caused it, such compensation in many cases might prove inadequate, for costs are not always recoverable. I can find nothing in the Code nor in principle which imposes upon me the necessity of arriving at such a conclusion, and I therefore, prefer to arrive at one which appears to me to be consistent with convenience, as opposed to one which is calculated to produce endless delay and grave and unnecessary expense.

In my opinion the question ought to be answered in the negative and the case with this expression of opinion returned to the Division Bench for ultimate decision, the costs of the reference to abide the result.

PRINSEP, J.—In this suit which is for a partition by metes and bounds amongst certain co-sharers in a certain property the Subordinate Judge, by his order of the 23rd July 1898, found that the parties to the suit, including the persons made on that date parties to the suit, had certain shares, and he accordingly directed a Commissioner to be appointed for the purpose of making a partition amongst the parties in those specific shares. There was no appeal filed against that order such as the law permits. A final decree has now been passed and the question referred to a Full Bench is:—"Whether in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit, it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law." This reference is made because there are two contradictory decisions on this point, a Division Bench of this Court having held, in the case of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (7) that no appeal having been made against the preliminary order, it was barred by the operation of the law of limitation and, on the other hand, another Division Bench of this Court having held, in the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutt (8) the judgment being delivered within a few months of the judgment in the first case and before it had been reported, that it was competent to an appellant, in appeal against the final decree, to reopen the entire case. The first case, I may mention, was a suit for partition and, therefore, on all fours with the case now before us. The second case was a suit for dissolution of partnership and an account in which the Court of first instance overruled the objection of one of the Defendants and found that the Plaintiff was a partner and entitled to an account. The Defendant, however, did not appeal against that order until after a final decree on accounts taken. The same principle is however involved in both cases.

The law gives the right of appeal (certain cases being excepted) from the decrees of the Courts exercising Original Jurisdiction to the Courts authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts (sec. 540, C. C. P.) and inasmuch as a decree has been defined to mean the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or any defence set up in a Civil Court when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal, it has been held that an appeal lies from an order declaring the rights of parties to certain shares in a suit for partition by metes and bounds and also against an order declaring that certain parties are partners in a suit for dissolution of partnership and an account before the actual decree in the suit has been passed.

* There was much uncertainty in this respect, but the matter has at last been finally settled, so far as this Court is concerned, by the judgment of the Full Bench in the case of Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1) and their Lordships of the Privy Council have also finally set this matter at rest by their judgments in more than one reported case. These cases, it may be observed, commence from the case of Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3), decided in 1859, the last case on the subject being Saigud Muzhar Hossein v. Bodha Bibi (9), decided in 1894. So far as regards the right of appeal, the law is now settled. The question raised on this reference, however, is whether, the right of appeal existing and no appeal having been made, it is competent to a party in the suit to appeal against the final decree on the whole case, as if he had no such right of appeal at an intermediate stage. I may observe that though, by reason of the definition of a decree this right is given, a decree, as explained in sec. 206 and the following sections of the Code, clearly means the final decree in the suit, for, under sec. 206, it is stated that the decree shall set out the particulars of the claim in the suit and shall specify the relief granted or other determination of the suit. From this, I have always understood (and this has been the practice of our Courts) that, notwithstanding the definition of the expression 'decree' first given in the Act of 1879, in amendment of the then existing Code of Civil Procedure, a decree within the terms of sec. 206 means the final decree in the suit and that it is such a decree which is contemplated in giving a right of appeal under sec. 540. There is only one decree within the terms of Chapter XVII in the suit and that is the final decree. Any order passed in the course of the trial of a suit, though it may, in some respects, be an adjudication of the rights of the parties, if it does not finally dispose of the suit, is not a decree within the terms of that chapter because with any other findings already arrived at, in the suit, it must be embodied in the decree drawn up in accordance with sec. 206.

The terms of sec. 396 are also significant in connection with the matter now under consideration. That section provides that the Court, after ascertaining the several parties interested in the property and their several rights therein, may issue a commission to such persons as it thinks fit to make a partition according to such rights, and it further provides that, on consideration of the Commissioner's report and any objections thereto, the Court shall either quash the same and issue a new commission or pass a decree in accordance therewith. That decree is the decree within the terms of sec. 206 and, in my opinion, it is also the decree within the terms of sec. 540. There is no provision of the law taking away a right of appeal on the entire case when such a decree has been passed.

In the same manner, in an administration suit, sec. 213 declares that the Court, before making a decree, shall order such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, and give such other directions, as it thinks fit and, under sec. 394, the Court may issue a commission to any person directing him to make such examination or adjustment of accounts as it may consider to be necessary. So also, in a suit for dissolution of partnership, sec. 215 declares that the Court, before making its decree may pass an order fixing the day on which the partnership shall stand dissolved and directing such accounts to be taken and other acts to be done as it thinks fit. Now, it would be impossible for a Court to declare accounts to be taken unless it had previously found that the parties were partners and, as such, entitled to receive or bound to render accounts. Similarly, sec. 215A declares that "when a suit is for an account of pecuniary transactions between a principal and agent and in all other suits not hereinbefore provided for, where it is necessary, in order to ascertain the amount of money due to or from any party, that an account should be taken the Court shall, before making its decree, pass an order directing such accounts to be taken as it thinks fit." Now, in such a suit, it may happen and constantly does happen that a party denies his liability to account and, if an order be passed against him, although he may have the right of appeal because the order is within the definition of a decree, still no decree is passed until an account has been taken showing the amount due to the Plaintiff. These matters were all fully considered in the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8) by a Bench consisting of myself and Mr. Justice Hill and we also considered several judgments of the Privy Council referred to in our judgment bearing on this point, as well as the rules laid down in several well-known treatises on the interpretation of statutes. No authority has been shown to us for a contrary view except the judgment in the case of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (7). In that case, the authorities on which we relied were not referred to or considered. The argument ab inconvenienti has, however, been pressed upon us on the ground that it is not reasonable to require a party to go to the expense of an enquiry into accounts or to settle a partition by metes and bounds when it was open to him to stop that inquiry and the expense consequent thereon by asserting his rights, if he still maintained that he had them, by exercise of the right of appeal given him under the law. It seems to me that instances may be given where a party may reasonably abstain from exercise of this right of appeal without any prospect of putting his adversary to such an expense and, at the same time, reserve to himself the right of appeal, once for all, instead of delaying the proceedings and appealing on two separate occasions and it may be added, that this very objection was considered by Hill, J., and myself in the case before us, for we pointed out that, on appeal against the final decree, a party who had not exercised his right of appeal against the intermediate finding or decree against him, "would certainly suffer in costs in consequence of his having without objection allowed the subsequent proceedings to take place" and, as an authority for this, we referred to the concluding remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Forbes v. Ameeroonissa Begum (4). Their Lordships there stated, "considering that the Appellant might have appealed against the order and that his conduct in the subsequent proceedings in the Court below had not been satisfactory, that they 'are not disposed to recommend that he should have costs in those proceedings against the opposite party.'" There would, therefore, be protection in such a case to the Respondent. If, however, the position be considered in another point of view, it does not seem altogether unreasonable to grant the right of appeal on the whole case. By the exercise of his right of appeal against what I may term the intermediate decree, the proceedings in the suit would be prolonged, if that appeal were unsuccessful and, if he had good grounds to appeal against the final decree, the Appellant would be put to the expense of two appeals. But if there was only one appeal on the whole case, it would be dealt with by the Appellate Court once for all, while, if the Appellant succeeded on the point decided by the intermediate decree, he might, as I have already pointed out, suffer in costs because he had allowed proceedings to be held which he might have prevented if he had exercised his right of appeal at once against the intermediate decree. In my opinion, it would not be right or proper to allow the argumentum ab inconvenienti to prevail against the terms of the law as expressed in the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure to which I have referred, and I would add that it would be very injurious to litigants if the practice of the Courts which has recognized this right of appeal were suddenly altered so as to deprive them of a right which they have been led to believe existed and which they intended to exercise.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8) is rightly decided and I would answer the question referred to us in the affirmative.

BANERJEE, J.—The question referred to us for determination in this case is, whether in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit, it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition, when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law.

There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure or in any other enactment bearing directly upon this question. It is argued for the Appellant that as the final decree for partition incorporates with it the preliminary order or decree, and is based upon that order in appealing against the final decree, the Appellant is entitled to question the correctness, as well, of the actual allotments made, as of the determination of shares upon which the allotments are based. It is further argued that the Appellant had this right under the old law, as is clear from the cases of Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3), Forbes v. Ameeroonissa (4) and Shah Makhum Lal v. Sree Kishan Singh (6), and there being no express provision in the present law taking away that right, it cannot be held to be taken away by any implication arising from the definition of the term decree in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or from the provisions of sec. 591 of the Code. And the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8), which gave effect to considerations like the foregoing, is relied upon in support of the Appellant's argument.

On the other hand, it is argued for the Respondent that, as the preliminary order issuing a commission after ascertaining the several rights of the parties interested in the property to be partitioned as contemplated by sec. 396 of the Code is a decree within the definition of the term in sec. 2, and is appealable as such under sec. 540, as has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1), if it is not appealed against within the time allowed by law, it becomes final and conclusive, and its correctness cannot be questioned in the appeal against the final decree. It is further argued that as secs. 591 and 629 of the Code expressly provide that certain orders may be either appealed against immediately, or taken exception to in the appeal against the final decree, the natural inference is, that if the Legislature intended to leave an order coming within the definition of a decree similarly open to question in the appeal against the final decree, it would have expressly said so. Moreover it is urged that the opposite view would lead to most inconvenient results. Thus a preliminary decree for making a partition or for taking accounts may be carried out by an investigation extending over a long time and entailing much expense; and if it be open to any party to question the correctness of the preliminary decree in an appeal against the final decree, the time and trouble taken, and the expense incurred, in carrying out the preliminary decree, will go for nothing. As for the cases cited on the other side, it is said that they were decided under the old law, and that as that law has been altered by the introduction of a more comprehensive definition of the term decree, those cases do not govern any case under the present law, except so far as that law has embodied the principle laid down by them in secs. 591 and 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These are reasons which are no doubt entitled to careful consideration; and it is for reasons such as these, that it was held in the case of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (7), that the correctness of a preliminary decree for partition, which has not been appealed against within the time allowed by law, cannot be questioned in an appeal from the final decree.

After considering the arguments on both sides, I am of opinion that the view contended for by the learned vakil for the Appellant is correct.

In appealing against the final decree in a partition suit, the Appellant must be deemed to have the right of appealing on the whole case, notwithstanding that he might have appealed against the preliminary decree dealing with a part of the case, namely, the part relating to the determination of the shares of the parties. That right has not been taken away by any express provision of the Code; nor, in my opinion, has it been taken away by necessary or sufficient implication arising from secs. 591 and 629 of the Code. Nor is it sufficient to say that the cases of Forbes v. Ameeroonissa (4) and Shah Makhun Lal v. Sree Kishan Singh (6) are distinguishable from the present case by reason of their being decided under the old law, because the order, the correctness of which was held to be open to question in the appeal against the final decree in each of those cases, was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council to be appealable, just as much as the preliminary order or decree in a partition suit is under the present Code. In the last-mentioned case, it was said:—"Their Lordships think that the question as to the interest is open in this appeal though the Plaintiff might have appealed, and did not, from the interlocutory decree on the point." It is true that the orders in question in both the two cases cited above were interlocutory orders or decrees, in the sense that they did not dispose of the cases; but so is the preliminary decree in a partition suit an interlocutory decree as it does not completely dispose of the case. That is clear from sec. 396 of the Code. The principle upon which the Respondent's contention is mainly based, is that where a preliminary order in a case is appealable as a decree, and is not appealed against within the time allowed by law, its correctness cannot be questioned in an appeal from the final decree in the case. But that principle is nowhere affirmed in the Code; and it is expressly denied in the passage quoted above from the judgment of the Privy Council in Shah Makhun Lal v. Sree Kishan Singh (6).

The argument based upon considerations of convenience noticed above, is no doubt the strongest argument in favour of the Respondent's view. But when that view is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in the two cases cited above, which we are bound to follow, I am unable to adopt it as correct.

I should add that the argument based upon considerations of convenience is not altogether without an answer; nor are the considerations of convenience all in favour of the Respondent's view. If by reason of a party successfully impugning the correctness of the preliminary decree for partition in an appeal from the final decree the partition proceedings have to be commenced de novo, the Court may compensate all the other parties by making the Appellant bear the costs that are thrown away. On the other hand, if it be held that the law renders it imperative on every party to appeal from a preliminary decree by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not so appeal, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the Appellate Court, there will follow many more appeals from preliminary decrees than would otherwise be the case. It is easy, moreover, to imagine cases in which, if a party is under no such imperative necessity of immediately appealing against a preliminary decree and can safely wait to see what the final decree may be, he may, notwithstanding that he might have felt somewhat aggrieved by the preliminary decree, in the end find little reason to complain of the final decree. Thus, against the preliminary decree in a partition suit, a party may have a slight objection as to the extent of the shares; or against a similar decree in a suit for account, he may have a slight objection as to the period over which the account is to extend; but when the final decree is made, he may not have reason to complain, having regard to the nature of the allotments made in the one case, and to the amount decreed in the other; and so eventually no appeal may be preferred against the final decree, and thus time and trouble may be saved.

For the foregoing reasons, I would respectfully dissent from the view taken in the case of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (7), and agreeing with the decision in the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8) I would answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the affirmative.

AMEER ALI, J.—I am also of opinion that the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8) was rightly decided and that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

(7) I. L. R. 23 Cal 279 (1895).

KHADEM HOSSEIN v. EMDAD HOSSEIN.

As I agree with the reasons given by Prinsep and Banerjee, JJ., for arriving at this conclusion, I do not think it necessary to go over the same ground. I would only add that although under sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, as interpreted by the Full Bench in the case of Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1), certain orders made in the course of a suit are appealable, there is nothing to show that the Legislature has taken away the right to question, upon an appeal from the main and final decree, the propriety of such orders if they are not appealed against separately within a certain time.

In suits for partition, administration, dissolution of partnership, &c., the declaratory orders are made in the first instance with the object of forming a basis for further proceeding. Such orders are by no means of a definitive character, in practice they are often modified by the Court upon application by the parties. It would be inexpedient in my opinion to embody such orders in formal decrees or to compel parties to appeal therefrom whether they wish or not. In many cases the objection to the declaratory order disappears in the final decree.

It appears to me that if a preliminary order or decree for partition in a partition suit be a decree, as defined in sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, it necessarily follows that it is not open to an Appellant to question the correctness of this decree after he has allowed the period of limitation for appealing against such a decree to pass without appealing against it.

In the Full Bench case of Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1) it has been decided that a preliminary order or decree in a partition suit declaring the specific rights of the parties in the properties to be partitioned, is a decree, and appealable as such. The question of the correctness of this decision is not before us, and as it is the decision of a Full Bench we are bound to follow it. That being so, it appears to be certain that the present Appellant cannot now be allowed to impugn the correctness of the lower Court's decree of the 23rd July 1898, as he seeks to do.

The cases which have been cited to us by the Appellant, other than the case of Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kant Dutta (8), which in my opinion has been wrongly decided, are all cases decided before the passing of the present Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, do not seem to me to be relevant to the question we have now to decide.

I would therefore answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Kritanto Kumar Bose and Benode Behary Mookerji for the Respondent.

(1) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 538 (1884).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question raised in this case is whether the Courts below were right in allowing certain execution proceedings to be re-opened after an order had been made to the effect that the case was disposed of upon the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors representing to the Court that the decree had been satisfied; the ground upon which the proceedings were allowed to be re-opened being that in intimating to the Court that the decree had been satisfied the decree-holder had acted under a mistake of calculation in fixing the amount that was due.

The decree-holder asked the first Court to re-open the matter by an application in which he referred to sec. 623 as well as to sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first Court held that the application as an application for review under sec. 623 of the Code could not be allowed, because sec. 623 was inapplicable to the case; but it held that the application ought to be allowed under sec. 244.

On appeal by the judgment-debtor two questions were raised before the lower Appellate Court, first, whether the first Court was right in entertaining the application under sec. 244, and, second, whether on the merits the decree-holder had made out a case for re-opening the proceedings; and the lower Appellate Court has answered both these questions in the affirmative. It has further held that even if the proceedings could not be re-opened by an order under sec. 244, and the proper procedure was by way of an application under sec. 623, as the first Court had granted the application of the decree-holder, and as it was not shown that the irregularity in the procedure of the first Court in granting it under sec. 244 instead of sec. 623, had either affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, the order of the first Court could not be interfered with in appeal, having regard to the provisions of sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the judgment-debtors that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the application of the decree-holder for re-opening the execution proceedings could be granted under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

One or two other points were sought to be raised in the course of the argument by the learned vakil for the Appellant; but as they were not taken in the memorandum of appeal, and as they raised questions of fact upon which the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal below must be taken to be conclusive we did not think it right to allow those points to be discussed.

With regard to the only question that could be, and was, discussed in the case, we are of opinion that the lower Appellate Court was right in thinking that the decree-holder's application could be entertained under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That view seems to us to be in consonance with reason; and the only authority cited in support of the contention that the view of the lower Appellate Court is wrong, namely, the case of Fakaruddin Mahomed Ahsan v. The Official Trustee of Bengal (1) is a case that is clearly distinguishable from the present. There the order, after the making of which the Court was held to have become functus officio, and therefore incompetent to entertain any application under sec. 244, was in the nature of a judicial order made in a contested proceeding. Here, the order, by reason of which we are asked to hold that the Court became functus officio, and therefore incompetent to entertain the application under sec. 244, was not in the nature of a judicial order made after the adjudication of any contested point, but was merely an order stating that the case had been disposed of by reason of both sides having represented to the Court that the decree had been satisfied. The case before us therefore being thus distinguishable from the case cited, it becomes unnecessary for us to say anything more on this point.

We think that the additional reason which the lower Appellate Court has given for affirming the order of the first Court, namely, that based upon sec. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is also a good and valid reason. For, according to the case cited for the Appellants, sec. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable; and if it was applicable, and the decree-holder asked the first Court to re-open the proceedings both under that section and under sec. 244, the fact of that Court having granted the application under sec. 244 and not under sec. 623, for the simple reason that in its opinion sec. 623 was not applicable, would only make the order an irregular order, this irregularity not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

NILRATAN KHASNOBISH v. RAM RUTTON CHATTERJI.

For these reasons we think that the order of the lower Appellate Court is right, and ought to be affirmed, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

S. C. S. Appeal dismissed.

False evidence, giving of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 477—Security to appear when called upon to answer charges yet to be framed.

There is no warrant in law for an order by a Sessions Judge directing a witness alleged to have given false evidence in a judicial proceeding before him to give security to appear before him when called upon to answer charges yet to be framed under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

This was a rule issued on the 26th of March 1901, against the order of the Sessions Judge of Noakhali, dated the 16th of February 1901.

The facts of the case are similar to those in the case of Mohim Chunder Mozumdar reported in 5 C. W. N. 615.

Mr. C. R. Das and Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We think that the order of the Sessions Judge directing the Petitioner to give security to appear when called upon to answer charges not yet framed under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code is not warranted by law.

In setting aside that order we desire to state that it will still be open to the present Sessions Judge either to sanction a prosecution on specific charges or to proceed under sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code if he considers it expedient. We purposely refrain from expressing any opinion on the evidence given by the Petitioner.

Held—That there was no fact before the Sessions Judge upon which he could come to the conclusion that the offence of giving false evidence had been committed either before him or before the Deputy Magistrate.

That the only conclusion to which he could come was that the offence of giving false evidence might have been committed before the Deputy Magistrate and that the case could not be ripe for commitment until a further enquiry was made in the matter and an opportunity given to the person to show that his statements were not untrue to his knowledge.

That the section applicable to the facts of the present case was sec. 476, and that the commitment of the Petitioner under sec. 477 was illegal.

This was a rule granted on the 18th of February 1901, against the order of A. P. Pennell, Esq., Sessions Judge of Noakhali, dated the 17th of January 1901, committing the Petitioner to the Court of Session for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code.

The facts of the case material to this report were shortly these:—An appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge of Noakhali from a conviction by a Deputy Magistrate. In the course of his judgment the Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the Petitioner, Umesh Chandra Chakravarti, who was a police-officer, did not tell the truth while giving his evidence before the Deputy Magistrate. Taking that view he directed proceedings against him for an offence under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

Thereupon the Petitioner obtained the present rule to shew cause why the commitment should not be set aside or in the alternative, why the case should not be transferred to some other Court of Session or such other order made as to the High Court may seem fit and proper.

Mr. Henderson with Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to shew cause.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT WAS AS FOLLOWS:—

This rule was issued upon the Magistrate of the district to show cause why the commitment of the Petitioner shall not be set aside, or, in the alternative, why the case should not be transferred to some other Court of Session, or such other order made as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

It appears that an appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge of Noakhali from a conviction by a Deputy Magistrate. In the course of his judgment the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the Petitioner before us, who was a police-officer, did not tell the truth whilst giving his evidence before the first Court. Taking that view he directed proceedings against him under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code. After giving the statements which he considers to be false he proceeds as follows:—"These statements of the Sub-Inspector have not been believed either by the trying Magistrate or by myself. Further, it appears to me, as at present advised, that those statements are intentionally false, that Umesh Chandra Chakravarti committed an offence under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code by making them, and that it is desirable that he should be placed upon his trial for that offence. I therefore direct that a warrant do issue for the arrest of Umesh Chandra Chakravarti. He may be released on giving bail of Rs. 500 to appear before this Court on the 17th January when a charge will be framed against him."

On the 17th January the Sessions Judge framed the following charge "that you, Umesh Chandra Chakravarti, on or about the 17th day of October 1900 at Sudharam in the course of the trial of Wahid Ali and others before Moulvie Mahomed Azhar, Deputy Magistrate of Noakhali, stated in evidence that I saw Bibi Jan threatening the accused to give cuts with a dao. I had the dao snatched from Bibi Jan and chenis as she was going to give cuts to these accused. I saw that Eusuf Ali struck his head with the dao in his hand. I found the chokra (Mahomed Sayed) taking part in the raising of the hut. I questioned then, 'who raises this hut,' and this chokra replied, 'we raise the hut.' I had seen this chokra struggle with Wahid Ali to save the roofs from the opposite party. I had some offensive weapons snatched from Bibi Jan as she was going to use them. These were three daos and two chenis, which statements you either knew or believed to be false or did not believe to be true and thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session;" and he directed the accused, the Petitioner, to be tried by the Sessions Court on the said charge; and in the order-sheet he recorded the following order:—"charge framed and read over to the accused, who under sec. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is committed to take his trial before this Court."

The present rule was applied for and obtained from this Court upon the ground that the order of commitment was bad, inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge acted without jurisdiction in not holding an inquiry under sec. 476 and in purporting to act under sec. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It will be noticed from the order-sheet that the Sessions Judge did purport to act under sec. 477; and the question we have to consider is whether he was right in dealing with the matter under that section, or whether he ought not to have proceeded with the case under the provision of sec. 476.

Sec. 477 runs thus:—"Subject to the provisions of sec. 444, a Court of Session may charge a person for any offence referred to in sec. 195 and committed before it, or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, and may commit, or admit to bail and try such person upon its own charge" whilst sec. 476 provides that "when any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into any offence referred to in sec. 195, and committed before it, or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient security for his appearance, before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence on such inquiry or trial."

As already stated the question is whether the present case falls under sec. 477 or sec. 476. Upon a full consideration of the matter, it appears to us that sec. 477 deals with cases which transpire before the Sessions Court itself, and in which the Sessions Judge is in a position to declare, without any further inquiry, that the person against whom action is necessary under that section has in fact committed an offence mentioned in sec. 195. We are supported in this view by a decision of Mr. Justice Norman which, though under the old Act, seems to us to supply the principle for the consideration of the present question. The case to which we refer is The Queen v. Nomal (1) where that learned Judge, after referring to sec. 359, goes on to deal with the provisions of sec. 172. That section, so far as the present question is concerned, is identical with sec. 477 of the present Code. With reference to its scope Mr. Justice Norman says as follows:—"The 172nd section empowers a Court of Session to charge a person for an offence committed before it, or under its own cognizance." The words in sec. 477 are:—"Committed before it or brought under its notice in a judicial proceeding." Then the learned Judge goes on to say:—"As I understand the expression, under its own cognizance, it is meant to provide for a case where it is brought under the notice of the Court of Session in the course of a judicial proceeding that the crime with which the party is to be charged has been committed by him." Apparently the alteration in sec. 477 was effected in view of the expression made use of by Mr. Justice Norman. That learned Judge proceeds to add:—"If on a trial of a prisoner before a Court of Session, a witness gives evidence which contradicts that given by the same witness before the committing officer, and there is no evidence whatever to show which statement is true, it appears to me that it cannot be said to be within or under the cognizance of the Sessions Judge that the witness has given false evidence before the committing officer. What is brought under the cognizance of the Judge is that the witness may have given false evidence before the committing officer. It appears to me that without further inquiry the case is not ripe for commitment." It appears to us that these words apply with peculiar force to the facts of the case with which we have to deal; here the evidence was given by the Petitioner before the Deputy Magistrate, which evidence was in conflict with the statements of certain other witnesses. The Deputy Magistrate did not rely upon the statements of the Petitioner, and the Sessions Judge was inclined to take the same view, though in his order he qualifies it by saying, "as at present advised." It is evident therefore that there was no fact before him upon which he could come to the conclusion that the offence of giving false evidence had been committed either before him or before the Deputy Magistrate. The only conclusion to which he could come was that the offence of giving false evidence may have been committed before the Deputy Magistrate; and therefore to use the words of Mr. Justice Norman, the case could not be "ripe for commitment" until a further inquiry was made in the matter, and an opportunity given to the Petitioner to show that his statements were not untrue to his knowledge.

It is clear, therefore, that the commitment of the Petitioner under sec. 477 was illegal, inasmuch as the Sessions Judge did not proceed under the section which was applicable to the matter.

We accordingly set aside the commitment made by the Sessions Judge on the 17th January last; but in doing so, we desire to say that it will be open to the present Sessions Judge of Nonkhali to take such steps in the matter as he may be advised under sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Irrigation canals—Sanction of Government to construct canal through its own land—

Right of excavators to the land through which canal is constructed—Landlord's encouragement to another to lay out money on his land under an expectation.

If a man, under an expectation created and encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord and upon the faith of such expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord and without objection by him lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such expectation.

RAMSDEN v. DYSON (1) referred to.

In 1860 Plaintiffs' grandfather obtained from the Government sanction to construct a canal from the river Sutlej for the irrigation of certain lands belonging to Government, the revenues of which were at that time leased to him. He thereupon commenced to construct the canal at his own expense, and the canal was finally completed by his son. It was constructed partly on Government lands and partly on the land of private owners under arrangements between them and the Plaintiffs' father and grandfather:

Held—That the Plaintiffs had acquired a proprietary interest in so much of the Government lands taken for the purpose of the canal as was required for its construction and maintenance and also a right to have the waters of the Sutlej admitted into the canal so long as the canal was used for the purpose for which it was originally designed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Court of the Punjab of 24th January 1898 confirming that of the

(1) 1 F. & I. Ap. 129 at p 170 (1865).

AHMAD YAR KHAN v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Divisional Judge of Lahore by which the Plaintiffs-Appellants' claim to proprietary right in the Hajiwah Canal, 50 miles long, in the district of Multan, was rejected.

The canal was excavated by the Plaintiffs' grandfather Ghulam Mustapha Khan and their father Ghulam Kadir Khan by permission obtained from the Commissioner of the district in the year 1861 at a cost of about 9 lakhs of rupees expended by the said ancestors of the Plaintiffs, and remained in their possession until 10th December 1888.

It passed in its course from the Sutlej river through many villages owned by persons not parties to this suit, whose consent Plaintiffs' ancestors had obtained under agreements to supply them with water.

The Government waste lands of over 60,000 acres which were farmed by Plaintiffs and others were incapable of cultivation for want of water. The canal terminated in waste lands cultivated by the Plaintiffs' said grandfather, and it was admitted that Government very largely benefited by such undertaking. Farms of waste lands were limited to the period of the existing settlement. In considering the course to be adopted in the new settlement, proposals were made for a lease to Plaintiffs' father of a large tract. After much correspondence these negotiations ended in the Viceroy sanctioning in proprietary right a grant of 60,000 acres to Plaintiffs' father in December 1879. In the settlement records the canal was entered as the property of Plaintiffs' said father.

A formal deed was executed on 26th March 1886 after suggestions from Plaintiffs' father that certain of its terms should be amended which was not agreed to. The Chief Secretary to the Punjab Government signed it for the Respondents; Plaintiffs' father signed it on his own behalf.

Upon the death of Plaintiffs' said father disputes arose among his four sons, the Plaintiffs-Appellants being the three younger sons; owing to such quarrel Government officials took over possession and management of the canal, first temporarily, then permanently on 27th February 1890.

Plaintiffs then instituted this suit claiming proprietary right in the canal for an account, injunctions and other reliefs.

Defendants denied the Plaintiffs' right to the canal outside the 60,000 acres grant, and relied on the said agreement. The 8th clause was as follows:—

"The canal dug by the grantee and known as the Hajiwah shall for the present remain under the management of the said grantee. Provided always that in consideration of the premises the said grantor, his successor and assigns shall at all times hereafter whenever he or they shall think necessary be entitled without the consent of or permission from the said grantee, his heirs, legal representative and assigns, to take into his or their own hands and control the management and distribution of the water of the said canal without payment of any compensation whatsoever, and further to clear the said canal and recover the cost of clearance and management by a canal rate to be levied on the area irrigated."

The main question for determination in this suit were the rights of the Plaintiffs in the canal prior and subsequent to the deed of the 20th March 1886, the finding on the latter question involving the legal construction of that deed.

On the 7th June 1895, the Divisional Judge delivered judgment, and found

- I. That prior to the 20th March 1886, Plaintiffs had no legal rights in the Hajiwah Canal; as soon as the lease of the Bar-barini lands terminated any rights they may have had terminated also.
- II. That the proprietary rights were in the hands of the Government, who did not confer them on Ghulam Kadir by the sanad of 1886, and that Ghulam Kadir by accepting the sanad, after the Financial Commissioner's reply to his petition of the 7th July 1885, "accepted the position, and admitted that there were no further rights beyond those detailed in the sanad, and that outside the grant he had no proprietary right," and waived all claims in consideration of the gift of the land.
- III. That on the true construction of paragraph 8 of the sanad, the Defendant 1 was "entitled to take into his own hands through his subordinate officers, at his pleasure all the powers which were exercisable by the Plaintiffs in the Hajiwah Canal," and dismissed the suit with costs.

An appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab was also dismissed on the 21th January 1898. The Judges of that Court held :

- (1) That by the sanction originally given to construct a canal, all that was granted to Ghulam Mustapha

Khan was permission to make a canal for the purposes of his lease, and that in the event of that lease not being renewed on its expiry his rights in the canal would lapse with the lease.

- (2) That the position taken up by Government in the letter of the 17th November 1890, was consistent with the deed of 1886 and with the letter of the Financial Commissioner of the 3rd August 1885, and that Ghulam Kadir Khan's signature of the deed without amendment establishes the intention of the parties to have been as now contended for by the Government.

- (3) That the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief even with regard to such rights as they were now admitted by Defendant to possess.

It was submitted that having regard to the enormous expense incurred by the Plaintiffs' grandfather and father in constructing the canal in question, amounting to 9 lakhs of rupees, and to the rights in the land of the canal and the water conveyed in the canal previous to the grant, to the arrangements made with several proprietors of the villages over whose land the canal passes, it was unreasonable to suppose that Plaintiffs could have intended by clause 8 of the deed in question to concede to the Government the power at its will to deprive them of those valuable rights merely in consideration of the grant of waste lands, which might at any time be rendered valueless by the Government assuming the exercise of this power and fixing a water rate which might leave the Plaintiffs no margin of profit. The title of the Government was questioned on behalf of the Appellants as regards the canal.

Mr. Mayne, Mr. C. W. Arathoon, Mr. Degruyther and Mr. A. K. Khan for the Appellants.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. Branson for the Respondent.

The case was argued on 20th, 21st February and on the 6th March.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The substantial question to be determined in this case is what are the respective rights of the Appellants (who were Plaintiffs in the suit) on the one hand and the Government on the other in the Hajiwah Canal—a work constructed many years ago under the sanction of the Government by the grandfather and the father of the Plaintiffs? Is the canal for the greater part of its course now vested absolutely in the Government to the exclusion of the representatives of the original undertakers (as both the Courts below have held) or have the Appellants as such representatives in common with their elder brother, the second Respondent, a proprietary right in whole of the canal subject only to a special privilege conferred upon or reserved to the Government by a sanad, dated the 20th of March 1886.

The Hajiwah Canal is an important irrigation work in the district of Multan. It is some 50 miles long about 40 feet wide and more than 10 feet in depth. It is supplied with water from the Sutlej and extends from its intake on that river to certain lands in Tashil Mailai which were formerly jungle or waste lands belonging to the Government and known as Bar-barini lands from the circumstances that their occasional cultivation depended upon rainfall.

It seems that in 1860 the revenue of these lands which were inhabited mainly by nomad tribes was in lease to one Ghulam Mustapha Khan for the period of the then current settlement. On the 5th of May in that year Mustapha Khan presented a petition to Government stating that "with a view to render the land culturable and facilitate the payment of the lease money and for the benefit of the public" he "at the expense of thousands of rupees from his own pocket" was "willing to dig two water cuts one for the irrigation of the land in Ludan which is occasionally watered from the Sutlej and the other for irrigating the land Khai a Government jungle from the same river." He therefore prayed that he might be granted permission to construct two nalas. The order on the petition was that the original should be sent to the Deputy Commissioner of Multan with a request that he would have a plan of the nalas in question prepared through the Khan. Under date the 30th of August 1861 there is a memorandum or report among the Government records to the following effect: "A detailed plan of both the nalas showing the name and mark of each nala, &c., has been prepared. The persons whose lands are to be occupied by the nalas are all agreeable to the construction thereof. As regards the compensation (Hakrasi) payable to the proprietors of the lands to be occupied by the nalas the Khan* has with their consent which has been obtained in a lawful manner come to a settlement that proposals will be made at the time of opening of the nalas. Under these circumstances the opening of both the nalas should be allowed because a considerable area of land will thus be rendered fit for cultivation, and there is every hope of increase in the Government revenue." Acting on this report the Commissioner sanctioned the project on the 4th of September 1861. There seems to be no other document or record in existence throwing light on the circumstances under* which the construction of the Hajiwah Canal was authorised or expressing the commands or intentions of the Government with regard to it.

Having thus obtained the sanction of the Government Ghulam Mustapha Khan commenced the construction of the canal. It was completed after his death by his son Ghulam Kadir Khan, the father of the Plaintiffs, and the second Respondent. The canal was constructed partly on Government land and partly on the land of private owners under arrangements with them. The work is said to have cost in all about nine lakhs of rupees. The annual cost of maintenance and clearance appears to be over Rs. 8,000.

The first question is what rights did Mustapha Khan and Kadir Khan acquire from the Government?

It seems to their Lordships that under the circumstances the undertakers acquired a proprietary interest in so much of the Government lands taken for the purpose of the canal as was required for its construction and maintenance and also a right to have the waters of the Sutlej admitted into the canal so long as the canal was used for the purpose for which it was originally designed.

The principles applicable to such a case are nowhere stated more clearly than by Lord Kingsdown in his judgment in the case of Ramsden v. Dyson (1). "If a man," says his Lordship, "under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land or what amounts to the same thing under an expectation created and encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord and upon the faith of such promise or expectation with the knowledge of the landlord and without objection by him lays out money upon the land a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v. Mighell (2) and as I conceive is open to no doubt."

Now taking all the circumstances into consideration, having regard to the permanent character of the proposed work, the indefinite amount of the probable expense of construction and the fact that the Government encouraged the undertakers to acquire the necessary land where the line of the canal passed through property in private ownership and also bearing in mind the view of the Government at the time, as appears from Government records, that the work might be constructed and maintained more economically by the Khans than by Government and that it would be better to leave the settlement of the country in the hands of native chiefs, it seems to be pretty clear that the Government must have intended the Khans to understand and in fact must have led them to expect that all Government land required for the canal would be made over to them in proprietary right. If the Government had intended that, at the termination of the period of the then current settlement, the Government land required and used for the canal should revert to the Government it is difficult to suppose that the Government would have omitted to say so in plain language or that they would have neglected to make provision for securing the transfer to them of the land acquired by the undertakers from private owners.

(2) 18 Ves. 323 (1811).

AHMAD YAR KHAN P. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Upon the expiration of the period of the settlement for which the lease of the Bar-barini lands had been granted to Mustapha Khan, the Government agreed to make a grant to Kadir Khan at a moderate assessment of a tract of land which was irrigated or capable of being irrigated by the canal and at the same time in the interest of the public they stipulated for the right to intervene when necessary in the management and control of the canal.

The sanad or deed by which this arrangement was carried out was dated the 20th of March 1886. It contains a grant to Kadir Khan, his heirs and assigns for ever in full proprietary right with retrospective effect from the 29th of December 1879 of a tract of 60,000 acres at a jama of Rs. 15,000 per annum for the period of the current settlement. It also contains a grant of an Inam of Rs. 5,000 a year for two lives out of the Government jama "in consideration of the general loyalty and good service to Government of the said grantee and more especially in recognition of his energy and enterprise in digging the Hajiwah Canal." And then there is a provision in the following words:—

8. "The canal dug by the grantee and known as the Hajiwah shall for the present remain under the management of the said grantee, provided always that in consideration of the premises the said grantor, his successors and assigns shall at all times hereafter, whenever he or they shall think necessary, be entitled, without the consent of, or permission from the said grantee, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, to take into his or their own hands and control the management and distribution of the water of the said canal without payment of any compensation whatsoever, and further to clear the said canal and recover the cost of clearance and management by a canal rate to be levied on the area irrigated."

Assuming that at the date of the sanad Kadir Khan had a proprietary interest in the canal as their Lordships are prepared to hold, the only remaining question is what is the effect of cl. 8?

It seems to their Lordships that this clause means exactly what it says. It does not give the Government a right to seize and confiscate the canal. It merely gives them the right from time to time whenever they think it "necessary," that is necessary in the interest of the public, to take into their own hands the management and distribution of the waters of the canal and to clear the canal and recover the cost in the manner provided by the sanad and that "without payment of any compensation whatsoever." It is for the Government to determine when and under what circumstances it is necessary to take possession of the canal and how long it may be necessary to withhold the control and management of the canal from its owners. The canal does not become theirs nor do they acquire any proprietary rights in it by assuming its management and control. They are not however in the opinion of their Lordships in the position of receivers or managers or trustees for the owners or accountable to the owners for profits. If the owners are aggrieved by the action of the Government in taking or keeping possession of the canal, it is a case for representation and remonstrance not for the intervention of the Court.

In the present case the Government, it seems, thought it necessary to assume possession and control of the canal in consequence of dissensions which arose on the death of Kadir Khan between the members of his family and they are entitled to hold such possession and control so long as they think it necessary.

The result, therefore, is that in the opinion of their Lordships the Appellants are entitled to a declaration that subject and without prejudice to the privilege conferred upon the Government by cl. 8 of the sanad of the 28th of March 1886 they are entitled to a proprietary right in three-fourth shares of the Hajiwah Canal. In other respects the suit fails. Their Lordships are of opinion that there ought to be no costs of the first hearing but that the first Respondent ought to pay the costs of the appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The first Respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

*In a suit against a Mitakshara father

Court, dated the 7th May 1900, in Appeal from Original Decree No. 397 of 1898. The judgments of the two learned Judges are reported in 4 C. W. N. 701 where the facts of the case are also stated.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose (with him Babus Karuna Sindhu Mukerji, Akhoy Kumar Banerjee and Surendro Nath Ghosal) for the Appellant.—The short question upon which the learned Judges of this Court have differed is whether the mortgagee of an ancestral property, under a mortgage by a Mitakshara father, can sell the interest of the sons under a decree obtained against the father alone, the mortgagee being aware of the existence of the sons. The question practically turns upon the true construction of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. Both the learned Judges agree that the mortgagee had notice of the son's interest, but they have differed about the intention of the Legislature. Harington, J., says that the son should have been joined in the action and that one cannot say in the face of the express provisions of sec. 85 that the mortgagee is entitled to conclude the son by the decree; while Ghose, J., has followed a different line, enquiring what the law was before the Transfer of Property Act, and holding that the son was practically represented in the action by the father. But it is one thing to say that the Mitakshara father is the kurta and another thing to say that because he is kurta, therefore he can be sued as a representative so as to bind the interests of the sons.

MACLEAN, C. J.—We should like to hear the learned Advocate-General now.

Mr. Advocate-General (The Hon. J. T.

Woodroffe, with him Babus Golap Chunder Sarkar and Dwarkanath Mitter) for the Respondent.—The first question to be enquired into is whether the mortgagee had notice of the son's interest. There was no allegation in the pleadings, and there is no finding in the judgments of any of the Courts as to notice. [MACLEAN, C. J.—I take it that the question was argued as to notice with reference to sec. 85, for I find references to the question of notice in the judgments.] That question was not gone into and hence there is a preliminary question of fact to be established before the question of joinder of parties under sec. 85 can arise. [MACLEAN, C. J., referred to the evidence about notice.] There had been a rule well-known and well-recognised long before sec. 85 was enacted about the interests which might be represented by a Mitakshara father. The joint family consisted of the father and the son in the present case. There was no separation of interests between them. No person in a Mitakshara family can predicate that he has any particular share. The rule in sec. 85 was recognised as a rule of procedure in mortgage cases long before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation; and when you find that the rule so understood was considered by the Privy Council as not to be broken by the non-joinder of a Mitakshara son, the inference is that the decisions of the Privy Council, to which Mr. Justice Ghose refers, must rest on the principle that the Mitakshara son has not such an interest in the property as to require him to be impleaded and that the suit against the father is to be considered as a suit against all the members of the joint family. The rule laid down in Norendra Nath Sarkar v. Kamalbashini Dassi (2) applies only where a branch of the law has been wholly codified and not otherwise. The Transfer of Property Act is not a Code in that sense, and it is permissible therefore to enquire into the case law on the subject. See on this point the observations of Chitty, J., in Re Budgett, Cooper v. Adams (8). [MACLEAN, C. J.—Do you say the Transfer of Property Act is not a Code?] It is not a Code; it only amends certain portions of the law relating to a particular subject. If no definite intention can be gathered from the Acts of the Legislature, effect ought, I submit, to be given to the rules laid down in the existing decisions of the Courts. See Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Ed., p. 143. Looking at the matter from another point of view, it is clear that the son has no grievance whatsoever. The mortgage has been held to be binding upon the son inasmuch as the debt was not contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose. It has been held that it is not open to a son who has not been made a party to object in execution that he is not bound. See Hiralal Sahu v. Parmeshar Rai (9). Regard being had, therefore, to the circumstances of the case, it may with confidence be contended that I am out of the operation of sec. 85.

What is the consequence of a suit not complying with the provisions of sec. 85? It only enables a man interested to assert his right to redeem. See Dewji v. Sambhu and another (7).

In Jogendra Deb Roykut v. Funindro Deb Roykut (10), it was held that the father represented the son. Sec. 85 is only a statutory recognition of an existing rule. The intention of the Legislature has to be ascertained. Did or did not the Legislature mean to alter the existing rule? It is strange the Legislature has not provided for any penalty—there is no mention whether the suit is to merit dismissal or not. It is submitted that the Mitakshara son had no interest in effect to entitle him to be joined as a party. See the remarks of Banerjee, J., in Bhowani Prosad v. Kallu and others (4). The question would always be whether or not the son was represented by the father. See Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Proshad (11); Nanomi v. Modun Mohun (12). See also Ramasamayyar v. Virasami Ayyar (5) and Palani Goundan v. Ramyya Goundan (6). But after all has been said and done, what remedy has the Plaintiff in the present suit? The mortgage has been found to be good and the decree is unassailable. It would serve the Appellant no purpose unless he can attack the mortgage debt.

MACLEAN, C. J.—We should like to hear you, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, only on the question of the relief you want in this suit. Is it not the case that, unless you are in a position to impeach the debt itself, you will be concluded?

Dr. Ghose in reply.—The mortgages cannot proceed to execute the decree for sale. Is the Plaintiff who ought to have been made a party bound to redeem or is he not entitled, as long as the mortgage is not foreclosed in a properly constituted suit, to say that the mortgagee cannot touch his property? See Nathu Singh and others v. Gumani Singh and others (13). I say that as long as you don't foreclose me I am entitled to retain possession of the land. I only ask for a declaration that my properties cannot be sold under the decree which the mortgagee has obtained. I say there is no binding decree upon me. It is admitted I was a necessary party in the previous suit. That being so, I am entitled to say that my interest is unaffected.

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a suit by one Lala Suraj Prosad, who is a minor suing by his next friend and also by his step-mother, against one Golab Chand, and the object of the suit is to have it declared that a certain mortgage bond for Rs. 6,900, dated the 4th of April 1893, executed by Lala Chander Kailas who was the father of the minor Plaintiff and the husband of the co-Plaintiff, is not binding upon, and cannot be enforced against the joint properties mentioned in the bond, and for consequential relief.

The case is governed by the Hindu law of the Mitakshara School; and the facts, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of the questions we have to decide, may be briefly stated. The father of the minor Plaintiff one Lakanji, succeeded his father in 1875 or 1876. At that time he was a minor; he attained his majority in November 1890, and then took over charge of the joint-family estate left by his father, the joint-family estate of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of law. Lakanji married during his minority, and the minor Plaintiff is his only son. Lakanji appears to have borrowed money on mortgage bonds of the family property in February 1891, in August 1891, in October 1891, and in May 1892, but the mortgage bond with which we have to deal is one dated the 14th of April 1893 for the amount I have stated.

The sole mortgagor was Lakanji who, at the date of the mortgage, was undoubtedly the karta or manager of the property of the joint family. On the 31st of August 1893 the present Defendant, as mortgagee, instituted a suit against Lakanji alone, to enforce the mortgage, and, in that suit, the usual mortgage decree was obtained on the 20th of February 1894. The present minor Plaintiff was not a party to that suit. In November 1893, he, through his grandmother as next friend, instituted a suit against his father for a partition of the joint ancestral property. The present Defendant, the mortgagee Golab Chand, was not a party to that suit, and a decree for partition was obtained on the 12th of March 1894. Lakanji died on the 23rd of July 1894; and when in September 1894, the mortgagee, Golab Chand, applied for execution of his decree against the minor Plaintiff, the objection was taken that the debts contracted by the father were for illegal or immoral purposes, and that the Plaintiff not having been made a party to the mortgage suit, the family property could not be sold. This objection was overruled; hence the present suit.

The suit was heard before the Subordinate Judge. He held that the money secured by the mortgage was not borrowed for illegal or immoral purposes, and that the partition decree was not binding upon the mortgagee, and dismissed the suit. There was then an appeal to this Court, and the appeal was heard before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Harington, who agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the money was not borrowed for immoral or illegal purposes, but differed upon the question as to whether, or not, the present minor Plaintiff, not having been a party to the mortgage suit, was bound by the decree in that suit. Mr. Justice Ghose has held that it was not necessary to make the minor Plaintiff a party to that suit, and that, in effect, he was represented by his father, who was the kurta of the family, and consequently he confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. Mr. Justice Harington, on the other hand, took the opposite view, and held that the minor Plaintiff was a necessary party to the suit, and was in favour of reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the decree was not binding upon the minor. In this conflict of opinion, an appeal has been preferred under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.

In this state of circumstances, the following questions appear to me to arise for our determination: first, whether the mortgage debt in question was contracted by Lakanji for illegal or immoral purposes; secondly, assuming that it was not whether the minor Plaintiff not having been made a party to the mortgage suit is bound by the decree made in that suit; and, thirdly, if that decree is not binding upon him, what relief is he entitled to in the present suit?

The first question may be readily disposed of. The Subordinate Judge, and both the Judges in this Court, confirming the Subordinate Judge, have held that the mortgage debt was not contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, and the learned vakil for the Appellant has not argued that point before us. It must, therefore, be taken as concluded that, as between the minor Plaintiff and the Defendant in this suit, the mortgage debt was not contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, and that the mortgage is a good and valid mortgage, no other ground having been even suggested for impeaching its validity. So much then for the first point.

The second point, to my mind, depends upon the true construction of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, which runs as follows:—"Subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, sec. 437, all persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this chapter (vis., Chapter IV) relating to such mortgage; provided the Plaintiff has notice of such interest."

In connection with this section, the first point we have to decide is, whether the Plaintiff, the mortgagee, had notice of the minor's interest; for it cannot be successfully disputed, nor has such a contention been seriously urged, that minor Plaintiff was not a person an interest in the property comprised in the mortgage.

It has been urged for the Respondent that this point has not been pleaded with sufficient precision, and that the Plaintiff ought to have specifically pleaded that at the date of the institution of the suit, the mortgagee had notice of the minor's interest. The pleading, no doubt, is not so precise as it might have been, but looking at paragraph 7 of the plaint and at paragraph 11, and at issue No. 6, it would, I think, be difficult to say that the point had not been raised. It is true that the Subordinate Judge has virtually not dealt with this question, and that there is no finding by him upon the question of notice or otherwise, but the point was argued before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Harington, and both Judges have found,* upon the evidence, that the Respondent had notice of the interest of the son, the minor plaintiff. I think we must, therefore, deal with this point which, in fact, is the foundation for the appeal under the Latters Patent. I am disposed to agree with the Respondent that the evidence is not very precise upon the point, but, looking at the admission by the Defendant's witnesses, it is difficult to say upon this question of fact that the view taken by the learned Judges is wrong. I therefore proceed upon the footing that when the suit was instituted, the mortgagee had notice of the minor Plaintiff's interest. That being so, ought he not to have been made a party to the mortgage suit? Sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act is compulsory. The words are "must be joined" as a party to any suit under this chapter relating to such mortgage. If then the minor had an interest, as he obviously had, in the property comprised in the mortgage, if the plaintiff had notice of such interest, as we hold he had, how can we say in the face of this section that he ought not to have been joined as a party?

It is urged that the minor Plaintiff was, through his father, a party to the mortgage suit, that his father as the karta or manager of the property of the joint family represented him in that suit; and that he was, in fact and in law, a party to that suit within the meaning of sec. 85, and in taking this view and in arriving at this conclusion, Mr. Justice Ghose has enquired into the law and relied upon the law, as it existed before the passing of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and has referred to and relied upon a number of cases to show what the law was when the statute was framed. But what we have to do is to look at the section which by reference to sec. 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure indicates, in very clear terms, who are to be regarded as representative persons, and they are trustees, executors and administrators. The father in the present case did not answer any of these descriptions.

In arriving at my conclusion in the case before us, I have no desire to impugn, nor could I judicially impugn, the various decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, upon which Mr. Justice Ghose relies, as showing what is the true position of a father in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of law. Those decisions are binding upon me. But what we have to consider is not what the law was before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, but what the Legislature has said is to be the law after the passing of the Act. The Transfer of Property Act was clearly an Act to codify a particular branch of the law, and in approaching and dealing with the case Mr. Justice Ghose appears to me to have adopted the very course which has been so much deprecated by Lord Herschell when advising the House of Lords in the case of the Bank of England v. Vagliano (1). "I think," said Lord Herschell, "the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute, intended to embody in a Code of particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that, on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of, as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions."

That view has been adopted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in dealing with a case, under the Indian Succession Act, equally with the Transfer of Property Act, a statute codifying the law, in the case of Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbashini Dassi (2), and I have myself taken the same view in the case of Raj Narain Bhadury v. Ashutosh Chuckerbutty (3). That Mr. Justice Ghose has adopted the course deprecated by the judgments to which I have referred is reasonably clear from the following passages, as in other passages, in his judgment: "With a view to determine this question it may be useful to consider, in the first instance, what was the state of the law, at the time when the Transfer of Property Act was passed, as to the true position of the father in a Mitakshara joint family and the rights and liabilities of a son, especially of a minor son, jointly interested with his father in ancestral property, when such property is charged by the father for a loan contracted by him, or when it is sold or is sought to be sold in execution of a decree obtained against him alone." And, in passing, I may observe that the cases in the Privy Council upon which Mr. Justice Ghose relies point only to a limited representation on the part of the father, for, if the father absolutely represented the son, it would not have been open to the son to bring a suit to impeach the mortgage on the ground that the advance was for an illegal and immoral purpose as clearly he could do. At the time the Transfer of Property Act was passed, the position of the father in a Hindu joint family as karta or manager, whether under the Daya-bhaga or Mitakshara Schools of law, was perfectly well-known and recognized, and yet the Legislature did not think fit to place him in the same category as a trustee, executor or administrator, or in other words as one who, in a suit to enforce a mortgage, might be sued as representing the interests of all the members of the joint family. If one were at liberty to speculate as to the motives of the Legislature in framing the section in question, I should have been disposed to say that it was so framed in order to get rid of the questions on this head which were raised in the cases relied upon by Mr. Justice Ghose, and to discourage and avoid multiplicity of suits by making it obligatory upon the mortgagee to bring all persons before the Court who had an interest in the property, and of whose interest he had notice. But I have no desire to speculate upon the motives which may have led to the language of this section: I prefer to rely upon the plain and unequivocal language of the section itself, which to my mind is absolutely clear upon the point, nor do I see why we should try to, or how we properly can get out of this plain and unequivocal language. I need scarcely add that all the cases to which I have referred were decided before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act.

In my opinion the minor Plaintiff ought to have been made a party to the mortgage suit, and, for the purposes of that suit, he was not represented by his father, the mortgagor.

The only other question is what are the present rights and remedies of the minor Plaintiff? It is urged for the Appellant that, inasmuch as the decree in the mortgage suit, by reason of his not having been a party to that suit is not binding upon him, he is entitled to a declaration to that effect; and we have been told, with an almost cynical frankness, that the advisers of the minor propose to leave the mortgagee to bring another suit to enforce his mortgage, and in that suit the minor will again set up that the debt was incurred for illegal and immoral purposes. It has not been suggested that there is any other possible defence open to the minor except the defence that the money was borrowed for illegal or impious purposes. But that very issue has been raised and tried in the present suit and has been decided adversely to the minor Plaintiff, and must now be taken as between him and the mortgagee to have been finally and conclusively determined.

If the minor had been a party to the original mortgage suit and it had been found in that suit, that the mortgage debt was not contracted for immoral or illegal purposes, as has now been found, and there were no other defence to the mortgagee's claim, what would have been the rights of the minor in that suit? Taking the mortgage to be valid, as it has been found in this suit to be, his only right, so far as I can see, would have been a right to redeem. That right has been offered him in this suit, and we are prepared to give him a decree to that effect, but the offer has been refused on the minor's behalf.

The whole matter is now before us, the minor Plaintiff has raised in this suit all the objections he can to the validity of the mortgage, and I can see nothing to prevent us from finally dealing with the matter, and placing the minor in the same position in which he would have been, had he been a party to the original mortgage suit; and I do not see that he can successfully claim more than this. No doubt in the case of Bhowani Prasad v. Kallu and others (4), the majority of the Judges held that the mortgagee decree-holder was not entitled to sell in execution of his decree for sale, the interest of the sons in the property comprised in the mortgage by the father. But there is material difference between the frame of the suit in that case, and the frame of the present. There the Plaintiff asked for a declaration that their interests were not bound by the decree in the suit to which they were not parties, upon the sole ground that they were not parties, and did not go into the merits of the validity of the mortgage; and that being so, the Court held that they were entitled to such a decree. But here the Plaintiff has gone into the merits, and upon the question of the validity of the mortgage the issue has been found against him, and I do not think he ought to be allowed to contest those merits again. He is in the same position in which he would have been had he been a party to the mortgage suit, and in that suit the validity of the mortgage had been decided against him. It seems to me that now the only right of the minor is to redeem; and that, as we now have all the parties before the Court, we can give him that right, if he asks for it; and that we ought not to make a decree in his favour merely on the footing that he was not a party to the mortgage suit, when he has invited a decision on the merits, and the decision is against him. It would have been different had he only sought a decree on the ground that he was not a party to the mortgage suit, in which case the validity of the mortgage would, if contested, have to be decided in another suit. But that question has now been decided in this suit. This view is not inconsistent with that taken by the High Court at Madras in two cases, one of Ramasamayyar v. Virasami Ayyar (5) which was followed in the case of Palani Goundan v. Ramyya Goundan (6) or with the principle laid down by the Bombay High Court in the case of Denji v. Sambhu (7).

Under these circumstances, seeing that the minor Plaintiff does not ask for liberty to redeem the mortgage, a right which I understand the mortgagee is not prepared to contest, and it having been found against the minor Plaintiff that the debt was not contracted for immoral or illegal purposes, and no other defence to the mortgagee's claim having been raised or even suggested, it seems to me that his suit and his appeal must fail and that both must be dismissed with costs.

P. for Rs. 7,000. On the 3rd November 1883 a fresh bond executed in favour of S. for Rs. 20,000 which, by its terms, kept alive the bond of 4th May 1883. S. sued on the bond of November 1883 only and not on the bond of May 1883, and obtained a decree on the bond of November. P. also brought a suit on his bond of June 1883 and obtained a decree.

•• Held—That the mere suing on the bond of November did not amount to a relinquishment by S. of his rights under the bond of 4th May 1883. There was no necessity for S. to sue on the bond of May in order to obtain a sale for the whole of their debt.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Allahabad High Court, dated the 9th of July 1897, reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, dated the 16th April 1895.

The facts relevant to this report are shortly as follows:—On the 4th May 1883 certain shares in certain villages were mortgaged in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant for Rs. 15,000. On the 30th June 1883 the same shares were mortgaged in favour of the Defendant-Respondent for Rs. 7,000. On the 3rd November 1883 a fresh mortgage was executed in favour of the Plaintiff of the same shares in addition to certain other shares in the same villages. This mortgage recited that Rs. 15,500 were due on account of the mortgage of the 1st May, that interest was due on the same, and that certain other debts had been incurred which brought up the total amount to Rs. 20,000 and to secure the repayment of this amount the fresh mortgage was executed. The interest payable under this new mortgage was 14 annas per cent. per mensem, whereas under the bond of 4th May it was 12 annas.

In 1885 the Plaintiff brought a suit on the mortgage of November 1883 only and not on the mortgage of May and obtained a decree for the amount of the debt under that bond. The Defendant also brought a suit on his bond of June 1883 and obtained a decree. Subsequently an order for sale of the properties was made under both the decrees. On the 7th February 1888 an order for distribution of the sale-proceeds under sec. 295 of the Code of 1877 was made by the Subordinate Judge of Meerut; by that order the Judge held that the Defendant was entitled to be paid in preference to the Plaintiff on the ground that in his decree the Plaintiff's right was solely based on the mortgage of November 1883 and not to any extent on the bond of May. The money was accordingly paid over to the Defendant.

The present suit was thereupon instituted on the 4th February 1891 for an order upon the Defendant to return to him the proceeds of the sale on the ground of the priority of their mortgage of May 1883. The Defendant contended that the suit was barred under Art. 13 of the Limitation Act, the suit not having been brought within one year of the order for distribution and that Plaintiff had lost his right to priority under the mortgage of May 1883. The High Court on appeal from the Subordinate Judge of Meerut decided that the suit was not barred by limitation, but that the Plaintiff had lost his priority under the mortgage of May 1883.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

Mr. Ross for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBERTSON.—The competition between the Appellants and the present Respondents who are the legal representatives of the original Respondent, Lala Phul Chand, deceased, is for moneys realised by the judicial sale of certain villages and paid over under judicial warrant to Lala Phul Chand. The villages were ordered to be sold in execution of certain decrees of which one was held by Lala Phul Chand and two by the Appellants. Those decrees proceeded upon mortgages, and the question on the merits of the suit is which of the parties had the preferable security.

The three bonds giving rise to the dispute were all validly granted and will now be stated in chronological order, without reference to any distinctive particulars irrelevant to the present controversy. On 4th May 1883 the villages (to the extent of certain shares also dealt with in the other two bonds) were hypothecated in favour of the Appellants for Rs. 15,500. On 30th June 1883 a bond of hypothecation of the same property was executed in favour of Lala Phul Chand for Rs. 7,000. On 3rd November 1883 a bond of hypothecation of the same property was executed in favour of persons now represented in interest by the Appellants for Rs. 20,000. The terms of this bond require further statement. It begins by declaring that Rs. 15,500 are due on account of the bond of 4th May 1883 in which the mortgagor's right was hypothecated. Then it sets out that interest is due and that other debts have been incurred, bringing out a total indebtedness of

SHANKAR SARUP v. LALA PHUL CHAND.

Rs. 20,000; and until repayment of all this money the borrower hypothecates what had been hypothecated in the bond for Rs. 15,500. In addition to the above he hypothecated certain other shares in the same villages. The interest under this new bond was to be 14 annas per cent. per mensem (the interest under the bond of May having been 12 annas).

In 1885 the Appellants obtained decrees for the amount of the debt under the bond of November 1883 and for enforcement of the hypothecation by sale. (Two decrees were taken, and not one only, merely because the amount of the bond was payable in moieties, but the Appellants having come to be in right of both moieties this introduces none but an apparent complication.) As the Respondents' contention on the merits depends mainly on these proceedings it is necessary to point out that in their plaints the Appellants sued on the bond of November 1883 alone, and not on the bond of May 1883; and this was the tenor of the decrees obtained on those plaints and also of the orders for execution which followed in due course. Meantime Lala Phul Chand had sued on his bond; and the claims of both parties as well as those of other creditors having matured, an order was made for sale and the sale took place. The sequel of those judicial proceedings was the distribution of the price; and in carrying this out as well as what had preceded the Subordinate Judge of Meerut was acting under the Civil Procedure Code, 1877, and particularly sec. 295. On 7th February 1888 an order was made for distribution of the price, and in it the Judge held that Lala Phul Chand was entitled to be paid in preference to the Appellants, on the ground that in their decrees the Appellants' rights were rested solely on the bond of November 1883 and not to any extent on the bond of May 1883 and accordingly that their rights were inferior to that of Lala Phul Chand under his bond of June 1883. The money was accordingly paid over to Lala Phul Chand.

The Appellants thereafter on 4th February 1891 filed the present petition of plaint, the remedy sought being that Lala Phul Chand should be ordered to return to the Appellants the proceeds of the sale on the ground of the priority of the hypothecation in their favour made in May 1883. The answer of the Respondents is, first, that the suit is time-barred under Art. 13 of the Limitation Act, the suit not having been brought within one year of the order for distribution made by the Subordinate Judge on 7th February 1888; and, second, that the Appellants had lost their right to found on the bond of May 1883 as conferring on them a priority over Lala Phul Chand's bond of June 1883. The Subordinate Judge of Meerut held the suit to be barred and by decree sealed on 3rd August 1891 he dismissed it. On 27th June 1893, this decree was set aside by the High Court of the North-West Provinces and the case was remanded. The Subordinate Judge on 16th April 1895 gave to the Appellants the decree sought for; but this decree was on 9th July 1897 set aside by the High Court who dismissed the suit with costs in all Courts. Against this decision the present appeal has been brought.

The theory of the Respondents' plea

that the suit is time-barred is that it is truly a suit to set aside the order of 7th February 1888 by which the Subordinate Judge ordered payment to Lala Phul Chand of the proceeds of the sale. That the money now sued for is the money so authorised to be paid over is certain. But it is to be observed that the same section of the Civil Procedure Code which authorised the order for payment to Lala Phul Chand authorises also the present suit by the Appellants. The 295th section while providing that the Judge under whose authority the sale takes place shall distribute the proceeds provides also that if all or any of such assets be paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets. It seems to their Lordships therefore that the present suit is in no sense an action to set aside the order of distribution of 7th February 1888 and that that order does not stand in the way of the present suit. The scheme of sec. 295 is rather to enable the Judge as matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties, without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights, which may be subsequently readjusted by a suit such as the present. Their Lordships approve of the decision on this point in Vishnu Bhikaji Phadke v. Achut Jagannath Ghate (1) and they concur in the further observation made by the learned Judge in that case that the application of the 13th Article is also precluded by the fact that the order for distribution was a step in an execution proceeding and was therefore made in the suit in which the decree was made which was in process of execution. The order for distribution was thus an order in a suit.

On the merits, their Lordships hold that the Appellants are entitled to prevail. If the bond of November 1883 be considered on its own terms, there is no room for the suggestion that it superseded the bond of May so as to impair the effect of that bond as a subsisting hypothecation. The argument of the Respondents was rather that the Appellants by their suing on the bond of November and not on the bond of May had relinquished their rights under the bond of May. No such inference can legitimately be drawn. The Appellants did not need to sue on the bond of May in order to obtain a sale for the whole of their debt, that being comprised in the bond of November. But in suing on the bond of November they did nothing to imply or to lead others to believe that they abandoned what apart from abandonment was a subsisting hypothecation; and in point of fact Lala Phul Chand in the suit on his own bond expressly recognised the bond of May as a subsisting and prior hypothecation.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court ought to be reversed, and the appeal to it ordered to be dismissed with costs, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge of 16th April 1895 be restored. The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

There is nothing in the law to prevent interest at the rate stipulated on a bond being decreed up to the date of actual payment.

Where a mortgage decree provided for interest to be recovered from the date of the decree till the date of payment :

Held—That the words “date of payment” meant the date of actual payment and not the last day fixed for payment in the decree.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th of August 1900, against the order of H. Holmwood, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Gya, dated the 12th of May 1900, reversing the order of Babu Jadu Nath Dass, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 10th April 1900.

This appeal arose out of an application for execution of a mortgage decree. The question was what was the meaning of the words ‘date of payment,’ as to whether they meant ‘the date of actual payment,’ or ‘the last day fixed for the payment’ in the decree. The portion of the decree material to this report was in the following words:—“ . . . It is ordered and decreed that this suit be decreed with costs; the Plaintiff do recover the sum of Rs. 1,118 principal with interest at the rate mentioned in the bond at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the suit, till the date of payment and the interest claimed by him, and costs with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum; and it is further ordered and decreed that if all the Defendants or any one of them pay the said amount of decretal money and interest and costs within six months from this date, then the Plaintiff shall give back to the Defendant or Defendants the mortgage bond. . . .” The decree was passed on the 16th July 1896.

The first Court held that the words ‘date of payment’ meant the ‘date of realization,’ and therefore interest should run up to the date of realization.

The District Judge, on appeal, took a contrary view and held that interest should run up to the date of the order making the decree absolute up to the 16th January 1897.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Suligram Singh for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 12th of May 1900, passed in an execution case.

The question raised before the District Judge, and now to be determined by us, is, what is the meaning of the words “date of payment” in the decree given by the Subordinate Judge upon a mortgage bond. From the judgment and decree it appears that the Court which passed that decree directed that the decree-holder was entitled to recover the principal sum due upon the mortgage, with interest at the stipulated rate at 2 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the suit down to the date of payment, and so on.

Now the Subordinate Judge, before whom the case first came, held that the "date of payment" referred to in the judgment and decree was the date of realization. But this order of the Subordinate Judge was set aside by the District Judge on appeal. He held that the "date of payment" did not mean, and could not mean, the date of realization, but the date of the order absolute, fixed under the provisions of sec. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The decree-holder now appeals; and after considering the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, who passed the decree upon the mortgage bond, we think that the words "date of payment" in that judgment and decree mean date of realization. We think they cannot possibly mean anything else.

No question of law really arises in this case; because the law on the point appears to be settled by the Privy Council in the case of Rameswar Koer v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (1), and we may further in support of this view cite the judgment of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, namely, the case of Bakar Sajjad v. Udit Narain Singh (2). These two cases, we think, unquestionably settle the law of the matter, with regard to which the District Judge seems to have taken an erroneous view. Further, it is not necessary for us to enter into the facts of the case at length.

(2) I. L. R. 21 All. 361 (1899).

It is sufficient to say that we do not agree with the interpretation of the Subordinate Judge's decree which has been adopted by the District Judge. As we have already said, we think that the date of payment in the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge means the date of actual realization.

For these reasons we set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge.

This order will carry costs, the hearing fee being assessed at three gold mohurs.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd of August 1899, against the decree of Babu Saroda Prosad Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Manbhoom, dated the 18th of April 1899.

This was a suit by the Plaintiff-Respondent, who was a decree-holder, against his judgment-debtor and a person to whom the judgment-debtor had granted an ijara of the property which the Plaintiff had caused to be attached in execution of his decree, for a declaration that the said ijara was null and void as against him. It appears that in execution of his decree the Plaintiff had attached the property on the 29th September 1891, and a Receiver was appointed at his instance to take charge thereof and to make over the proceeds of the property to the Plaintiff and other attaching creditors. While the Receiver was in possession of the property, the Defendant No. 1 presented to him an ijara pattah, said to have been executed by the judgment-debtor in his favour on the 7th November 1896, and asked the Receiver to accept rent from him. Hence the present suit.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by a decree-holder against his judgment-debtor and a person to whom the judgment-debtor had granted an ijara of the property which he (the decree-holder) had caused to be attached in execution of his decree. The attachment is said to have taken place on the 29th September 1891, and the ijara was executed on the 7th November 1896.

The facts, as set out in the plaint, are that, after the property was attached at the instance of the decree-holder a Receiver was appointed by the Court to take charge thereof, and to make over the proceeds of the property to the Plaintiffs and the other attaching creditors, and that subsequently, while the Receiver was in possession of the property, the Defendant No. 1, the ijaradar, presented before the Receiver the ijara pattah, and asked that the rent payable by him under the ijara might be received. But what took place upon that application being made is not stated. It is, however, alleged that this ijara was granted at a very low rent with the object of throwing difficulties in the way of recovery of the money due to the Plaintiffs and the other decree-holders. The Plaintiffs upon these allegations asked that it might be declared that the said ijara of the 7th November 1896 was null and void as against them.

The suit was contested by the ijaradar upon the ground that the question raised by the decree-holders should be decided by the Court executing the decree under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that there was no attachment properly so called upon the property, and that the property in question, being only a maintenance grant for the lifetime of the judgment-debtor, could not be attached and sold. A further question was raised, namely, whether the Plaintiffs had any cause of action.

The Subordinate Judge has negatived all the objections of the Defendant, and given the Plaintiffs the declaration that they asked for.

The Defendant, the ijaradar, has appealed against this decree.

Two main points have been discussed before us by the learned vakil for the Appellant, first, whether the Plaintiffs have any cause of action, and, secondly, whether the suit is barred by the provisions of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It would seem that these two questions are intimately connected with each other. Taking the first question, however, by itself, we should not be prepared to say that the Plaintiffs have no cause of action. The terms of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act are such as would favour a case like this. We need only refer in this connection to two of the illustrations given in that section. The first of these two illustrations, namely (d), is "A alienates to B property in which A has merely a life interest. The alienation is invalid as against C who is entitled as reversioner. The Court may in a suit by C against A and B declare that C is so entitled." The other illustration, (g), is "A is in possession of certain property. B, alleging that he is the owner of the property, requires A to deliver it to him. A may obtain a declaration of his right to hold the property." It is, we think, impossible to say that if the ijara pattah was set up by the Defendant, the ijaradar, before the Receiver, in respect of a property which had been attached at the instance of the Plaintiffs, and from which property they (the Plaintiffs) were entitled to have their decree satisfied, upon such a claim being preferred by the ijaradar, the Plaintiffs would not be entitled to come to Court and ask for a declaration that the ijara set up by the Defendant is invalid and inoperative as against themselves. But however that may be, if the Plaintiffs or the Receiver had brought the matter to the notice of the Court, the Court would have, as we take it, made some order or other upon the matter, viz., whether the Receiver was bound to receive from the ijaradar the rent payable under the ijara pattah, or should he, in accordance with the orders of the Court, which had been made, receive the whole of the collections from the property in question. Here comes the consideration of the question, whether this matter could have been dealt with under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The words of that section are:—

"The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit, namely (c), (omitting (a) and (b) which are not material for the purpose of the present question) any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree."

There can be no doubt that the matter that was raised upon the application of the ijaradar was a matter relating to the discharge or satisfaction of the decree which was then being executed, as we take it; because the action of the Receiver in receiving the rents and profits of the property under orders of the Court, and applying the same towards satisfaction of the claims* of the various decree-holders was a part of the execution of decrees. That being so, the only question which demands consideration is whether the ijaradar could be regarded as a representative within the meaning of the section. For if he might be so regarded, there could be no doubt that the question now raised by the Plaintiffs might well have been dealt with by the Court executing the decree. Whether the Defendant No. 1, who, subsequent to the alleged attachment, took a lease of the property, and is bound under the lease to pay only a portion of the usufruct of the property as rent thereof for a term of years, is a representative of the judgment-debtor, is a question which is not altogether free from difficulty. But having regard to some of the cases to which our attention has been called by the learned vakil for the Appellant, we are not prepared to say that he is not a representative within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code. In the case of Lalji Mal v. Nand Kishore (1) where a decree-holder brought a suit for a declaration that in execution of his decree a certain property which had been attached at his instance, but which had, subsequent to the said attachment, been sold to another party, was liable to be brought to sale in execution of his decree, it was held that the purchaser was a representative within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code. The learned Judges, in the course of their judgment, made amongst others the following observations :—

“Convenience, which is not always a good reason for laying down a provision of law, would suggest that a sale which was contrary to the provisions of sec. 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, should, if challenged* by the decree-holder, be a matter to be adjudicated upon under sec. 244. In our opinion; as the property in question was under attachment at the time* the sale took place, the purchaser must be treated as a representative of the judgment-debtor; on the same principle as he would have been a representative of the judgment-debtor by reason of his purchase, if the decree had been one for sale of a particular property. The position of a purchaser of a property affected by a decree for sale was discussed* by this Court in Madho Das v. Ranji Patak (2).” And they accordingly dismissed the suit upon that single ground.

In a later case, before the same Court, of Gur. Prasad v. Ram Lal (3) the same view was accepted. In that case the Plaintiff was the purchaser, and it was determined that the suit brought by him was not maintainable, it being held that he was a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Then in the case of Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (4), decided by a Full Bench of this Court, the question was raised what was the exact significance of the word “representative” as mentioned in sec. 244 of the Code. The facts of that case were that after a mortgage decree was passed, the equity of redemption subsisting in the mortgagor was sold in execution of a money decree at the instance of a third party, and the question was raised, whether, in the course of the execution of the mortgage decree he (the purchaser) could be allowed to come in under sec. 244 as a representative of the judgment-debtor. It was held that he could come in; and it seems to us that, "though the observations that were made by the then learned Chief Justice, who delivered the judgment of the Court, had reference to the facts of the particular case before them, yet they were such as to indicate that the word "representative" occurring in sec. 244 had a wider significance than "legal representative," namely, that it includes a person who is a representative in interest of the judgment-debtor; and this is the view which was substantially accepted by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Gur Prasad v. Ram Lal (3) to which we have already referred.

Having regard to the principle that underlies these cases, we think we ought to hold that the ijaradar in this case is a representative of the judgment-debtor, and it does not, to our minds, make any substantial difference in that principle that he has not acquired the whole interest of the judgment-debtor. Suppose the latter sold a fifteen-sixteenth share of the property which had been attached in execution of decree, could it be rightly said that because he retained in his hands a one-sixteenth share, therefore the assignee of the fifteen-sixteenth share of the property was not his representative quoad that share? The ijaradar, in this case, has under his ijara acquired a substantial interest in the property: he is bound under the terms of his ijara to pay, as it is alleged, a small share of the proceeds of the property, he being entitled to appropriate to himself the rest; and so far as regards the share of the proceeds which has thus been transferred to him, though for a term of years, he might well be regarded as a representative of the judgment-debtor.

Upon these grounds we are of opinion that the contention raised by the learned vakil for the Appellant that the present suit is not maintainable, having regard to sec. 244 of the Code ought to prevail.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to discuss the other questions raised before us.

The result is that this appeal will be allowed, and the suit dismissed; but having regard to the fact that the objection which has been raised by the Defendant and upon which he has succeeded is an objection as to the form of action, and does not really go to the merits of the case, and inasmuch as the merits were in the Court below found entirely against him and in favour of the Plaintiffs, we think that each party should bear his own costs in both Courts.

Reference was also made to the Limitation Act, Art. 25.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

HARINGTON, J.—The Plaintiff in this case sues the Defendant for slanders imputing unchastity to the Plaintiff.

The Defendant denies that he uttered the words in question, alleges that if spoken they are mere vulgar abuse: and that in any case they are not actionable without proof of special damage, and no special damage is alleged in the plaint.

The parties reside in adjoining houses: a quarrel broke out between their respective families; in the course of that quarrel the Defendant said something which caused the Plaintiff to prosecute him before the Magistrate under secs. 500 and 504 of the Penal Code, on the ground that he had made imputations on her chastity. The Defendant appeared to the summons, apologized and expressed his regret whereupon the charges were withdrawn.

It is alleged by the Plaintiff that on the following day this dispute broke out again, and that the Defendant not only uttered slanderous words about her in the presence of Sarat Chandra Shaw, Sada Nundo Shaw and Behary Lal Shaw: but also requested Sarat Chandra Shaw to warn his father not to accept from, or extend hospitality to her on the ground that she was an unchaste woman.

The slanderous words alleged to have been spoken in the presence of the Shaws were addressed to the Plaintiff in Bengali: translated into English they are "you are a prostitute; I will publish before all the caste people that you are a prostitute. I took you to the garden-house and to Kalighat, and had sexual intercourse with you." Sarat Chandra Shaw and Behary Lal Shaw depose that they heard the Defendant speak these words to the Plaintiff: the Defendant on the other hand denies that he ever spoke the words: and says that if the imputation were true he himself would be liable to be excommunicated.

In my opinion the evidence for the Plaintiff is to be believed. In the first place it is very unlikely that the Plaintiff who had just accepted an apology from the Defendant would reopen the matter without a fresh cause of offence, and moreover when tested by cross-examination she and the witnesses who were called on her behalf appeared to be telling a truthful story. The Defendant, on the other hand, says he never abused the Plaintiff on any occasion, and suggests that the Magistrate was responsible for the apology he is said to have made in the Police Court. That I do not believe: I have no doubt that he did abuse the Plaintiff, and that when brought up in the Police Court he did apologize and withdraw what he had said. In view of the way he has given his evidence as to the first quarrel I am not disposed to give credit to his account, rather than to the Plaintiff's account of the second quarrel.

The speaking of the other slander complained of is deposed to by Sarat Chandra Shaw: I think words of the purport alleged were spoken, for the Defendant admits in cross-examination that he used to go about saying he would have nothing to do with the Plaintiff. On the evidence therefore I find as a fact that the slanders complained of were spoken and published concerning the Plaintiff.

It is asserted that they are mere vulgar abuse. In my opinion they are not. They convey a distinct imputation of unchastity and allege a specific charge of an act of immorality.

The next question is, has any special damage been alleged or proved by the Plaintiff?

In the plaint no special damage is alleged: the 8th paragraph only alleges such general damages as would not support an action for slanderous words not actionable per se if brought in England.

The evidence which has been given is not such as would have supported any statement of special damage which could have been framed. The Plaintiff herself stated in examination-in-chief that Sarat Chandra Shaw to whom the slander was published had accepted her hospitality since the slander, and that she herself had been invited out just as before. She did indeed state that Jibon Kristo Shaw, Hubbo Churn Shaw and some other person had not been to her house but she did not connect them with the slanders in any way. As the case stood at the close of the Plaintiff's examination-in-chief there was no sort of evidence of any actual damage of any kind whatever. But the Defendant cross-examined on this point, and did elicit that a statement had been made in her hearing as to why those persons would not come to her house, and when asked in re-examination what the statement was, the Plaintiff said that this was that they had refused to come in response to an invitation because of the imputations cast on her!

Sarat Chandra Shaw is the only person who is called who professes to have ceased going to the Plaintiff's house because of the slanders uttered by the Defendant. But I disbelieve him on this point. First, because he is flatly contradicted by the Plaintiff; secondly, because he did not warn his father as the Defendant desired him to, and as I believe he would have done if he had seen any reason for avoiding the Plaintiff's house; thirdly, because he admits he did not believe the slanders, and if he did not believe them he had no reason for avoiding the Plaintiff's house. There is nothing to shew that it was any words spoken by the Defendant which induced Jibon and Hubbo and the other man to refuse the Plaintiff's hospitality: my conclusion on this part of the case is that no actual damage has been proved to have occurred to the Plaintiff and no evidence moreover has been given to shew that conduct such as that imputed to the Plaintiff would have subjected her to any penal, or quasi penal consequences at the hands of the members of her caste. On the facts, therefore, I find that the Defendant poke and published the words complained of by the Plaintiff: that these words conveyed the imputation that the Plaintiff was unchaste: that they were spoken falsely and maliciously: but that they caused the Plaintiff no actual damage whatever.

On these facts two contentions are raised by the Plaintiff (i) that the words convey an insult and that for the mental distress caused by such insult damages are recoverable and (ii) that the words are defamatory and are actionable without special damage.

The first of these propositions was unsuccessfully propounded in this Court in the Full Bench case of Grish Chandra Mitter v. Jatadhari Sadukhan (1). I am bound by the decision of the majority of the Court in that case: and with that decision I thoroughly agree.

There is no instance in English law in which an action on the case for mental distress caused by criminal or tortious act will lie. A wrongful act causing death might subject the wrong-doer to punishment for manslaughter; it might cause the acutest mental distress to a parent or child of the deceased: but it gave no right of action at common law and even under Lord Campbell's Act the damages recoverable for such a wrong are strictly limited to the actual pecuniary loss sustained, and do not include sentimental damages.

In Wilkinson v. Downton (2) the lie told must have caused the Plaintiff the acutest mental distress, but it was the physical suffering consequent on nervous shock which formed the ground on which damages were claimed.

Although mental distress caused to the Plaintiff may be taken into consideration in aggravation of damages: alone it gives no right to recover damages. The English law on the subject was laid down in the House of Lords by Lord Wensleydale in these words "mental pain or anxiety the law cannot value, and does not pretend to redress, when the unlawful act complained of causes that alone," Lynch v. Knight (3) and that, since the Full Bench decision to which I have referred, expresses what is the law here.

The next question, namely, whether defamatory words imputing unchastity to woman are actionable in this country without proof of special damage was left open by the Full Bench case to which I have referred.

Under the law of England as it stood prior to 1891 such words would not be actionable without proof of special damage: is that law to be applied in this country? It is stated in Morley's Digest, p. xxii, that the common law of England as it prevailed in 1726 is the law administered by the Supreme Court: and that statement is treated as correct by Lord Kingsdown in the case of the Advocate-General of Bengal v. Ranee Surnomoye Dossee (4) in which he observes that the English law, civil and criminal, has been usually considered to have been made applicable to natives within the limits of Calcutta in the year 1726, by the Charter of 13 Geo. 1. This must be taken subject to certain limitations; many provisions of the English law—as for example that under which bigamy is a felony—were obviously unsuitable to the natives of this country and are therefore not introduced.

But there is nothing unreasonable having regard to the customs of this country in holding that that part of the common law of England which gave a person injured by slanderous words the right to recover damages in an action, has been introduced. In my opinion it is by virtue of the common law of England, introduced into Calcutta by the Charter of 1726 that the action is maintainable.

It may be laid down that under the English law the malicious publication of any falsehood, oral or written, whether defamatory or not, if it is calculated to produce and does produce actual damage gives a right of action to the person damaged by such publication: Ratcliffe v. Evans (5).

There are certain conditions under which the false and malicious publication of words gives a right of action notwithstanding that no actual damage is proved to have been produced. These are when they are defamatory and are committed to writing—when they impute that the Plaintiff is guilty of a crime—when they impute that he is suffering from an infectious or contagious disease or when they impute misconduct or incompetence to the Plaintiff in the way of business. These are the exceptions: in all other cases (except those arising under the Slander of Women Act, 1891) the regular rule is followed, namely, that words, to be actionable, must be proved to have caused actual damage. The existence of the rule and the exceptions appear to have been recognized by the Legislature of this country when they passed the Limitation Act, Schedule 2, Art. 256.

Several cases were cited by the Plaintiff of which the most important is the case of Parvathi v. Mannar (6) in which it was held at Madras by Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Muthesami Ayyar, J., that words imputing unchastity to a woman were actionable without proof of special damage. The learned Judges after pointing out that the cases on the subject are conflicting, condemn the rule of law which enables damages to be recovered for the publication of written defamatory matter without proof of actual injury, while it calls for that proof in the case of oral slander—and in holding that the action will lie say “the true test of the right to maintain the suit should be whether the defamatory expressions were used at a time and under such circumstances as to induce in the person defamed a reasonable apprehension that his reputation has been injured, and to inflict on him the pain consequent on such a belief,” and further they say that the person who deliberately defames another ought to be made responsible for damages for the mental suffering his wrong doing occasions.

In Kasiram Krishna v. Bhatu Bapuji (7) which was cited in support of the Plaintiff's case is expressed to be a suit in the mofussil between Hindus to which English law is not to be applied. Jogeshwar Sharma v. Dinaram Sharma

(7) 7 Bom. H. C. R. (A. C.) 17 (1870).

(5) L. R. (1892) 2 Q. B. 524.

SM. BHOONI MONEY DASSEE v. NOTOHAR BISWAS.

Bhattarcharji (8) is only cited from the Short Notes of the C. W. N. and the note is necessarily too much compressed to give the reasons for the judgment.

In Dewan Singh v. Mahip Singh (9) the very lengthy judgment which was delivered by Mahmood, J., turned on the question whether abuse was actionable.

Of the cases cited therefore the only one which really supports the Plaintiff's case is that which was decided by the Madras High Court—and when the test laid down in that case is examined, it is found to involve the proposition that damage ought to be recoverable for mental distress alone, and that is a proposition, which has been shewn by the Full Bench decision* to which I have referred, to be untenable.

But ought this particular class of slander, i.e., that imputing unchastity to a woman to be added to the list of exceptions to the general law and to be held to be actionable where no damage is proved to have been caused?

It is urged that this should be so because English Judges in certain cases notably Lynch v. Knight (3) and Roberts v. Roberts (10) have made strong comments on the unsatisfactory state of the English law—no doubt the law in England previous to the passing of the Slanders of Women Act was unsatisfactory: the Courts had placed a very narrow construction on what was the special damage necessary to support the action—and unless the slanderous words were reduced into writing the criminal law afforded no redress. But those reasons do not apply here: the slanderer can be punished criminally whether his slanders are reduced into writing or not: a successful prosecution in the Criminal Courts would clear the character of any slandered lady, as effectually and probably more effectually than it would be cleared if she were entitled to claim pecuniary compensation for damage which she was unable to prove she had suffered.

Where it is proposed to depart from the rules of English law which have been introduced into this country it must be shewn that those rules if adhered to in this country will work an injustice or a hardship. Here no injustice is worked by an adherence to those rules because in cases where the person aggrieved is unable to prove that he has suffered actual damage he can call in the criminal law to punish the wrong-doer. Prima facie there is nothing repugnant to justice equity and good conscience in calling on a person who is claiming pecuniary compensation for damage caused by a wrongful act to prove that some damage has been caused to him by the act of which he complains.

In my opinion the Plaintiff has failed to shew that the rules of English law applicable to the present case ought to be departed from—and inasmuch as the words are not per se actionable, and no damage in fact has been alleged or proved, the action must be dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL No. 321 OF 1901.

GHOSE, J.

GHATU PRAMANIK OF

TAYLOR, J.

SHEIK, Appellant,

1901.

v.

1, June.

THE KING-EMPEROR.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 84, 302—Murder—Insanity, plea of—Criminal responsibility—Unsoundness of mind—Sullen disposition—Insanity of other members of the family of the accused—Right and wrong, knowledge of—Delusion, mental—Demeanour and conduct of accused at the trial—Medical observation, if necessary.

Where the plea of insanity is taken on behalf of an accused person, the question that arises is not whether at the time of the trial the man was of unsound mind but whether he was so at the time of the commission of the deed, and whether by reason of that unsoundness of mind he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong.

The criminal responsibility of a person suffering from an insane delusion and committing an offence in consequence thereof, depends upon the nature of the delusion; if the man was labouring under a partial delusion only and was not in other respects insane, he must be considered to be in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion existed were real.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KADER NASYER SHAH
(1), In re M'NAGHTEN, (2) referred to.

The estimate of the guilt of a person suffering from and acting under the influence of a delusion must be made upon the basis of the actual existence of the facts in regard to which the delusion existed; and whether the person was under a misapprehension in regard to the delusion or not, his culpability would be the same.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th of May 1901, against the order of the Sessions Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 20th of April 1901.

The facts of the case appear fully from the judgment of Ghose, J.

No one appeared in this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GHOSE, J.—The Appellant Ghatu has been convicted of the offence of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. The Judge and the assessors who sat with him, were agreed as to the guilt of the accused, though one of the assessors was of opinion that he (the accused) was insane.

The person killed was a lad, 8 years old, and was the brother-in-law of the accused.

That he killed the accused, there can be no doubt upon the evidence. The only question is whether he was at the time of unsound mind, and incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law, and therefore excused from responsibility (sec. 84, I. P. C.).

The occurrence took place early at dawn of the 28th October of the last year (12th Kartick). The Appellant came on the preceding day to his father-in-law's house, where his wife (a girl of 11 as stated by the parents, but of 13 as stated by the girl herself before the committing officer) was residing at the time. He slept that night in the same hut with his father-in-law, his deceased brother-in-law, and another brother-in-law (a witness for the prosecution), while his wife slept with his mother-in-law in an adjoining hut, and at dawn, while it was still somewhat dark, he struck the deceased, who was sleeping on the same bed with his father, with an axe which was in the hut, and then ran away, throwing the axe in a jungle close by, and went to his own house, at a distance of about 2 miles, and he stayed there, until the next day when he was arrested by a constable, and brought before a Sub-Magistrate, to whom he made a confession saying that on the night of the occurrence there was a sankirtan in the house of a neighbour of his father-in-law, where he was invited; to that sankirtan his wife did not go, and there he observed his little brother-in-law (the deceased) and his name-sake and friend (Ghatu) having a private conversation, that his name-sake placed a rupee in the hands of the deceased, with which the latter went to the house of his father-in-law, and entered into the hut where his wife then was, and when he came away, his name-sake went into the same hut, and left it after some little time. That he saw all this from a short distance; that in consequence of what he saw he had not a wink of sleep that night, and that he was out of his senses on account of the disgrace he felt and that at the time he killed the deceased he was, out of rage and feeling of disgrace, devoid of his senses. No notice seems then to have been taken by any officer of this last-mentioned statement of the accused.

If the officers concerned had done other duty the accused would have probably been placed under medical observation in order to find out, if possible, whether he was of unsound mind at the time of occurrence. But nothing seems to have been done. The preliminary enquiry was commenced early in November; the case was postponed several times; and it was not until the 13th March that the accused was called upon to make a statement before the committing officer, when he retracted his confession, and alleged that he did not know what he had said before; that he had been maltreated by the Police; and that what he did say was under compulsion. It cannot but be regretted that the enquiry in the committing officer's Court should have been conducted in this careless and dilatory manner.

It does not, however, appear that anything else was said by the accused, or on his behalf, before the committing officer as to the state of his mind at the time of the occurrence; but the question seems to have been raised before the Sessions Court, as we may well gather, though we do not find any record of the plea raised by or on behalf of the accused (sec. 271 of the Code). The only record that we find is that the charge was explained to the accused.

The learned Judge has accepted the confession of the accused and believed "the essential truth" of the statement made by him as to the motive for the act committed by him, viz., that he saw that his wife was grossly unfaithful and was assisted in her immorality by the deceased. He has disbelieved the statement by the parents that the wife went that night to the sankirtan, but seems to have accepted the story told by the mother that the accused came with a dao at midnight and unfastened the door of the hut in which she and the girl were sleeping, but went back to the other hut when he was discovered; and has held that the defence of insanity was not proved. And further that his demeanour and conduct during the trial were perfectly those of a sane man.

The question, however, was not whether at the time of the trial the man was of unsound mind but whether he was so at the time of the commission of the deed, and whether by reason of that unsoundness of mind he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong.

Some evidence has been adduced by the defence to the effect that the father and one of the brothers of the accused were lunatics; that he was of sullen disposition, and became insane for a time; but as stated by his mother this was only up to Ashin last, and that "he recovered and worked regularly in Kartick" (the occurrence being on the 12th Kartick). Assuming it to be true that he was of sullen disposition, and that for some little time before, had a touch of insanity, it does not appear that there was anything like it when he committed the deed; and it seems to me that the conduct of the accused in killing the deceased early at dawn, when his father-in-law was apparently asleep, and his other brother-in-law (Lalu) had gone out to ease himself (as the evidence shows), and then running away, throwing the axe, as he ran away, in a jungle, and remaining quietly in his own house until arrested, indicate that he was not in such a state of unsound mind as disabled him from distinguishing between right and wrong.

A difficulty no doubt arises upon the question of motive. According to the evidence for the prosecution, there was absolutely none for the crime. As deposed to by the parents of his wife, and the wife herself, she was but a young girl of 11, who had not yet attained at puberty, and that she went to the sankirtan party with the accused and others that night, and therefore there could be no criminal intimacy between the other Ghatu and the girl, and that the accused could not have seen anything wrong. The learned Judge, as already stated, has disbelieved the story of the members of the family in this respect. And this he has done relying upon the statements made by the accused before the Sub-Magistrate on the 29th October.

Upon the evidence of the members of the family, the confession made and the motive assigned by the accused, would seem to be not genuine. But there is nothing to show that the confession was made under any compulsion: it was made on the very day that the man was arrested. And it is not improbable that the members of the family having learnt the statements made by the accused before the Sub-Magistrate, thought it prudent, for the reputation of the family to assert that the girl was not in the house, but went to the sankirtan and that she had not attained puberty, though as already stated, the girl herself gave her age before the committing officer to be 13.

If there was anything upon this record to indicate that the confession was not case not established against the two Appellants, Yasin and Tamiz.

NAZIM v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge proceeds largely upon "confessions," since retracted, which he has used not only against the makers, but also against the other accused in the case.

It is obvious that a retracted confession should carry practically no weight against a person other than the maker, it is not made on oath, it is not tested by cross-examination, and its truth is denied by the maker himself, who has thus lied on one or other of the occasions. The very fullest corroboration would be necessary in such a case, far more than would be demanded for the sworn testimony of an accomplice on oath. In the present case the Judge has acted upon these confessions without any indication that he has appreciated this inherent weakness. We will now consider the facts of the case. On the 23rd July 1900, the house of the complainant was broken into under circumstances which amounted to an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C. Property was stolen, and upon information from one Abdul Ali the Appellant and two other persons were arrested. Some time after the occurrence Nazim and Yasin made confessions, and there is the evidence of the wife of Nazim to the effect that Nazim and Arabdi and others went to commit theft and afterwards divided the spoil. There is also evidence that Tamiz gave up some buttons, which were part of the stolen property. As to the propriety of the conviction of Nazim there can be no doubt. This confession of the 11th October was repeated on the 30th. And it was not withdrawn at the trial, it is marked by the Sessions Judge as put in evidence. It is to be noted that in the second statement he exculpated Yasin, saying he did not go to commit the theft, and the evidence of his wife does not inculpate Yasin. Even, if the statement of Nazim was ever formally put in evidence against Yasin, the latter certainly was not questioned in respect of it. It does appear, however, that on the 11th of October Yasin admitted before a Magistrate that he was one of the party of thieves, and that he got Rs. 15 as his share, but that he had spent it. On the 30th October he alleged that he had made that statement in fear of his life. This was apparently his first opportunity of retracting.

His confession was by no means full of detail. The evidence on record does not show when the arrest was made, or how the Appellant came to make a confession, when no property was found in his possession.

As Nazim contradicts himself in respect of Yasin and as he also tried to minimize his own guilt by saying that he protested against the expedition, the case against Yasin practically rests on his uncorroborated and retracted confession. This is not sufficient under the circumstances of this case to warrant his conviction.

Arabdi made no confession, but he is named by Yarchand, the wife of Nazim, as having advised the theft, and as having joined in it. The accusation by Nazim may be considered against him if that statement was put in evidence against him, but as there is no allusion to it in the examination of this man, it seems doubtful whether it was really put in evidence against him. At any rate its evidential value would be of the slightest. The confession of Yasin must be discarded as against Arabdi. There is however the further fact that some of the stolen property was recovered from this man. His explanation of its possession is not satisfactory. He admits that he burnt a sack in which the buttons were kept and that he gave the buttons to Tamiz to dispose of as he was told that the possession might damage him. We do not doubt his knowledge that the property was stolen, and his explanation is not sufficient.

NAZIM v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Finally we have Tamiz. He did not confess, and says that the buttons were given to him by Arabdi, and that he hid them in some water, and gave them up to the Police. Putting aside the mention of his name by Nazim and Yasin, it is sufficiently proved that he received the buttons with the knowledge that they were stolen property.

Then as to the punishment, Nazim has been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment, and the others to three years each. As in the case of the Appellants other than Nazim, it is admittedly a first offence, the sentence in their case is too severe. Cases of this nature are constantly settled by the Court of the Magistrate, and only in exceptional circumstances do they require a heavier sentence than a Magistrate is competent to inflict. While acquitting Yasin altogether, we would reduce the sentences upon Arabdi and Tamiz to two years' rigorous imprisonment each.

But in regard to Nazim, who has admitted in his examination in the lower Court that he has been three times previously convicted, once in 1889, twice in 1890, and once by the Sessions Court in 1894, when he was sentenced to six years, all the convictions being for theft or receiving stolen property, the case is, on a different footing.

Now there is on the record no copy of any judgment or extract from a judgment, or any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous convictions as is required by sec. 91 of the Evidence Act or sec. 511, Criminal Procedure Code. There was thus no legal evidence to support the charge in respect of such previous convictions. The examination of the Appellant in the lower Court in respect of those convictions was also without legal warrant or justification, see sec. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, and the case of Basanta Kumar Ghattak v. Queen-Empress (1).

But on the Sessions record, pages 39 and 46, we have a record of an admission by the Appellant Nazim of these previous convictions duly recorded. Under sec. 310, Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge was justified in proceeding to pass sentence on him accordingly. The irregularity in the enquiry is to be regretted, and should have been detected and remedied at the trial, but it does not appear that the accused was prejudiced by reason of it.

As for the sentence on Nazim, he appears to be incorrigible, he can only very recently have been released from jail, and is again in his evil ways. I would dismiss his appeal.

Appeal allowed in part.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 1096 OF 1900.

TEKAIT MON MOHINI
JOMADAI ailas MOHINI.
GHOSE, J. DEBI, Defendant,
STEVENS, J. Appellant,
1901.

20, March. RAI BASANT KUMAR
SINGHA, Plaintiff,
Respondent.

Hindu law—Suit for enforcement of conjugal rights—Act XII of 1887—Husband contracting out of his rights—Public policy—Marriage under the Hindu law.

Where, in a suit by a Hindu husband for enforcement of conjugal rights, the wife relied on an agreement, executed at the time of marriage by the guardians of the husband, then a minor, and also by the husband, covenanting that the husband would always live at his mother-in-law's house and that the wife would never be required to leave her parental home and reside elsewhere with her husband :

Held—That the parties being Hindus, the rule of decision in such a case is, in accordance with sec. 37 of Act XII of 1887, the Hindu law except in so far as it has by legislative enactment been altered or abolished.

Under the Hindu law, marriage, besides being a contract is a sacrament, it being more religious than secular in character and it is the bounden duty of the wife to live with her husband wherever the latter may choose to reside and to submit herself obediently to the authority of the husband :

Held also—That the agreement relied on by the wife, if permitted, would defeat a rule of Hindu law and is opposed to public policy.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th of June 1900, against the decree of E. G. Drake Brockman, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Midnapore, dated the 14th of June 1900, modifying the decree of Babu Baroda Prosunno Shome, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated 7th of April 1900.

The facts of the case are shortly these:—

This appeal arose out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights instituted by the husband. At the time of the marriage of the Plaintiff, he was a minor and an agreement called pratijna-patra was executed by the father and mother of the Plaintiff to the following effect:—

“That we solemnly promise that you having decided to keep my eldest son, Sriman Rai Basanta Kumar Singha, baba-jiban, in your own house, after having married your eldest daughter to him, and having asked for my permission and that of my wife, thereto, we both give our consent thereto and execute this pratijna-patra to the effect that neither I nor my wife shall ever propose to take our said son to our own house nor shall we be competent to take him there. He will live for ever at your ghar (house) at Kultikari, and will very happily continue to carry on the business of the Raj. To this effect we of our own accord execute this pratijna-patra (deed of promise) in the presence of respectable and other men of this place. Finis. Dated the 9th of Falgoun 1292.” To this was added the following lines:—
“I, Sri Rai Basanta Kumar Singha (i.e., the Plaintiff) being bound by this deed of promise, do promise that I shall not be competent to take my wife from this place to my own father's house or to any other place. I shall always carry out your orders, and I shall not be competent to do any act or to go to any place without your permission. Finis."

The Plaintiff lived at the house of his father-in-law for about 15 years, but subsequently disagreement broke out between the Plaintiff and his wife, the Defendant, and her mother. He thereupon left his father-in-law's house and demanded that his wife should come over and reside with him in his own house at Jehanabad. On the Defendant's refusal, the present suit was instituted. By way of defence, the Defendant set up the pratijna-patra and pleaded that it was against the custom of her family for a daughter to reside with her husband away from her father's house; that the Plaintiff had been guilty of cruelty towards her and had not the means to maintain her. The Subordinate Judge granted a decree upon certain conditions. On appeal by the Defendant, the District Judge confirmed the judgment of the Sub-Judge but modified some of the conditions. The Defendant now appealed from that judgment and decree.

The Advocate-General (The Hon'ble J. T. Woodroffe, with him Sir Griffith Evans, Babus Saroda Charan Mitter, Srish Chunder Chaudhuri and Dr. Sarat Chunder Banerjee) for the Appellant.—I contend that the suit cannot be regarded as one for the restitution of conjugal rights, because here the foundation for such a suit, namely, denial of the right of co-habitation, or withdrawal from co-habitation, is entirely absent. It is a suit to compel the Defendant wife to go to a particular place. Now, the Plaintiff and his parents acting as his guardians covenanted in express terms that the Defendant would not be required to leave her parental home and that agreement is a complete answer to the Plaintiff's suit. There is nothing in the argument that the Plaintiff was a minor at the time of the agreement, because such an agreement is capable of ratification after attainment of majority and there has been such ratification. See Ramasawmi Aiyar and ors. v. Vencataramaiyan (14). The Indian Contract Act has abrogated all personal laws about contract. Now, is there anything in the agreement relied upon by the Defendant which is against the provision of any law or is calculated to defeat the provisions of any law? Is there, again, anything in the Hindu law which is opposed to the spirit and the letter of the agreement? I submit there is none. The Hindu law nowhere says that a husband cannot contract himself out of the rights which that law gives him as a husband. The rights and duties of spouses, laid down in the Hindu law, are in no way peculiar to that system: the English law requires the same duties and the same amount of obedience to the will of the husband. There is absolutely nothing in this agreement which is contrary to public policy. See Pollock's Contract, pages 297—304 and the cases cited therein. There can be nothing against public policy if a person contracts himself out of a right which the law ordinarily gives him for his own benefit. It has been held in England that there is nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in a covenant not to sue for restitution of conjugal rights. See Wilson v. Wilson (10). See also Hunt v. Hunt (15), Marshall v. Marshall (9), Clark v. Clark (16). All that the husband does in the present agreement is to renounce his right to choose the place of co-habitation and I submit that beyond that there is nothing in the agreement which amounts to anything like an absolute renunciation of conjugal rights. The Plaintiff resided for years together at his mother-in-law's house and has permitted his wife and children to remain with and be maintained by the mother-in-law for a period of fifteen years and that fact will have to be considered.

Sir Griffith Evans who followed on the same side.—I submit there is no precedent for the proposition that the Court would compel a wife, who has never refused to render to the husband his conjugal rights, to go and reside at a particular place. Suits for restitution of conjugal rights are seldom brought for any other object than to enforce a money demand. See the remarks of Hannen, L. J., in Marshall v. Marshall (9) and this is a case where these remarks are peculiarly applicable.

Babu Shama Prosunno Mazoomdar for the Respondent.—The matter ought to be decided by the Hindu law alone; by that law marriage is a sacrament, and the rights and obligations of the parties are not created by contract but arise out of the status, and cannot be altered by contract. (Banerjee's Tagore Lectures on Marriage and Stridhan, 2nd Ed., p. 107). There has clearly been a refusal of the wife to co-habit, and this is a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. See the remarks of Straight, J., in the case of Paigi v. Sheo Narain (8). See also Hamidun-nessa Bibi v. Zohiruddin Sheikh (3). The contract relied on by the Defendant is contrary to Hindu law. It is against public policy as it imposes an unreasonable restriction on the Plaintiff's personal liberty and a person cannot contract to become a slave.

The Advocate-General in reply.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

GHOSE, J.—The appeal arises out of a suit for enforcement of conjugal rights.

The Plaintiff and the Defendant were married on the 9th Falgoon, 1292 Amli corresponding to the 18th February 1885, at a time when they were both minors. The Defendant is the daughter of the Rajah of Kultikari in the district of Midnapur. The Rajah was then dead, and the Defendant was given away in marriage by her mother. The Plaintiff's parents agreed that their son should be married to the Defendant; and at the time of the marriage, an agreement described in this suit as pratijna-patra was executed by them, and it ran as follows:—

"That we solemnly promise that you having decided to keep my eldest son, Sriman Rai Basanta Kumar Singha, babajiban, in your own house, after having married your eldest daughter to him, and having asked for my permission and that of my wife, thereto, we both give our consent thereto and execute this pratijna-patra to the effect

To this effect we of our own accord execute this pratigna-patra (deed of promise) in the presence of respectable and other men of this place. Finis. Dated the 9th of Falgoon 1292."

To this was added the following lines:—

"I, Sri Rai Basanta Kumar Singha (i.e., the Plaintiff) being bound by this deed of promise, do promise that I shall not be competent to take my wife from this place to my own father's house or to any other place. I shall always carry out your orders, and I shall not be competent to do any act or to go to any place without your permission. Finis." This document was signed by the Plaintiff's parents and by the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff lived at Kultikari in the house of his father-in-law for about 15 years, but subsequently disagreement broke out between the Plaintiff on the one hand, and the Defendant and the Defendant's mother, the Rani, on the other, the result being that the Plaintiff was not agreeable to live with the Defendant in her father's house, and demanded that she should come over and live with him in his own house at Jehanabad in the district of Hughli, which it is alleged she refused to do; and thereupon the present suit was brought for a decree directing the Defendant to live with the Plaintiff at his own house.

The suit was defended by the Defendant upon the ground that it was against the custom of the family for the daughter of the Rajah to go and live in the house of her husband; that the claim was against the provisions of the ekramnama of the 9th Falgoon 1292; that the Plaintiff always lived in the house of her father and was being maintained from the allowance given by the Defendant's mother; that the Plaintiff had been guilty of cruelty to the Defendant; that he had no means of his own to maintain the Defendant, and so forth. And the Defendant further alleged that on account of the violence committed by the Plaintiff and his ill-treatment of the Defendant, a complaint was lodged before the Collector as representing the Court of Wards (in whose hands the Kultikari estate then was) and thereupon the Plaintiff was forbidden to enter the house of the Defendant's father; and also that in a previous suit between the parties, which had for its object the obtaining of possession of the Defendant by the Plaintiff as his wife, there was a compromise between the parties to the effect that the Defendant would forgive the Plaintiff and pay him maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 30 to enable him to live separately; and that the suit was therefore barred by res judicata.

The Subordinate Judge before whom the suit was instituted laid down, amongst others, the following issues:—

"Is the suit res judicata?"

"Whether the Plaintiff is precluded from compelling the Defendant's removal from her father's house either by contract, family custom, or otherwise?"

"Is the Defendant's allegation of ill-treatment true?"

"What relief, if any, is Plaintiff entitled to?"

TEKAIT MON MOHINI JOMADAI v. RAI BASANT KUMAR SINGHA.

That officer held that the suit was not barred by res judicata; that the Plaintiff was under age at the time of the contract, and that it was not binding upon him; that the custom pleaded by the Defendant was not proved; that the Plaintiff was entitled under the Hindu law to the enforcement of his marital rights; that the agreement pleaded by the Defendant of the 12th Falgoun 1292 was without any consideration, and was no bar to the maintenance of the suit; but that the Plaintiff had been guilty of rather harsh treatment towards the Defendant and therefore though he (the Plaintiff) was entitled to the decree claimed, it must be subject to certain conditions which he thought ought to be imposed. One of the conditions that he did impose was that the Plaintiff should not be allowed to take his wife to the district of Hughli, but that he must reside with her in the town of Midnapur in a suitable house which he must provide, and that, to ensure the comfort of the Defendant, he must engage a sufficient number of servants.

The Defendant appealed against this decree, and the District Judge on appeal has confirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, but has modified the decree in regard to some of the conditions which that officer imposed. I may here mention that the Judge sets out in his judgment the various points that were urged on behalf of the Defendant before him, and he has dealt in his judgment with all those points.

In second appeal before us by the Defendant, the main point urged by the learned counsel on her behalf is, that, having regard to the terms of the contract entered into between the parties on the 9th Falgoun 1292, the Plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for the relief claimed in the plaint, and that accepting the findings of the Courts below that the Plaintiff was under age at the time of the agreement, the case should be remanded for a finding upon the point whether the agreement was not ratified by him after arrival at majority. It has also been contended that conjugal rights were never refused to the Plaintiff, and that this suit could not therefore be maintained.

I may dispose of the last point very shortly by stating that the suit is not so much for restitution, properly so called, as for enforcement, of conjugal rights, the Defendant having refused to go and live with the Plaintiff at his own house, and that such suit does certainly lie.

Turning then to the main question raised in this appeal, the first observation that I have to make is that the parties being Hindus, their respective rights, as flowing from the marriage, being in question, we have to guide ourselves by the Hindu law, unless it be that the Plaintiff has entered into a valid and lawful agreement such that it may be said he has contracted himself out of the rights conferred upon him by the said marriage.

CL. (1) of sec. 37, Act XII of 1887, provides :—

“Where in any suit or other proceeding it is necessary for a Civil Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution, the Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished." The rest of the section is not material for the purpose of the question arising in this case.

It will be observed that the section speaks of the Hindu law being "the rule of decision except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished." There is no legislative enactment in this country modifying the Hindu law of marriage, and the rights which flow from such marriage; nor does the section apparently contemplate the said "rule of decision" being controlled by any contract between the parties.

In Munshi Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsonissa Begum (1), which was a case between two Mahomedans, but in which the general principle underlying such a case was considered, the Judicial Committee, with reference to the question raised, namely, whether a suit could be brought by a Mahomedan husband in the Civil Courts of India to enforce his marital rights under the Mahomedan law by compelling his wife against her will to return to co-habitation with him, observed, among other matters, as follows:—

"Of authority negating the jurisdiction there is none. It has been argued that the proper remedy, if there be one, is the denial of maintenance to the rebellious wife, or, at most, a suit for damages; because a suit to compel the wife to return to her husband though obviously a more complete remedy than either of them is in the nature of a suit for specific performance, and being founded on the contract of marriage, which the Mahomedan law regards as a civil contract, the Court entertaining the suit must be prepared to enforce all the obligations, however minute, which, according to that law, flow from the contract, whichever party has a right to insist upon them." And later on they observed—"Upon authority, then, as well as principle, their Lordships have no doubt that the Mussalman husband may institute a suit in the Civil Courts of India for a declaration of his right to the possession of his wife, and for a sentence that she return to co-habitation, and that that suit must be determined according to the principles of Mahomedan law. The latter proposition follows not merely from the imperative words of Beng. Reg. IV of 1793, sec. 15, (which has been substituted by sec. 37 of Act XII of 1887), but from the nature of the thing. For since the rights and duties resulting from the contract of marriage vary in different communities, so, specially in India, where there is no general marriage law, they can be only ascertained by reference to the particular law of the contracting parties."

I refer to this case for the purpose of simply emphasising what I have already said, that the question raised between the parties in the present case has to be determined by the particular law, that is, the Hindu law, which governs them. And the same view has been expressed by the Bombay High Court in the well-known case of Dadaji Bhikaji v. Rukma-bai (2) in the following words:—

(1) 11 M. I. A. 551 (1867).

(2) I. L. R. 10 Bom. 301 (1886).

TEKAIT MON MOHINI JOMADAI v. RAI BASANT KUMAR SINGHA.

"We may, however, remark that although no text may be found in the Hindu law books which provide for the king ordering a husband or wife to return, no text was cited forbidding or deprecating compulsion, and that it was admitted that the duties appertaining to the relationship of husband and wife have always been the subject of caste discipline, and, therefore, that with the establishment of a systematic administration of justice the Civil Courts would properly and almost necessarily assume to themselves the jurisdiction over conjugal rights as determined by Hindu law, and enforce them according to their own modes of procedure."

This brings us to the consideration of the question what is the Hindu law upon this subject. It may be premised that though marriage under the Hindu law is a contract, it is also a sacrament: it is more religious than secular in character: The union is indissoluble, for it is a "union of flesh with flesh, bone with bone:" during the husband's lifetime, he is to be regarded by the wife as a god, and the wife is declared to be half the body of her husband, equally sharing the fruit of pure and impure acts, and no sacrifice or religious right is allowed to her apart from the husband's. Hence it is that after the husband's death, the widow is regarded as the surviving half of his body. The union is a sacred tie, and subsists even after death of the husband (see Manu, Ch. II, v. 67; Ch. III, v. 43; Ch. v, v. 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 160, 165; Ch. IX, v. 29; Dyabhaga, Ch. IV, v. 14; Ch. XI, sec. 1, v. 2; and Hindu Law on Marriage by Dr. Banerjee, p. 131).

The marital dominion which a husband under the Hindu law acquires over his wife is due, as I understand it, to two causes, first, the gift by the parents of the girl; and, secondly, the troth plighted by the husband. And it is owing to these causes, we may take it, that the husband is the lawful guardian of his wife when a minor (see Manu, Ch. v, v. 151, 152; Ch. III, v. 27, 28; Hamidunnessa Bibi v. Zohiruddin Sheik (3).

Having made these prefatory remarks, I proceed to refer to some of the texts as bearing upon the question at issue. I shall begin with a text of Manu. "In childhood must a female be dependent on her father; in youth, on her husband; her lord being dead, on her son; . . . a woman must never seek independence. Never let her wish to separate herself from her father, her husband, or her sons; for by a separation from them, she exposes both families to contempt" (see Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, Vol. II, p. 137, Ed. 1874).

The next is a text of Devala:—

"Dependence, attendance on her husband and in his religious ceremonies, respectful behaviour to those who are entitled to veneration from him; hatred to those who bear enmity to him, no ill-will towards him, constant complacency, attention to his business, are the duties of women. (Colebrooke, Vol. II, p. 138). Vishnu:—

"Accompanying of her husband, reverence of his father, of spiritual parents, of deities and guests, great cleanliness in regard to the domestic furniture, and care of the household vessels; avoiding the use of philters and charms, attention to auspicious customs, austerities after the death of her husband, no frequenting of strange houses, no standing at the door or window, dependence in all affairs, subjection to her father, husband and son, in childhood, youth and age: such are the duties of a woman." (Colebrooke, Vol. II, p. 138, v. 92). Vasiṣṭha:—

"The abode of faithful wives, who are fond of home and truly rigid, and who have subdued their passions, shall be the same with that of their lords; but the mansions of shakals are assigned to disloyal wives." (Colebrooke, Vol. II, p. 148), (Manu, Chap. IX, v, v. 45 and 46).

"The husband is even one person with his wife for all domestic and religious, not for all civil purposes."

"Neither by sale or desertion can a wife be released from her husband."

(Manu, Ch. IX, v, 102).

"Let a man and woman united by marriage, constantly beware, lest, at any time disunited, they violate their mutual fidelity." (Manu, Ch. v, v. 164, 165, 166).

"A married woman who violates the duty, which she owes to her lord, brings infamy on herself in this life, and in the next, shall enter the womb of a shakal, or be afflicted with elephantiasis, and other diseases, which punish crimes; while she, who slights not her lord, but keeps her mind, speech and body, devoted to him, attains his heavenly mansion, and by good men is called sadhvi or virtuous."

"Yes by this course of life it is, that a woman whose mind, speech and body are kept in subjection, acquires high renown in this world, and, in the next, the same abode with her husband."

These texts, among other matters, establish that it is the bounden duty of the wife to live with her husband, wherever he may choose to reside, to submit herself to his authority—never to separate from him—and to attend upon him, and in his religious ceremonies; and that the violation of such duty is a great sin, which results in terrible punishment in the next world.

I shall now turn to the views expressed on the subject by some of the modern writers on Hindu law.

Mr. Justice Banerjee in his book on the Hindu law of Marriage and Stridhan, at p. 108, makes the following observations:—

"It follows from the very nature of the matrimonial relation that the husband and the wife must each be entitled to the society of the other. It is one of the express conditions in the nuptial vow of the Hindus that each party is to become the associate of the other. Accordingly Manu declares 'let mutual fidelity continue till the death. Let a man and woman united by marriage, constantly beware, lest at any time disunited they violate the mutual fidelity.' And the sages denounce the desertion or neglect of either party by the other without just cause as an act punishable in this world and in the next." And later on, at page 112, he observes:—

"The duty of attendance on her husband, which is so strongly inculcated obliges her to follow him wherever he chooses to reside. And it is a general principle of law that the domicile of the wife follows that of her husband. She is also bound to refrain from going to any place where her husband forbids her to go."

TEKAIT MON MOHINI JOMADAI v. RAI BASANT KUMAR SINGHA.

Mr. Mayne, in his book on Hindu Law, Ch. XIV, paragraph 414, says :—

“As soon as the wife is mature, her home is necessarily in her husband's house. He is bound to maintain her in it—while she is willing to reside with him, and to perform her duties. If she quits him of her own accord either without cause, or on account of such ordinary quarrels as are incidental to married life in general, she can set up no claim to a separate maintenance. Nothing will justify her in leaving her home except such violence as renders it unsafe for her to continue there or such continued ill-usage as would be termed cruelty in an English Matrimonial Court.”

Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar, in his book on Hindu Law, p. 67, says as follows :—

“Although the conjugal relation is based upon a contract of either the parties to the marriage or their guardians, the rights and the duties of the married couple do not arise from any implied contract, but are annexed by law to the connubial relation as its incidents. The wife is bound to reside with the husband wherever he may choose to live. The fact of the husband having another wife will not relieve her from that duty: nothing short of habitual cruelty or ill-treatment will justify her to leave her husband's house and reside elsewhere.”

Dr. W. N. Bhattacharji quoting a text of Manu, in his book entitled “Commentaries on Hindu Law,” p. 123, says :—

“Where the wife is sui juris and refuses to live with her husband, he can, according to Hindu law, keep her by force under his protection. Under the Indian Penal Code, the husband cannot be punished for merely keeping his wife under restraint, without using violence or subjecting her to cruel treatment.” Let us now refer to some of the decided cases bearing upon the matter.

In Kateeram Dokanee v. Musst. Gendhenee (4), where the suit was for recovery of possession of the person of the wife by a Hindu husband, Markby, J., made the following observations :—

“The marriage of an infant being under the Hindu law a legal and complete marriage, the husband, in my opinion, has the same right as in other cases to demand that his wife shall reside in the same house as himself. I do not think that any Court can deprive the husband of this right except upon some tangible and definite grounds which show that under the special circumstances of the case the wife is absolved from this duty, and her parents or guardians from the duty of surrendering her to her husband: and we cannot, in my opinion, say, without contravening the Hindu law, that the infancy of the wife constitutes such a ground, though it might, I think, be right in the case of a very young girl to require the husband to show that she would be placed by him under the immediate care of some female member of his family.”

In the case of Surjya Moni Dasi v. Rati Kanta Das (5), where a Hindu husband brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against his minor wife represented by her paternal grandmother, a Division Bench of this Court, after referring to the case of Kateeram Dokanee

TEKAIT MON MOHINI JOMADAI v. RAI BASANT KUMAR SINGHA.

v. Musst. Gendhenee (4) which I have just noticed, made the following observations:—

“If, as legal guardian of the person and property of his minor wife, a Hindu husband is entitled under the law to insist that she shall live with him, it seems useless to argue that he is not entitled to similar relief in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, if the wife has attained an age at which she is considered fit to discharge her conjugal duties, though in the eye of the law she may still be a minor.”

In the case of Sita Nath Mukerjee v. Srimati Haimabutty Dabi (6), which was a suit by a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance, Sir Richard Garth, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed as follows (p. 379):—

“Now, what is the Hindu law upon the subject?”

“It is clear that, according to that law, a wife’s first duty to her husband is to submit herself obediently to his authority, and to remain under his roof and protection; and although it might be very difficult to deduce from the authorities at the present day any definite rule as to the causes which would justify a wife in leaving her husband’s house, it may safely be affirmed that mere unkindness or neglect short of cruelty would not be a sufficient justification.”

And in the case of Binda v. Kaunsilia (7), in which Mahmood, J., examined the texts and authorities most carefully and held that the texts of the Hindu law relating to conjugal co-habitation and imposing restrictions upon the liberty of the wife, and placing her under the control of her husband, are not merely precepts, but rules of law, and that the rights and duties which they create may be enforced by either party against the other.

♥ Having regard to the texts of the sages, and the exposition thereof by different authors and eminent Judges, I think we may safely take it that the duty imposed upon a Hindu wife to reside with her husband, wherever he may choose to reside, is not only a moral duty, but a rule of Hindu law.

Sec. 23 of the Contract Act provides:

“The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or the Court regards it as immoral, or opposed to public policy.”

“In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful, is void.”

• Now, it seems to me that if it is a rule of Hindu law that for the fulfilment of the duties which the law imposes upon a wife, she must reside with her husband wherever he may choose to reside, an agreement on the part of the husband that he will not be at liberty to remove his wife from her parent’s abode to his own abode would, if permitted, defeat the clear rule of Hindu law on the subject; and I may in this connection refer to some of the observations by Mr. Justice Banerjee, in his book on Hindu Law of Marriage, p. 107.

He says :—

“The Hindu law upon this subject still retains its archaic character. Marriage in that law is not merely a contract but also a sacrament; and the rights and duties of the married parties are determined solely by the law, and are incapable of being varied by their agreement. As Manu emphatically declares neither by sale nor desertion, can a wife be released from her husband.”

I might also here notice the case of Paigi v. Sheo Narain (8), where in a suit by a Hindu against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, the Defendant (the wife) pleaded an agreement similar to that which has been relied upon in this case, the Court held that the plea was unsound and could not be seriously maintained, and therefore need not be any further noticed.

Then, is not the contract in question opposed to public policy also? The Plaintiff is said to have agreed that he would not be competent to take his wife away from her father's house, that he would carry out the orders of the mother of the Defendant, and that he should not be competent to do any act or to go to any place without her permission. This agreement imposes upon the Plaintiff a permanent restriction against removing his wife to any place that he may select for their residence; and it also imposes a permanent restraint upon his own action and movements: he in fact gives himself up absolutely to the disposal of the Defendant's mother in all respects. It has been said that the latter part of the agreement may not be binding, as the former is, but it is rather difficult to separate the two portions. The learned counsel for the Appellant has in support of his contention that the agreement in question is valid, called our attention to certain cases in the English Reports, in which it has been held that a deed of separation containing a covenant that either the husband or the wife should not sue for restitution of conjugal rights, has been held to be valid. But let us see upon what principle are these cases based. Looking at Marshall v. Marshall (9), I find that Sir James Hannen at page 23 observed :—

“But since the decision of the House of Lords in Wilson v. Wilson (10) it can no longer be contended that there is anything illegal or contrary to public policy in an agreement between married persons that no suit for restitution of conjugal rights shall be instituted by either of them. For my own part I must say that the opinion I have formed after several years' experience in the administration of the law in this Court, is that it is in the highest degree desirable, for the preservation of the peace and reputation of families, that such agreements should be encouraged rather than that the parties should be forced to expose their matrimonial differences in a Court of Justice.”

And, referring to the case of Wilson v. Wilson (10), I observe that the Lord Chancellor, among other cases, relied upon the judgment in Westmeath v.

(9) L. R. 5 P. D. 19 (1879).

TEKAIT MON MOHINI JOMADAI v. RAI BASANT KUMAR SINGHA.

Westmeath (11) where Lord Eldon said as follows:—

"I apprehend that any instrument, which provides for a present separation and which prospectively looks to the parties living together again, and then to a future separation, that such a deed so far as it provides for that future separation will never be carried into effect."

Then referring to Addison on Contracts, p. 75, I find it stated, upon the authority of Merryweather v. Jones (12) that "contracts providing for the future separation of husband and wife are contrary to public policy. But a contract between the husband and a trustee on behalf of the wife, providing for the terms of present separation will be enforced."

The principle underlying the cases, in which it has been held that contracts providing for present separation are invalid is, as I understand it, the preservation of the peace and reputation of families; while, on the other hand, an agreement for future separation is bad and opposed to public policy.

There is a fundamental difference between a case where an agreement for separate living for a time is entered into during the continuance of marriage and an agreement before or at the time of marriage controlling the rights of the parties, which the law confers upon them after the marriage, and which if enforced, might make the marriage itself nugatory or infructuous. Such an agreement would seem to be opposed to public policy.

The agreement with which we are concerned is an agreement of the latter character. It permanently controls the rights of the husband, as conferred upon him by the Hindu law, so soon as the marriage is effected; and it is an agreement which, if enforced, might practically lead to the separation of the husband and wife in future. And the mischief of such an agreement is pointed out by the Defendant herself in her written statement; for she says therein, that the Plaintiff has been forbidden by the Collector, upon a complaint made to him, to enter the house of her father,—the result being that he cannot get access to his wife, nor can he, by reason of the agreement, remove her to his own abode.

I am of opinion that the agreement is opposed to public policy.

Upon all these grounds, I hold that the agreement relied upon by the Defendant is no just answer to the Plaintiff's claim in the present case.

I need scarcely say that we are not concerned in this appeal by the Defendant (and there is no cross-objection by the Plaintiff) with the conditions which have been imposed by the District Judge upon the Plaintiff before he can compel his wife to reside with him. I may, however, say, that, in consideration of the welfare, personal safety and health of the wife, it has been held in several cases that such conditions may well be imposed [see Buzloor Ruheem v. Shums-oonnissa Begum (1), Paigi v. Sheo Narain (8), Jogendro Nundini Dossee v. Hurry Doss Ghose (13)].

STEVENS, J.—After full consideration I concur with my learned colleague in thinking that a pre-nuptial contract such as that which has been set up in this case is not a sufficient answer to a claim like the present where the parties are Hindus. Such a contract seems to be not only inconsistent with the theory of the relation between husband and wife according to the Hindu law, but against public policy.

I may say that a consideration which caused me to hesitate before finally coming to this conclusion is that in fact it is not uncommon among Hindus for a husband to live with his wife in the house of her parents, and I understand that there is nothing in such an arrangement which interferes with the attainment of all the objects of marriage, including the fulfilment of the strictly religious obligations which marriage between Hindus involves. How, it might be asked, can a formal pre-nuptial agreement for a permanent arrangement of that kind, by which all the objects of matrimony as understood by Hindus can be, and in practice are, attained, be properly said to be against Hindu law or against public policy?

The answer, I think, is that the objection to such an agreement lies in its permanent and unconditional character. By the contract before us the husband puts himself, without any reference to conditions which may arise in future, permanently and unreservedly into complete subjection to his mother-in-law; he practically gives up his general marital authority to a considerable extent and in particular he puts it entirely out of his power to change his residence, however intolerable the situation may become to himself or to his family and however important a change of residence may become, not only in his own interests, but in those of his children, or even of his wife herself. It is not that he merely abandons one particular right incidental to his status as a husband and affecting himself alone; but he places himself in a general position of subordination entirely inconsistent with his status as contemplated by the Hindu law; and, as regards the particular right which he abandons, that of choice of domicile, I think it may fairly be said, looking to the possible interests of the children in respect of their bringing up and education, that it cannot properly be regarded as a mere "jus pro se introductum," which a man may give up at his will.

The practical working of such an agreement is seen in the present case on the wife's own representation of the facts in her written statement. Family quarrels arise; the husband is turned out of the house and eventually it is sought to induce him to live apart from his wife on an allowance from her mother. It can scarcely be disputed that such a separation, save for very serious cause, would be wholly incompatible with the Hindu law of marriage, and the District Judge has found upon the evidence that nothing more serious ever took place than occasional quarrels between husband and wife, though her witnesses sought to greatly exaggerate the facts.

The only reported case which seems to me to have a direct bearing on the question is that of Paigi v. Sheo Navain (8) which has been referred to by my learned colleague. It was held in that case, which was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, that a plea that the wife had been married to the husband on condition that he would live with her in the house of her mother after marriage and that having broken that condition by leaving the house, he was not entitled to enforce his marital rights, was so absurd as not to need serious notice. It may be said, as, indeed, it was said by the learned counsel who addressed us for the Defendant-Appellant, that there was apparently this distinction between that case and the present: that there the wife sought to withdraw herself from her husband altogether, whereas in the case before us she is willing to resume cohabitation but insists on residing on her mother's premises. The distinction, however, if it exists, is perhaps not practically very great, if the Plaintiff in this case is liable to be ejected from the house, whenever a family disagreement occurs.

As the parties before us are Hindus, this case has to be dealt with on the principles of Hindu law; but if it be conceded, as the learned counsel for the Defendant-Appellant contended, that the right of the husband to the choice of domicile is common to that and to other systems of law, it must still be said that no cases have been shown to us, nor have I been able to find any, under any system of law which recognise the validity of a pre-nuptial contract giving up the right in question. The English cases which have been cited do not touch the point and do not seem to me to assist the Appellant's case in any way. Assuming for a moment that a decision on the same point arising in a suit between Mahomedans might be taken as a guide on the question of general principle, the only reported Mahomedan case in which the point seems to have been raised, namely, that of Hamidun-nessa Bibi v. Zohiruddin Sheik (3) left it undecided on the ground that whether or not such a stipulation as to residence could be valid in any case, the terms of the kabinama and the subsequent conduct of the parties in that particular case prevented it from being a sufficient answer to the claim for restitution of conjugal rights.

There thus appears to be really no authority in support of the contention which has been raised for the Defendant-Appellant in favour of the validity of the pre-nuptial contract set up by her, and I agree with my learned brother that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Held—That the fact that the subject-matter of the dispute was not within the local jurisdiction of the subordinate Magistrate who tried the case would not oust his jurisdiction or render him incompetent to try the case, provided that he was vested with the powers of a proper class: and that the order made by him would not, on that account, be bad.

Sec. 148, Cr. P. Code, does not necessarily imply that the Magistrate before whom the case is, may not himself hold the local enquiry as is provided for in the section.

Any mistake made erroneously and in good faith by one Magistrate in transferring a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, to another under sec. 192, is cured by the provisions of sec. 529 (f).

This was a rule issued on the 11th of September 1900, against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, dated the 30th June 1900.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—In a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, one of the parties moved the District Magistrate for a transfer of the case to his own file. The District Magistrate accordingly made an order transferring the case to the file of the senior Deputy Magistrate at the Sudder (Head-quarters) to "try it himself or make it over to another Magistrate at the Sudder." The senior Deputy Magistrate, however, made over the case to a subordinate Magistrate who held a local investigation and tried the case and made an order in favour of the 1st party. Against that order the Petitioners, 2nd party, moved the High Court, and the Court (Prinsep and Handley, JJ.) made the following order in issuing the rule:—

The application relates to proceedings taken under sec. 145, C. Cr. P. The District Magistrate, on an application made, removed the case from the Sub-Divisional Office for trial in the head-quarter Sub-Division and, in his order, he transferred the case "to the senior Deputy Magistrate at Sudder to be tried by him or made over for trial by another Magistrate at Sudder."

The case was made over by the senior Deputy Magistrate, so we are told, to Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri and it has been tried by him after a local investigation held.

The objections taken on this application are, first, that Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri had no local jurisdiction over the subject-matter of dispute. It seems to us, however, that if the case had been transferred to a Magistrate in another Sub-Division, that Magistrate would be competent to try such a case provided that he was vested with the powers of a proper class and in this respect we think that the order should not be bad.

But this matter is subject to the point raised on the second objection which is, we think, prima facie good. The order of transfer of the case to the senior Deputy Magistrate at the Sudder Station to be tried by him is a valid order but, in so far as it permits him to make over the case for trial by another Magistrate at Sudder, it seems to us to be open to objection, having regard to the terms of sec. 192 (2), C. Cr. P., which if the senior Deputy Magistrate were empowered to act under sub-sec. (2) would seem to empower him to transfer only an enquiry or trial in respect to an offence alleged to have been committed.

The third objection is, we think, untenable. Sec. 148, C. Cr. P., no doubt permits a Magistrate to order a local inquiry to be held by some other Magistrate, but this would not necessarily imply that the Magistrate before whom the case is, may not himself hold the local inquiry.

A rule is, therefore, granted to the District Magistrate and also on the opposite party to show cause why the order under sec. 145, C. Cr. P., should not be set aside as without jurisdiction on the ground that the case was not properly before Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri by an order issued by a Magistrate competent to transfer that case to him. The record will be sent for.

The rule was then heard before Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.

The Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) and Babu Jadunath Kanjilal for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The second party in these proceedings obtained from the Criminal Division Bench of this Court, a rule in the following terms:—"A rule is granted to the District Magistrate and also on the opposite party to show cause why the order under sec. 145, C. Cr. P., should not be set aside as without jurisdiction on the ground that the case was not properly before Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri (the Deputy Magistrate who made the order complained against) by an order issued by a Magistrate competent to transfer that case to him."

The circumstances under which the District Magistrate made that order are set forth in the second paragraph of the petition of the second party which runs thus: "The second party then moved the District Magistrate of Barisal apparently under sec. 528, Cr. P. C., for the transfer of the case to his own file for various reasons, and the case was accordingly transferred to the file of the senior Deputy Magistrate with instruction to try it himself or make it over to another Magistrate, and the case was made over by the senior Deputy Magistrate to Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri for trial."

The order, therefore, which was made by the District Magistrate was made, judging from the petition itself, at the instance of the second party.

RAJ MOHAN ROY CHOWDHURY v. PROSUNNO CHANDRA CHATTERJI.

It is now contended that the senior Deputy Magistrate to whom the case was transferred by the District Magistrate had no power to transfer it to Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri, and as that transfer was made under sec. 192 (2) it is urged that the District Magistrate ought to have specified the Magistrate to whom the senior Deputy Magistrate could transfer the case.

Supposing that the present matter falls under sec. 192 (2) it appears to us that any mistake on the part of the senior Deputy Magistrate in transferring the case to another Magistrate, namely, Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri, is cured by the provisions of sec. 529 (f) which declares that "if any Magistrate not empowered by law to transfer a case under sec. 192 erroneously in good faith does that thing, his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered." Assuming then that the senior Deputy Magistrate had not the power to make the transfer but did so erroneously in good faith, and his good faith is not impugned, the order made by him cannot be set aside merely on the ground that he had no power. But it is contended that the Magistrate who made the order under sec. 145 was not competent to make it inasmuch as the subject-matter of dispute was not within his local jurisdiction and that, therefore, the case came within sec. 530 (j). In our opinion sec. 530 (j) refers to a totally different state of things, namely, where a Magistrate is not competent by virtue of the position he holds or powers vested in him to try a case of the character referred to in sec. 145. From the materials before us there does not appear that Babu Kali Kumar Roy Chowdhuri was not vested with the jurisdiction or was not a first-class Magistrate competent to try the case under sec. 145.

We therefore think that the provisions of sec. 530 (j) do not apply at all to the case. On the other hand it appears from the petition of motion that the order of transfer was made under sec. 528. The proceedings therefore are not void.

The rule is accordingly discharged.

Rule discharged.

fit for appeal.*

In considering under what section of the find that leave was not properly given and the appeal must be dismissed.

RADHA KRISHN DAS v. RAI KRISHN CHAND.

BANARSI PARSHAD v. KASHI KRISHNA NARAIN (1) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decision of the High Court of Allahabad, which reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Benares.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

Mr. A. J. Wallach for the Respondent.

Mr. Wallach took a preliminary objection on the ground that leave for appeal had been granted under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the amount in question and the subject-matter was under the value of Rs. 10,000, that is to say, two thousand rupees.

The petition for leave to appeal contains the following paragraph:—

‘That though the valuation of the appeal is below Rs. 10,000, it involves substantial questions of law and fact.’

‘The Petitioner being desirous to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, humbly prays that this Hon. Court may be pleased to grant certificate under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the following grounds.’

Thereupon two of the Judges of the High Court made the following order:—

“Let certificate issue, that the case is a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.”

In the certificate for leave to appeal the same Judges certified—

‘That though the valuation of the case is below Rs. 10,000, yet as regards the value and nature of the case, it fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 of Act No. XIV of 1882.’

Mr. Wallach submitted that leave to appeal should have been asked for under sec. 595 (c) and sec. 600 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sec. 595 (c): “An appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council from any decree, when the case as hereinafter provided is certified to be one fit for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.”

Sec. 600: “Every petition under sec. 595 must state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.”

The circumstances of this case did not fulfil the requirements of sec. 596, and the certificate granted by the High Court was contradictory in itself. The High Court ought to have granted a certificate under secs. 595 (c) and 600, i.e., that although the amount is under Rs. 10,000 the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (1).

Mr. Mayne.—A mistake was made by the Registrar—it is a clerical error and should have been sec. 595 instead of sec. 596. The mistake is not such a one, that the Appellant should be debarred from being heard.

Their LORDSHIPS’ JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD DAVEY.—In this case their Lordships think that they cannot but give effect to the preliminary objection which has been made. The objection is that there is no proper certificate accompanying the leave to appeal, or forming a proper foundation for the leave to appeal.

(1) L. R. 27 I. A. 11; s. c. 5 C. W. N. 193 (1900).

RADHA KRISHN DAS v. RAI KRISHN CHAND.

The circumstances may be stated very shortly. The Petitioner, the present Appellant, states in his petition that the valuation in the appeal is below Rs. 10,000, but that it involves substantial questions of law and fact. Then he goes on: "The Petitioner being desirous to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, humbly prays that this Honourable Court may be pleased to grant certificate under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure;" and then he sets out certain grounds. Then an order is said to have been passed in these terms by Mr. Justice Knox and Mr. Justice Banerjee: "Let certificate issue, that the case is a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council." That was on the 20th of January 1898, and apparently on the same day the following certificate is made:—"The Court having had before it an application for leave to appeal to Her Imperial Majesty the Queen in Her Privy Council presented on behalf of the Appellant aforesaid, it is certified that though the valuation of the case is below Rs. 10,000, yet as regards the value and nature of the case it fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 of Act No. XIV of 1882." That is signed by the same two learned Judges—Mr. Justice Knox and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

Their Lordships think that the certificate, and not the order for the certificate, is the document which they are bound to consider and act upon; and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave they ought to hold that leave has not properly been given.

Now the question arises under sec. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section says:—"In each of the case mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of sec. 595, the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and the amount or value of the matter in dispute on appeal to Her Majesty in Council must be the same sum, or upwards. Or the decree must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim, or question to, or respecting property of like amount or value." There is no difficulty in interpreting that, and it does not admit of any qualification. If any less value than Rs. 10,000 is directly, or indirectly, involved, it will not give the Court jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal. In a certain event, as was recently pointed out in the case of Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (1), which was recently before this Board, there is an additional requirement, namely, that where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. It is noticed, in the judgment of this Board, in the case to which their Lordships have just referred, that there was a prevailing impression in the High Court that the mere existence of a substantial question of law was sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction to give leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Lord Hobhouse says:—"Their Lordships have found on previous occasions that the existence of a point of law has been supposed to give a right of appeal in the ordinary course of procedure under the Code. That is a mistake. Sec. 596 of the Code requires that in order to give such a right there must be in dispute, either directly or indirectly, an amount of Rs. 10,000. If the decree affirms the Court below another condition is affixed, namely, that the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. The presence of such a question does not give a right when the value is below the mark. The requirement of it restricts the right when the higher decree affirms the lower." It is only upon the assumption that there was such an impression in the minds of the learned Judges that this certificate can have any meaning attached to it at all, because it is difficult to understand how, if valuation is an essential part of the requirement under sec. 596, it can be said that though the valuation of the case is below the amount yet it fulfils the requirement. It would be a contradiction in terms.

(1) L. R. 27 I. A. 11; s. c. 5 C. W. N. 193 (1900).

There is this further: Mr. Mayne pressed us to disregard the language of the certificate, and to look at the order directing the certificate to be made. Their Lordships do not feel satisfied that they are entitled to take that liberty, but assuming that they may do so, they would at least require to be satisfied that the Judges had exercised their judicial discretion upon the matter in deciding whether, in order to comply with sec. 595 (c) and sec. 600, the case was a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Now their Lordships are not by any means satisfied that the learned Judges were either asked, or did direct their minds judicially to that question. The petition asks, as has already been read, that the Court should grant the certificate under sec. 596, treating it as part of the ordinary ministerial jurisdiction of the Court; and no reasons are given, and no grounds are stated by the learned Judges, for holding that, although it did not comply with sec. 596, it was still a fit case to appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships, therefore, are not satisfied that the judicial mind of the Court has ever been applied to that question; still less that the certificate which was signed by the learned Judges does not carry out what they intended to order and direct.

They will only add that, if Mr. Mayne had been in a position, which he very fairly admitted he was not, to say that he could with any hope of success ask for special leave to appeal, their Lordships would not have shut out the Appellant from stating his case to the Board; but, as it is, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed, and they will direct that the Appellant pays the costs of the appeal.

MACKINTOSH v. GREAT WESTERN RY. Co. (1) and MOUNG THA HNYEEN v. MOUNG PAN NYO (2) referred to.

This was a suit instituted by the Plaintiff for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,589-13-6 "for the use and hire of the Plaintiff's cargo boats at Calcutta between the 3rd July 1895 and the 25th November 1896 and for damages sustained by the Plaintiff by reason of the Defendant detaining the said boats beyond his time," after giving credit to the Defendant for moneys already paid by him. The Plaintiff alleged that 115 cargo boats had been hired by the Defendant. The Defendant, on the other hand, alleged that only 70 boats had been hired by him, and they had been hired by the job and not by the day and the Plaintiff was therefore not entitled to charge demurrage.

It appears that the Plaintiff had dealings simultaneously with two firms, both of which were to his knowledge represented by the same person, one Palia-nappa. The books kept by Palia-nappa showed that the Defendant had hired only 70 boats and that the other firm which Palianappa represented had hired 64. The Plaintiff, however, asserted that only 22 were hired by the latter firm and 115 by the Defendant.

The suit was heard for about three days before P. O'Kinealy, J., who reserved judgment, but before judgment was delivered by him the parties came to terms and consented to refer certain inquiries to the 2nd Assistant Registrar of the Court, and on the 13th June 1898 the following consent order was made by the Court:—

"This cause coming on, etc. . . . .
It is ordered and decreed with the consent of both the parties by their respective counsel that the further hearing of this suit be adjourned and that it be referred to the 2nd Assistant Registrar of this Court as an urgent reference to make the following inquiries, that is to say:—

1. What was the number of boats hired by the Defendant from the Plaintiff and on what date was each boat hired.

2. What was the rate agreed upon on each occasion for the hire of each boat and what was the ghat rate on each occasion.

3. Assuming that the Plaintiff is entitled to demurrage after 48 hours at  $\frac{2}{3}$ ds of the rate of hiring and that it is the custom of the trade to charge half demurrage under eight hours and full demurrage for eight hours or over, what, if any, is the amount of demurrage due to the Plaintiff on each occasion in respect of which it is claimed.

4. What payments of canal toll were made to the Plaintiff by the Defendant and when and on what occasion was each payment made.

And this Court doth reserve the consideration of all further directions and of the question of the costs of this suit until after the 2nd Assistant Registrar shall have made his report, and in the meantime the parties are to be at liberty to apply to this Court from time to time as they may be advised."

On the 21st September 1899 the 2nd

Assistant Registrar made his report whereby he found:—

1. That the number of boats hired by the Defendant from the Plaintiff was 116 and the date on which each boat was hired is set forth in the first column of the schedule hereunto annexed and marked A.

2. That the rate agreed upon on each occasion for the hire of each boat is set forth in the 3rd column of the schedule being for the period of 48 hours which hire is nearly in all instances double the ghat rate plus the canal toll on such boats as carried canal toll and that the ghat rate on each occasion is set forth in the 4th column of the said schedule.

3. Assuming that the Plaintiff is entitled to charge demurrage after 48 hours at  $\frac{2}{3}$ ds of the rate of hiring and that it is the custom of the trade to charge half demurrage under 8 hours and full demurrage for 8 hours or over, what, if any, is the amount of demurrage due to the Plaintiff on each occasion in respect of which it is claimed. I find that the amount of demurrage due to the Plaintiff on each occasion in respect of which it is claimed is set forth in the 5th column of the said schedule calculating the sum on the ghat rate after 48 hours plus the canal toll where such toll has been paid for and charged.

4. That the payments of canal toll made to the Plaintiff by the Defendant and when and on what occasion was such payment made are set forth in the 1st and 5th column of the said schedule. All which I humbly submit and report to this Honourable Court. Dated the 21st day of September 1899.

Neither party was satisfied with those findings, and both the Plaintiff and the Defendant filed exceptions to the report. The matter came on before Ameer Ali, J., on the 1st March 1900, who overruled the exceptions and confirmed the report. The following judgment was delivered by him:—

This suit was instituted by the Plaintiff in the Small Cause Court and was brought up here at the instance of the Defendant under the provisions of sec. 39 of the Small Cause Court Act.

It was referred by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy on the 13th of June 1898 to Babu Grees Chunder

R. M. S. CHETTY v. MAHOMED ESSA SAHEB.

Bonnerjee, the 2nd Assistant Registrar, for enquiry into the matters set forth in the order of that date.

The witnesses on both sides were examined at considerable length before Babu Grees Chunder. And upon the evidence he came to certain distinct findings. He has embodied the result of his findings in a report which now comes up for argument on exceptions and final disposal.

Both sides have taken exceptions to the report, and a great deal of time has been spent over their discussion.

In my opinion the exceptions on both sides must fail. Babu Grees Chunder Bonnerjee has considered the evidence adduced by the parties with great care, I do not see that any of his findings are unwarranted by the facts placed before him.

He disbelieves the Defendant's evidence and considers that the Plaintiff's case is fully borne out by their evidence.

I am of opinion that the exceptions on both sides must fail. The result is that the report must be confirmed. There will be a decree for the Plaintiff for Rs. 1,149-5-1.

The Plaintiff will also get his costs of the suit and reference on scale 2.

As to the costs of the exceptions and of to-day's hearing each party pays his own.

The Defendant now appealed from the said judgment and order.

Mr. Garth and Mr. B. Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Caspersz for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a suit to recover a sum of about 1,600 rupees for the hire of certain boats and for demurrage. It was originally brought in the Small Cause Court, and at the instance of the Defendant transferred to the High Court. It was heard for some three days or more before Mr. Justice O'Kinealy, who reserved judgment. Before judgment was delivered the parties so far came to terms as to consent to certain enquiries being referred to the 2nd Assistant Registrar of the Court, and this was done by the consent order of the 13th June 1898, set out at page 9 of the Paper-book. It is obvious from the terms of the reference that the matters referred were matters of detail. The enquiry before the 2nd Assistant Registrar occupied many sittings, thirteen I believe in all, and the 2nd Assistant Registrar appears to me to have fairly and carefully investigated the matter. He made his report, which will be found at page 132 of the Paper-book. Neither party was satisfied with that finding, and both the Plaintiff and the Defendant took exceptions to it. The Defendant said he was ordered to pay too much; the Plaintiff complained that he was entitled to more. The matter came before Mr. Justice Ameer Ali on the 1st March 1900, who, after stating in his judgment "that a great deal of time had been spent over the discussion of the exceptions," overruled the exceptions of both parties, confirmed the report, and gave a decree for the Plaintiff for the amount found in the report.

The Defendant now appeals to this Court, and his first ground of appeal is, that the learned Judge in the Court below did not duly hear and consider the grounds upon which the Appellant based his exceptions. I am not disposed to pay much attention to this ground of complaint in the face of what the Judge has said in his judgment, but be that as it may, the same reproach cannot properly be launched against this Court, for we have listened to this case for the best parts of three days, and it may be perhaps a further satisfaction to the Appellant to learn that I have, since the case was argued, gone carefully through the evidence. The matters referred were purely matters of fact, dependent, as to the conclusion to be arrived at, upon points of minute detail, and involving no question of principle.

The 2nd Assistant Registrar has fairly investigated the matter, the Court of first instance has confirmed his report, and we, as a Court of Appeal, are now invited to say that these conclusions, involving no questions of law, but dependent upon mere questions of facts,—facts of a detailed character,—ought now to be disturbed.

I think it would be well, before dealing with the merits of this particular case, to ascertain what are the principles upon which a Court of Appeal should interfere in this and similar cases.

I am not disputing for a moment that the Appellant has every right to come here, and to invite us to hear and to investigate the case, and that he is entitled to our opinion upon the appeal as submitted to us: but, at the same time, I equally say that, in a case of this class, if there has been a fair investigation of the matter by the Registrar, and his finding has been further confirmed by the Judge of first instance, this Court, as a Court of Appeal, ought not to interfere "except,"—to quote the language of the late Vice-Chancellor Stuart in the case of Mackintosh v. The Great Western Railway Company (1) "on the strong ground of manifest error or manifest abuse: and never on the ground that a different result might be more satisfactory to the mind of another tribunal." "Any other principle," to quote the same learned Judge, though his words were not addressed to this particular point, "must lead to an extent of vexatious litigation, perhaps interminable." The present case, one cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and which has now been going on for nearly 4 years, is, perhaps, not an inapposite illustration of the last remark. As regards the principle by which this Court should, in my opinion, be guided, I propose to read the following passage from the judgment in the case I have already cited as applicable to and governing the case now before us.—

"This principle" (viz., the principle expressed in the earlier portion of the judgment) "rests on the plain necessity of accepting as final the first decision on a fair investigation, where the nature of the question is such that, if there must be a new investigation and new decision by a succession of appeals, each decision might be for a different amount, and the decision of the last resort, differing from all the others, would have against it the presumption of error from the number of previous contrary decisions. The result would be to deprive the decision on final appeal of that authority which an ultimate decision should carry.

"It is to prevent such inconvenient consequences that questions of this peculiar kind, when once fairly investigated and decided, are not usually allowed to be opened again, or the decision to be disturbed, except on the strong ground of manifest error or manifest abuse; and never on the ground that a different result might be more satisfactory to the mind of another tribunal."

(1) 4 Giff. 688 (1867).

R. M. S. CHETTY v. MAHOMED ESSA SAHEB.

And in this connection I may usefully refer to a very recent judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Moung Tha Hnyeun v. Moung Pan Nyo (2), delivered on the 6th July 1900, the principle of which appears to be not inapposite to the case before us. That was a case of interference with concurrent judgments, that is to say, concurrent judgments in the sense of concurrent findings of fact: and in that judgment these passages occur:—"Although acute criticisms have been made upon some points in the case, there has been nothing to show that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or that any principles of law or of procedure have been violated in the Courts below. This case is one which very decidedly falls within the valuable principle recognised here, and commonly observed in second Courts of Appeal, that it will not interfere with concurrent judgments of the Courts below on matters of fact, unless very definite and explicit grounds for that interference are assigned. In all probability their Lordships would be doing a great deal more harm than good if they were induced to disturb judgments arrived at by the local Judges on such criticisms as have been assigned in this argument."

It is perfectly true that, in the present case, we have not concurrent judgments in the strict sense of the term, but we have concurrent findings on the facts, first by the Commissioner and afterwards these findings confirmed by the Judge.

Now, applying those principles to the present case, and looking to the grounds of objection to the Court of first instance, and the grounds of the present appeal, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that, in both cases, the real grounds are in substance that the second Assistant Registrar did not give due weight to this or to that particular portion of the evidence. I am not prepared to say, having read the evidence, that this criticism is well founded; but, even if it were, I should not regard it as warranting us in setting aside the report, for we should not be justified in so acting merely upon the ground that, if the matter had come before us as res integra, we might have been disposed to attach more weight to this or that particular piece of evidence, than the 2nd Assistant Registrar did. The Appellant has utterly failed to convince us that there is either manifest error or manifest abuse in the 2nd Assistant Registrar's finding, and it is not sufficient to say, that, owing to his not having attached sufficient weight to the Defendant's evidence, it is doubtful whether his decision is certainly correct or perfectly satisfactory. I will turn to one instance, and the one upon which the Appellant laid most stress, viz., that the second Assistant Registrar regarded certain books put in by the Defendant as spurious. In point of fact he did nothing of the kind: he only doubted their genuineness and that this was so, is apparent from the second objection of the Appellant to the report, which by the way is inconsistent with ground (b) of the present appeal. It is said that he ought not to have felt this doubt, as the Plaintiff's manager and his principal witness had admitted having made certain entries in those books. But, taking that to be so,—and a careful examination of the evidence at pages 55 and 56 of the Paper-book, perhaps makes the so-called admission somewhat equivocal,—I am not disposed to say that the expression of a doubt in the mind of the 2nd Assistant Registrar, upon one particular piece of evidence in the case, would warrant us, in a case of this class, in reopening the matter or disturbing his decision.

But, apart from these considerations and having read the evidence, I am not prepared to say that his decision upon the first and second enquiries was not a fair and reasonable one. As regards the question of demurrage I feel more difficulty and I was disposed at first to regard the order of the 13th June 1898, which is not very happily worded, as meaning by the expression “assuming,” that the question of whether the Plaintiff was entitled to demurrage was still an open one, and one to be made the subject of future decision by the Court. Such, no doubt, is the natural and primary sense of the word. But though the language is unfortunate, I think the parties meant that, as between themselves, it was conceded that the Plaintiff was entitled to demurrage, and that the question referred was what was the amount payable, upon the footing stated in para. 3 of the reference.

By his own attitude the Defendant has shown that this was the construction he put upon the terms of that order, for, when the matter came before Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, the Defendant never suggested that the Court should decide, as a preliminary question, whether or not the Plaintiff was entitled to charge demurrage. Nor, again, in the grounds of appeal to this Court, has he raised the question. I think from this it is reasonably clear what the parties intended, but, any way, it is too late now for the Defendant, when he did not ask for it in the Court below, nor make it one of the grounds of his present appeal, to go into the matter.

There is one small point, in which, if the Defendant so desire, the decree may be varied, viz., by altering the number of boats from 116 to 115 with a consequential alteration as to the amount to be decreed: but this trivial alteration cannot affect the question of costs.

The appeal in my opinion fails, and ought to be dismissed with costs, but as I have the misfortune to differ from my learned colleagues, they will pass such order on the appeal as they think is right and proper.

PRINSEP, J.—This is an unfortunate case. On 3rd March 1897 this suit was brought in the Presidency Small Cause Court for money due on account of the hire of boats with damages representing demurrage for the detention beyond the time of hire.

On 13th March the Defendant obtained an order removing the trial to the original side of this Court.

The case came on for trial on 2nd June 1898, and evidence was taken on that day, and on the following day. The record shows that on the 13th June it was ordered and decreed with the consent of both the parties by their respective counsel that the further hearing of the suit be adjourned and that it be referred to the 2nd Assistant

R. M. S. CHETTY v. MAHOMED ESSA SAHED.

Registrar as an urgent reference to make enquiries on certain points set out in the order. It is unnecessary at present to describe the nature of the enquiries so ordered.

Now although this, by the order of the learned Judge holding the trial, was described as "an urgent reference" by his order of 13th June 1898, the proceedings were not commenced by the 2nd Assistant Registrar until 1st February 1899 when he directed the parties to file written statements on 10th idem, and the 13th was fixed for hearing, and it was heard in thirteen days from 16th February to 22nd March, the time so occupied being recorded as 26½ hours. The report of the 2nd Assistant Registrar was made on 21st September 1899 and judgment was pronounced on 1st March 1900. The proceedings have thus extended over three years less two days, and though the reference to the 2nd Assistant Registrar was declared to be an "urgent reference" the proceedings before him from the date of the order of reference to his report extended from 13th June 1898 to 21st September 1899. I can find no reason for this delay as the points for determination were few and not complicated.

The case has been heard by us on appeal for several days and I deem it extremely unfortunate to the parties that as the case now stands we cannot pass final orders in it owing to the manner in which trial has been conducted.

It appears that the Plaintiff has had many dealings connected with the hire of boats with Palianappa Chetty who acted in these transactions for two firms.

Of one firm R. M. M. S. T. Chetty was the principal partner while he acted as agent for the other firm. The Plaintiff has brought separate suits against each of those firms on this account in the Court of Small Causes, one of which is the suit now before us on appeal on behalf of the Defendant representing the firm of R. M. M. S. T. Chetty. The Plaintiff's case is that the Defendant on various dates hired 116 boats from him at the current ghat rates, and that there is a balance due to him on this account as well as on account of demurrage in consequence of the detention of those boats by the Defendant.

The Defendant's case is that he paid at rates higher than the current rates for the whole job in each instance so as to cover all charges, and that he is not liable on account of the number of boats stated by the Plaintiff. There is practically no difference in the total number of boats hired by him on account of his own firm and as agent for the other firm, but he contends that the number which his firm hired has not been correctly stated. The Defendant, Palaniappa, was examined as a witness for the Plaintiff at the trial, but he did not appear in the proceedings before the 2nd Assistant Registrar as he died before those proceedings commenced.

We must, I think, take it that the order of the 13th June 1898 referred the case to the 2nd Assistant Registrar under sec. 394 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court provided for a consideration of the report of the Commissioner by adjourning the further hearing of the suit until the enquiries ordered had been made and report submitted.

R. M. S. CHETTY v. MAHOMED ESSA SAHEB.

On the points referred to him the Commissioner found that as stated by the Plaintiff 116 boats were hired by the Defendants and he accepted the dates of hiring given by the Plaintiff. On the second point the Commissioner found that the rate agreed upon on each occasion for the hire of each boat was as set out in a schedule prepared by him being for the period of 48 hours which is in nearly all instances double the ghat rate plus the canal toll, and that the ghat rates are as set out in the same schedule.

The Commissioner on this calculation found the demurrage on the terms assured by the learned Judge in his order of reference.

And lastly he reported on payments which had in his opinion been made to the Plaintiff by the Defendants.

The schedule, it may be remarked, was not prepared by the 2nd Assistant Registrar, but by a clerk of the Plaintiff at the rate of  $\frac{2}{3}$  of the hiring found by that officer and he by affidavit affirmed the correctness of his calculation. That affidavit was sworn on 19th February 1900, whereas the report of the 2nd Assistant Registrar bears date 21st September 1899, and the exceptions taken by the parties to the report were made on the 22nd idem.

The case came on before Mr. Justice Ameer Ali on 1st March and he disallowed all the exceptions and confirmed the report. He made no other finding in the case.

I am far from satisfied that in this case justice has been done or that a right conclusion has been arrived at on the evidence before us. The learned Judge has considered merely the report of the Commissioner and the exceptions taken to it. There has been no finding that demurrage was payable to the Plaintiff, and if so, at what rate, nor has there been any finding—what is the custom of the trade in that respect. The learned Judge who made the reference directed the Commissioner to find on a certain assumption in regard to the time after which demurrage was payable and the rate at which it was so payable, and on a similar assumption in regard to the custom of the trade. It was in my opinion the duty of the Court expressly to find on both these points and then to apply, if necessary, the findings of the Commissioner.

The report of the Commissioner proceeds on assumption of such findings, but until a Court had definitely and on evidence before it itself found on these points there were no proper grounds upon which calculations could be made on which judgment could be pronounced and a decree against the Defendants could be made. If, on the other hand, the terms of the Commissioner's report be regarded as containing findings on these points on evidence taken by him, it seems to me that he exceeded his authority. So far therefore in my opinion the order of the Court of first instance confirming the report of the Commissioner does not sufficiently deal with the case.

Before I proceed to consider the case on its merits it becomes necessary to consider our powers as a Court of Appeal in such cases for it has been stated that we are debarred from dealing with it on matters of fact. In my opinion on the hearing of this appeal there is no such impediment. We have only to consider the judgment and order of the Court of first instance. The fact that it is in affirmance of the report of a Commissioner, does not in my opinion affect our powers as a Court of Appeal. The report before us is the report of a Commissioner, on a reference made to him on certain points under the Code of Civil Procedure and by the terms of that reference it was in my opinion contemplated not only to consider the report made on the points so referred, but to find generally on the case, that is, on points such as I have indicated which were not so referred. As bearing on this matter I would refer to the case of Watson v. Aga Mehmedee Sherazee (3). In that case the report of the Commissioner in a matter referred to him, as in this case, was regarded by their Lordships of the Privy Council as merely evidence in the case, but as there and similarly in this case the reference had been made by consent of the parties, the report was regarded as on an agreement that the Commissioner should decide the questions of fact referred to him reserving any questions of law which might arise to be disposed of by the Court. But in this case the terms of the reference did not, as I have endeavoured to explain, refer to the Commissioner all the questions of fact which arose in the case. The fact whether demurrage was payable, and if so payable on the terms agreed upon or in accordance with the custom of the trade were not referred to him and the Court has come to no finding itself on these points. There is moreover in my opinion an important distinction in applying to this case the case of Moung Tha Hnyeen v. Moung Pan Nyo (2). In that case the Privy Council had before them concurrent findings of fact by two Courts and therefore as their Lordships state it fell "within the valuable principle recognized by the Privy Council and commonly observed in second Courts of Appeal that it will not interfere with concurrent judgments of the Courts below on matters of fact unless very definite and explicit grounds for that interference are assigned."

Here we have the findings of only one Court. The report of the Commissioner cannot be regarded as a judgment of a Court, for, standing by itself, it is inoperative. It requires affirmance by an order of a Court to make it operative, and it is that order which comes before us on appeal. It seems to me that we have to consider this case in all respects as it was presented to the Court of first instance whose judgment and order the law makes appealable to us.

I therefore feel no difficulty in dealing with this case from this point of view. I do not propose to consider the cases before the Courts of England because the system under which they proceed seems to me to be very different from that contained in the Code of Civil Procedure which regulates our proceedings.

On the other points raised it is sufficient for me to say that I agree in the judgment which Mr. Justice Hill proposes to deliver and which I have had the advantage of reading. It seems to me eminently unsatisfactory that this case has been decided solely on the evidence given before the Commissioner and without any reference to evidence of an important character given before the learned Judge who made the reference. We have no means of learning how far the parties agreed to the reference or to the terms in which it was expressed and so far we are bound to accept the statement that it was made "with the consent of both parties by their respective counsel" but if the statements made afterwards in these pleadings be correct, there is some reason to doubt whether they actually consented or knew to what they had consented. In this respect however the case must stand on the terms of the reference though I must express doubt whether in this manner the real facts will be brought out or justice completely done. The case is however as I have already stated a very unfortunate one in its results, for after the lapse of nearly four years it has not reached its end, and the parties or at least the Defendants, for it was at their instance that there was a change of Court, must regret that it was not allowed to remain for trial in the Court of Small Causes, the Court of ordinary jurisdiction in which it was brought.

I therefore agree in the order that Mr. Justice Hill proposes should be passed in the case.

HILL, J.—I regret that in this case the conclusions to which I have been led are not, in certain respects, in agreement with those of the learned Chief Justice.

Of the questions raised by the appeal there are three with which I think it necessary to deal. The first relates to the demurrage claimed in the action; the second to the findings of the Commissioner as to the number of boats hired and the rates of hiring; and the third to the principles upon which the Court ought to deal with the proceedings of the Commissioner. With respect to the first, the contest was whether when the reference to the Commissioner was made the question of an agreement to pay demurrage was left open for the subsequent decision of the Judge, or had been settled between the parties on the footing assumed as the basis of the third head of enquiry. I find some difficulty in arriving at a satisfactory conclusion upon this question, for counsel were not in a position to give us any material assistance with regard to it, and the language of the referring order which bears upon it is ambiguous. From one point of view it seems consistent with the supposition that the question was left open, but on the other hand from the particularity with which the details of the assumed liability of the Defendant are set forth, it looks as if some settlement involving these terms had been come to. The order is a consent order and must be taken to represent and to give effect to a settlement made by the parties themselves as to the terms in which the reference should be made and it would moreover have been a futile proceeding to refer the matter on a purely hypothetical and unsettled basis, for that would have necessitated, in the event of the Judge afterwards coming to a different decision,—a further reference to the Commissioner, or a decision possibly on the point by the Judge himself. Then, again, when the case came before the learned Judge for confirmation of the report and further consideration, he was not asked to decide upon the liability of the Defendant to pay demurrage, though, somewhat singularly, he was asked to say that the Commissioner had wrongly found that there was such an agreement, the fact however being that the Commissioner did not find on the question one way or the other. It is the same now in appeal. We are asked to say that the learned Judge ought to have held that the Commissioner was in error in finding that there was an agreement to pay demurrage, but none of the grounds taken in appeal suggests that the question was left open for the decision of the Court, or that the Court ought itself to have decided it. On the whole, therefore, I think that the question of such an agreement is not one upon which we ought now to enter.

With respect to the second question, the matter stands thus: The Plaintiff brought his action for the hire of 115 boats while the Defendant alleged that he had hired only 70. It appears that the Plaintiff had had dealings simultaneously with two "firms," both of which were to his knowledge represented by the same person one Palianappa. The books said to have been kept by Palianappa show that the Defendant had hired only 70 boats, and that the other firm which Palianappa represented had hired 64. It is, however, asserted by the Plaintiff that only 22 boats were hired by the latter firm. The difference in the aggregate is trifling, but, in so far as the present action is concerned, there is the substantial difference of 45 boats. The first question referred to the Commissioner was "what was the number of boats hired by the Defendant from the Plaintiff and on what date was each boat hired?" Which question with respect to the first branch of it resolved itself virtually into this, namely, whether out of a given number of boats a certain number were to be appropriated to the Defendant's firm, or to the other firm for which also Palianappa acted. In dealing with this question the Commissioner appears to have very properly given his consideration mainly to the evidence afforded by the books, respectively, produced by the parties, but inasmuch as these did not agree, it became necessary for him to decide whether the Plaintiff's book or those produced by the Defendant were entitled to the greater weight. In the result he found in favour of the books produced by the Plaintiff, at the same time characterising those produced by the Defendant as of doubtful genuineness, and his finding on the first question referred was in the Plaintiff's favour. This finding and the reasons given for it have been called in question here.

In dealing with the matter the Commissioner in the first place discussed the probabilities of the case, and came to the conclusion that the Plaintiff's agent was less likely than Palianappa, in the earlier stages of the transactions, to make mistakes with respect to the firm with which the particular dealing was taking place. He next discussed the questions whether the arrangements for the hiring of boats were made between the Plaintiff himself and Palianappa, and whether Palianappa's assistant Sinia Pillay was present on all such occasions, and his conclusion was that "it would be absurd to assume that all the three persons [i.e., Palianappa, Sinia Pillay and another assistant of Palianappa] on behalf of the Defendant would be present on every occasion that Palianappa ordered for hire of boats," and lastly—and this is the main point—he referred to certain "significant facts" bearing on the genuineness of the books (Exs. No. 1 and No. 2) produced by the Defendant. Upon this point his opinion is thus expressed. "It seems to me doubtful whether the books (Exs. No. 1 and No. 2) are the original books kept by Palianappa, and the entries there correctly made, or were they not prepared for the purposes of this case," and he then proceeds "I cannot accept the evidence on behalf of the Defendant, in preference to the testimony afforded from the Plaintiff's boat engagement book, and therefore find that 116 of the Plaintiff's boats were hired by the Defendant." On a review of the evidence it appears to me that none of these reasons is satisfactory. The first seems to me to be of little or no cogency for the probabilities are to my mind quite as much (perhaps more) in favour of exactitude on the part of Palianappa, as on the part of the Plaintiff's agent. With respect to the second, its precise bearing on the question at issue is not very apparent, and it seems moreover hardly to be borne out by the evidence referred to in support of it, and with respect to the third the Commissioner would seem to have left entirely out of view, he certainly has not referred to it, certain evidence which to my mind establishes that the Defendant's books, Exs. No. 1 and No. 2, both of which, I may remark, were relevant to the inquiry, were not, as the Commissioner suggests, prepared for the purposes of the case.

I refer to the signatures of the Plaintiff's agent affixed to certain of the entries in these books. Mr. Garth called our attention to two, I think, of these signatures in Book No. 1, which he informed us, and his statement was not controverted, had been selected as specimens merely, there being other similar signatures in that book as well as in Book No. 2. Nothing was brought to our notice, either in the evidence taken before the Commissioner, or by way of argument, which to my mind had the effect of displacing or impairing the result of this evidence. It stands uncontradicted, and I must say that in the face of it I should have very great difficulty in coming to any other conclusion than that these Books (putting the question of the accuracy of their contents out of view) are, as they purport to be, contemporaneous records of the transactions to which they refer, and I think accordingly that a conclusion founded (even in part) upon the assumption that they are of questionable genuineness is unsatisfactory. I may add that the evidence referred to may also have a bearing on the accuracy of the entries contained in the books. I am not in a position to say how far the question of the agreed rates of hiring may depend on the genuineness of the books, but I think that if the case should be remitted to a Commissioner this matter ought also, if in fact it is affected by it, to be reconsidered.

Then with regard to the principles upon which the case ought to be dealt with, counsel on both sides were agreed at the hearing of this appeal, that the reference to the Commissioner was made in pursuance of and was within the power conferred on the Court by sec. 394 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If this be so, the Act itself, by sec. 395, prescribes the effect to be given to the Commissioner's proceedings. They shall be received in evidence in the suit, it is provided, unless the Court has reason to be dissatisfied with them. If it is dissatisfied with them, then it is to direct such further enquiry as may be requisite. It was sought by Mr. Pugh to place the findings of fact of a Commissioner appointed under sec. 394 virtually on the same footing as the verdict of a jury, his contention being that they ought not to be disturbed on grounds other than those upon which the verdict of a jury would be set aside. But the standard to which the proceedings of the Commissioner are to be referred under the Act appears to me to be a different one. It is in one sense a somewhat indefinite standard, and I think purposely so, and I think also that, having regard to the consideration that the provisions of secs. 394 and 395 of the Code are applicable to Courts of all grades in this country, it would be of doubtful expediency in construing these sections to endeavour to bring the practice under this part of the Code into strict conformity with the rules which obtain in England with regard to the varying or setting aside of a Chief Clerk's certificate, which was the analogy to which Mr. Pugh appealed. The case upon which he placed reliance was Mackintosh v. The Great Western Railway Company (1), but apart from what I have just said, I do not think that those portions of the Vice-Chancellor's judgment to which he referred us are in point. Those remarks, though expressed somewhat generally, were intended, I think, to apply more particularly to the class of cases with which the learned Vice-Chancellor was in that part of his judgment dealing. The case itself as a whole was a very exceptional one—and I gather from the judgment that the great mass of items found upon by the Chief Clerk was in respect of compensation by way of damages, and remuneration for work and labour done. With regard to questions of that nature it might reasonably be said that the finding of one tribunal after a fair investigation was as likely to be correct as that of another, and that the findings of the Chief Clerk upon them might therefore properly be placed on a footing similar to that of the verdict of a jury. That the Vice-Chancellor, however, had before his mind cases of this description only when he made the observations relied upon, is, I think, apparent from what he says at page 689 of the report introducing the discussion. He there says:—"The items which have been disputed on the present motion for the most part involve questions of compensation, and estimate upon the quantum meruit, on which probably no two men would agree. Even one man, although a competent judge, might, at different times, arrive at different results, according to the force with which particular circumstances might strike his mind, and yet it might not be easy to say that either of the different conclusions was wrong." But he himself draws a sharp distinction between the mass of the items to which his remarks generally were applicable and two specific items which are dealt with at page 693 and the following pages of the report. With regard to the latter he says:—"The questions on these two matters are of a different kind from those which arise on the other items," and the observations already made as to the danger of disturbing the amount once awarded by a competent authority for compensation or damages or remuneration are not applicable." The whole of the circumstances affecting these two items may not be clearly apparent from the report, but with respect to the second, it seems clear enough that the question was whether on the evidence the Plaintiff was entitled to a sum of £17,600, or £16,500 for work and labour done, whether, in fact, a certain tender was for the one amount or the other, and the learned Vice-Chancellor gave his decision in accordance with his view of the evidence. I venture to think that the question now under consideration falls rather under the principle involved in the passage I have last quoted than within the doctrines laid down in the relier part of the Vice-Chancellor's judgment. There was not, I think, here, either in respect of the number of boats hired, or of the rates of hiring, any question of a fair estimate under all the circumstances, but the Commissioner had in the one case to determine specifically on the evidence how many boats were hired, and in the other what was the actual agreement arrived at between the parties regarding rates. A mere "compromise" would not in either case, I think, have sufficed.

R. M. S. CHETTY v. MAHOMED ESSA SAHEB.

I have been unable to find any case in this Court in which this question has come under consideration, but both the Bombay and Madras Courts have decided—in the case of the latter Court, it is true, after more than one decision to the contrary—that a Court is not limited to questions of principle when examining the proceedings of a Commissioner appointed to take accounts, see Ahmed Nannu Bhai v. Kharap Karim Bhai (4) and Kankatala Chellamaiya v. Polsheth Papaiya (5). These were cases on the construction of sec. 181 of Act VIII of 1859 which is in its essentials the same as the present law, and the former case, it seems to me, puts the matter upon its true footing, namely, that the Court, whether of first instance or of appeal, must be satisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner before it adopts them. That is the criterion which, in so far as all events as the Court making the reference is concerned, the law in effect lays down. The Court will, no doubt, in all cases, give due weight to the opinion to the Commissioner, and the duty cast upon it of satisfying itself as to the proceedings is in practice modified to this extent, that it is usual to confine the examination to those parts of them to which exception has been taken by the parties, but the duty, it seems to me nevertheless, to that extent at all events, remains, and can only be discharged by such an examination as is sufficient for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the investigation has been conducted by the Commissioner fairly and in accordance with law. When the case comes before an Appellate Court, the situation is of course somewhat different. What has then to be dealt with is the decree of the Court below, and when this gives effect to the findings of the Commissioner, there is the added weight of the decision of the Judge to be taken into consideration. But if there is to be an appeal at all in such cases, it seems to me that, subject to the consideration I have just mentioned, the duty of the Appellate Court is commensurate with that of the Court of first instance and that, if it is dissatisfied with the proceedings either in whole or in part, it is incumbent upon it to do that which the lower Court ought to have done, namely, to set them aside, either wholly or partially, as the case may be and send the matter back for such further enquiry as may be necessary. In the present case, I would wish to add, the learned Judge has not discussed the evidence and we are consequently in the dark as to the manner in which his mind was influenced, if it was influenced at all, by the evidence bearing on the genuineness of the Defendant's books to which I have referred in the earlier part of my judgment. For the reasons, and to the extent I have stated, I am not satisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner and that being so, I can see no other alternative than to set aside the decree and direct a further enquiry, as to the number of boats hired and the agreed rates of hiring, if, and in so far as, the latter question is affected by the Defendant's Book No. 1. I think the costs of the appeal ought to abide the result.

When I wrote what I have just read my attention had not been drawn to the case of Moung Tha Hnyeen v. Moung Pan Nyo (2) to which the learned Chief Justice has referred in his judgment. That case affords an illustration of a well-recognised principle, but unless the findings of a Commissioner appointed under sec. 394 of the Civil Procedure Code can be placed on the same footing as the findings of a Judge trying a cause, I think it would be difficult to make it applicable in the present case. As I have had occasion, however, to observe above, the proceedings of the Commissioner, which would presumably include his report, when he is required to report, are under sec. 395 to be treated merely as evidence in the cause. If he finds a fact, his finding is, I take it then, only evidence of that fact, but not a decision upon it, and this appears to me to be sufficient to distinguish his position from that of a Judge trying a cause. His proceedings are an enquiry for the information of the Court: not a trial. This distinction was pointed out by Lord Esher with respect to the proceedings of a referee appointed under sec. 56 of the Judicature Act, 1873, in the case, Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee Company (6).

APPEAL NO. 72 OF 1901.

RAMPINI, J.	}	ABALU DAS and others,
GUPTA, J.		Appellants,
1901.		v.
16, April.		THE EMPRESS, Respondent.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 300, Excep. (i), 302, 304—Murder—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Provocation, grave and sudden—Provocation, continuing to influence feelings.

Where the accused found a man entering his house at night at the invitation of his wife with whom that man had criminal intimacy and being enraged, caught hold of him and took him outside the house to some distance and there assaulted him so severely that he subsequently died of the injuries received :

Held—That the circumstances under which the deceased was found in the house of the accused on the night of the crime were sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to the accused and his relations.

That the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after the deceased was caught in the house in the company of the wife of the accused.

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th of February 1901, against the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused by the Session Judge of Rungpur on the 5th of January 1901.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyoti Prasad Sarbadhikari for the Appellant.

Mr. Gordon Leith for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The three accused in this case, Abalu Das, Santiram Das and Sakalu Das, have been tried by the Sessions Judge of Rungpur with the aid of assessors, convicted of murder under sec. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to transportation for life.

The facts of the case are as follows :—The deceased, Hur Singh, and his mother, Dulai, lived in the bari of the accused Abalu; but it was discovered that Hur Singh had contracted an intimacy with Lakya, the wife of the accused Abalu, and so Hur Singh and his mother were turned out and went and lived elsewhere. Then, on the night of the 21st of May last, Hur Singh, at the invitation of Lakya, went to the bari of the accused and the woman took him inside: whereupon Abalu, Sakalu, his brother, and Santiram, his uncle, seized him, carried him off to some distance, broke both his arms and one of his legs, thrust a stick up his rectum and left him in the open not very far from his bari where he was found next morning. Information was then given to the Police and he was taken to the hospital where he died on the 24th of May in consequence of the injuries he had received.

There is no direct evidence of these facts; but they appear to be well-established by the dying declaration of the deceased, who made three statements (i) to the persons who first found him, (ii) to the Inspector of Police, and (iii) to the Fouzdari Ahilkar or Magistrate at Cooch Behar. In the first of these statements he said he had gone to a place to the west of his house to ease himself when he was caught by the accused and treated in the manner above described. But in his subsequent statements he admitted fully that he had gone to the bari of the accused at the invitation of Lakya, because he was carrying on an intrigue with her. The night was dark but there was no difficulty as to the identity of the accused, because the deceased had lived in the same bari with them and was able to identify them by their voices. We think there is no doubt as to the veracity of the second and third statements of the deceased, and there is ample corroboration of these declarations in the surrounding circumstances, the evidence of previous intimacy between the deceased and Lakya, and the very serious injuries on his body which ultimately caused his death.

The learned Judge, disagreeing with the assessors, has found the accused guilty of murder and there is no doubt ground for coming to this conclusion. We, however, consider that we may take a more lenient view of the case and alter the conviction from one for murder under sec. 302, I. P. C., to one for culpable homicide not amounting to murder under sec. 304, I. P. C. Our reasons are these. There is no doubt that the circumstances under which the deceased was found in the bari of the accused on the night of the crime were sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to Abalu and his relatives. In our opinion there is no doubt also that when the deceased entered the bari of the accused he did so with an evil purpose; and this must have been the conclusion at which the accused arrived when they found him at night within their bari in company with the wife of Abalu.

Learned counsel for the Crown has suggested that the accused laid an ambush for deceased and that the woman was made use of to decoy him into the house. We feel very doubtful, however, whether the woman could have been a party to such a design. It may be that the accused were watching the woman and lying in wait for the deceased, whom they knew to be the lover of Lakya; and that may account for their springing on him as they did. But, however this may be, in our opinion the provocation afforded by the deceased did amount to grave and sudden provocation within the meaning of exception (i) to sec. 300, I. P. C. The learned Judge does not accept this plea, because the accused took the deceased to some little distance before they murdered him. But we think that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after the deceased was caught in the bari in the company of Lakya; and for these reasons we are inclined to take a merciful view of the case and to alter the conviction from one under sec. 302, I. P. C., to one under sec. 304, I. P. C., which we accordingly do. Further, we reduce the sentences passed upon Santiram Das and Sakalu Das to rigorous imprisonment for ten years in each case, while we reduce the sentence passed upon Abalu Das to one of rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

REV. NO. 286 OF 1901.

GHOSE, J.	}	SADAR ALI and others,
TAYLOR, J.		Petitioners,
1901.		v.

		Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 146—“Subject-matter of dispute,” meaning of—Whether refers to whole subject-matter or to component parts—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to make an order under sec. 145 in regard to some and an order under sec. 146 in regard to the remaining plots—Separate and distinct subject-matter—Divisibility of subject-matter—One proceeding in regard to several plots—Irregularity—Prejudice.

The expression “subject-matter of dispute” used in secs. 145 and 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refers to the whole or to any component part or parts thereof. If that component part is distinct and separable from the rest, it cannot rightly be held that because a Magistrate cannot find possession of one of the component parts of the subject-matter in dispute with either party, he is bound to attach the whole, although that component part is distinct and separable from the rest.

If the subject-matter in dispute is indivisible and must be dealt with as a whole, it must be dealt with in such a way as to make, in regard to it, one order either under sec. 145 or sec. 146 of the Code, as the circumstances may require.

(Per TAYLOR, J.)—That in this case each separate plot may be regarded as a separate subject-matter of dispute and in that case, each separate plot might form a separate, independent proceeding; and the joint trial in one proceeding of several such matters of dispute would at most amount to an irregularity, which in the absence of prejudice shown, would not vitiate the enquiry.

ISWAR CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. AMBICA CHURN MAJUMDAR (3) relied upon.

This was a rule issued on the 28th of March 1901, against the order of Babu Prasanna Kumar Das Gupta, Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 8th of December 1900, an application for a reference of which order to the High Court for revision was rejected by H. E. Ransom, Esq., Sessions Judge of Chittagong, on the 9th of February 1901.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment of Ghose, J.

Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda for the Petitioners.

Mr. Caspersz, with him Moulvi Serajul Islam, for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows :—

GHOSE, J.—The subject-matter of this rule is an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong under sec. 145, as also under sec. 146, C. Cr. P.

(1) I. L. H. 22 Cal. 297 (1894).

(2) 24 W. R. Cr. 78 (1876).

(3) 5 C. W. N. 544 (1901).

SADAR ALI v. ABDUL KARIM.

It appears that a proceeding under sec. 145 was instituted in regard to six plots of lauds, four of these plots being paddy lands marked by distinguishable boundaries, while the other two plots were not so distinguishable from the rest. The Deputy Magistrate was of opinion, upon the evidence taken in the case, that one of the two parties before us was in de facto possession of the four plots in question; but he was unable to find who was in possession of the other two plots, and he accordingly directed that the first party with whom possession was found in regard to the four plots of land should be confirmed in possession thereof, and an order of attachment under sec. 146 should be made in regard to the other two plots.

The contention of the second party, who are the Petitioners before us, is that being unable to find either party in possession of the whole of the subject-matter, it was the duty of the Deputy Magistrate to make an order under sec. 146, C. Cr. P., attaching the whole of the lands in dispute between the parties. The contention shortly is that in a case like this, if a Magistrate cannot find possession with either of the two parties as regards any, however small, portion of the subject-matter of dispute, though he may find one of them in possession of the rest, he is bound to put the whole of the subject matter under attachment in accordance with the provisions of sec. 146 of the Code. Sec. 145 of the Code uses the expression "subject-matter of dispute," and so does the following sec. 146; that the "subject-matter" mentioned in the latter section must refer to the same subject-matter as is stated in sec. 145.

And, basing his arguments upon the use of the expression "subject-matter" in both the sections, it has been contended by the learned vakil for the Petitioners that the Deputy Magistrate was bound, when he was unable to find possession with either party in regard to two of the plots comprised in the subject-matter of dispute, to have attached the whole of it under sec. 146. In support of this contention, he has relied upon the case of Katras Jheriah Coal Company v. Sib Krishta Daw & Co. (1). The facts of that case, however, are substantially different from the facts with which we are concerned in the present case. There the dispute was in regard to certain collieries, and it appeared that the first party were in possession of the buildings which contained the office where the business of the collieries was transacted, and where all the cash books and papers of the business were kept, and that the second party had, during a period of about 14 days prior to the commencement of the proceedings, succeeded in obtaining possession of the pits, wharves, tramways, etc., of the colliery by what the Court considered to be a high-handed and improper scheme. The Magistrate, considering himself bound to find who was in actual possession at the date of the commencement of the proceedings (this was, I may here mention, the 3rd September) passed an order in favour of the second party affirming him in, or rather giving him, possession of the whole of the collieries including the buildings of which the other party was undoubtedly in possession. And it was held by this Court that such an order was bad and that, as the second party was undoubtedly not in possession of the whole of the property in dispute and the effect of the order was to place that party in possession of the portion that was in the possession of the first party, the proper order to make under such circumstances was one under sec. 146 attaching the whole of the property. In the course of the judgment Sir Comer Petheram, the then Chief Justice of this Court, made the following observations upon which the whole of the argument of the Petitioners seems to be founded. After referring to the circumstances of the case, he said :—

(1) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 297 (1894).

SADAR ALI v. ABDUL KARIM.

“But however this may be, we think it is clear upon the evidence of the second party themselves that they were not in possession of the subject-matter in dispute on the 3rd of September, and that they never in fact got into possession of an important part of it until they were actually put in possession of it by the final order of the Magistrate made in this proceeding on the 1st of October, and it cannot be doubted that a Magistrate under this section has no power to place either party in possession of the subject-matter in dispute, or any part of it, but only to find who is in possession of it as a whole, and, if that is impossible, to make an order under sec. 146.”

These observations must be read by the light of the facts of the particular case, and they could not be read as applicable to a case where the component parts of the subject-matter of dispute are quite divisible from each other, and where it is quite possible to make an order confirming the possession of one of the parties in regard to some of those parts, and, in the event of its being found that other parts are not in the possession of either party, to make an order for attachment of those parts.

In the case to which reference has been made, the subject-matter in dispute was not divisible and had to be dealt with as a whole, and could not be dealt with in parts; and it seems to me that the observations of the learned Chief Justice in the case could hardly have any application to the case now before us.

Referring then to the language of secs. 145 and 146, it seems to me that, while the sections speak of the subject-matter in dispute, that subject-matter may be read as referring to the whole or to any component part or parts thereof. If that component part is distinct and separable from the rest, it cannot rightly be held that, because the Magistrate cannot find possession of one of the component parts of the subject-matter in dispute with either party, he is bound to attach the whole, although that component part is distinct and separable from the rest. Otherwise it seems to me, a great deal of injustice might be done to a party who may be found to be in undoubted possession of the other component parts of the subject-matter. If in such a case an order for attachment be made in regard to the whole subject-matter, that party should have to institute a civil suit for declaration of title and also for recovery of possession, not only of the portion in regard to which the Magistrate is unable to find possession with either party, but also in regard to that portion of the property in regard to which, on the date of the Magistrate's order he is found to be in possession, thus giving to his opponent an undoubted advantage over him. No doubt, if the subject-matter in dispute is indivisible, and must be dealt with as a whole, as it was in the case referred to, it must be dealt with in such a way as to make, in regard to it, one order either under sec. 145 or sec. 146 of the Code as the circumstances may be.

In this connection, another consideration arises. Supposing that there are different plots of land involved in the proceedings, and the Magistrate finds possession as to some of the plot with one party, and as to the other plots, with the other party, is he bound to make an order under sec. 146 of the Code attaching all the plots? I hardly think this position could be maintained, because that section says that if the Magistrate is unable to find possession with either party as to the subject-matter in dispute, he is bound to attach it. If he finds possession in regard to the different plots, with one or other of the parties, as indicated, it would, I think, be straining the language of secs. 145 and 146 to hold that the Magistrate is bound to attach the whole of the subject-matter in dispute, and cannot affirm the possession of the two parties, in accordance with his finding. If an order under sec. 145 may rightly be made affirming the possession of one party in regard to some of the plots, and affirming possession of the other party in regard to the rest, it follows that an order may be made under sec. 146 of the Code attaching one portion of the property, if that portion is clearly distinguishable from the rest of the property, if the Magistrate finds that neither party has shown possession in regard to that portion.

I may also in this connection refer to the case of Rakhal Dass Singh and another v. Rajah Sheo Pershad Singh (2) which was a case under the old Code of Criminal Procedure. The facts of that case were somewhat different, but the order that was made in that case, which was affirmed by this Court, is rather in support of the view which I have expressed.

Upon these grounds I am of opinion that the Magistrate has not exceeded his jurisdiction in making the order that he has made. The result is that this rule must be discharged.

TAYLOR, J.—I would only add two or three words. I agree entirely in what has fallen from my learned brother that in the present case, each separate plot may be regarded as a separate subject-matter of dispute. If that is so, each separate plot might form a separate, independent proceeding. The joint trial in one proceeding of several such matters of dispute would be at most an irregularity and, on the authority of the recent case of Iswar Chunder Chowdhry v. Ambica Churn Majumdar (3), would not vitiate the inquiry. In the present case, it is not shown that the applicant has been in any way prejudiced. I agree in discharging the rule.

Rule discharged.

[ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE RECORDER OF RANGOON.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	} KONG YEE LONE & Co., Defendants, Appellants, v. LOWJEE NANJEE, Plaintiff, Respondent.
LORD MACNAGHTEN.
LORD ROBERTSON.
SIR R. COUCH.
SIR FORD NORTH.
1901.
Heard, 2, May.
Judgment, 13,
June.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 30—Gambling and wagering contract—Suit for value received in "difference" on rice.

There is no difference between the expressions "gaming and wagering" as used in the English Statute and "by way of wager" in sec. 30 of the Contract Act.

Two parties may enter into a formal contract for the sale and purchase of goods at a given price and for their delivery at a given time. But if the circumstances are such as to warrant the legal inference that they never intended any actual transfer of goods at all, but only to pay or receive money between one another according as the market price of the goods should vary from the contract price at the given time, that is not a commercial transaction, but a wager on the rise and fall of the market.

UNIVERSAL STOCK EXCHANGE, LD. v. STRACHAN (1) approved.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Recorder of Rangoon in an action brought by the Respondent ordering that the Appellant should pay to the Respondent the sum of Rs. 1,23,625 with interest at 6 per cent.

The action was brought by the above-named Lowjee Nanjee who trades under the name of Robert Sutherland & Co. against the Defendants who trade as Kong Yee Lone & Co. upon two promissory notes, the Defendants being Wong Kaim Chiew (Defendant No. 1), Wong Kain Choay and Kong Wain. The promissory notes, both dated 11th September 1899, were for Rs. 1,27,820 and Rs. 5,198, of which the former was alleged to have been given for differences upon rice transactions, and the latter for brokerage. The defence was that the notes were not signed by anyone who was authorized to bind the firm and that they were given for wagering transactions and therefore could not be enforced.

The notes were in the following terms — "on demand we, the undersigned Kong Yee Lone & Co., promise to pay to Messrs. Robert Sutherland & Co. or order the sum of rupees one lac twenty-seven thousand eight hundred and twenty only for value received in difference on rice.

Signed in Chinese character.

(Sd.) KONG YEE LONE & Co. (in English).

Note. The translation of the above Chinese character is Kwong Ship Loang."

The second note exactly in the same terms was for "value received in brokerage."

The contracts between the parties were divisible into two classes. They were distinguishable on their face by what was called the option clause. In the first class of contracts the seller had the option to deliver rice from a number of mills specified therein among which the Defendants' mill was not included. The second class of contracts left no option to the seller and the Defendants' mill alone was mentioned. The Defendants' mill was a small one capable of putting out only 30,000 bags a month. Their capital was also small, being fixed by the partnership deed at a trifle more than a lac of rupees.

The second class of contracts were for the sale by the Defendants to the Plaintiff of 22,500 bags of rice from the Defendants' mill. All these were duly fulfilled by delivery and payment.

The first class of contracts dealt with about 1,99,000 bags at various prices aggregating upwards of 5 crores of rupees and were some of them contracts for sale of rice by Defendants to Plaintiff, and some contracts for sale by Plaintiff to Defendants. Not a single bag under this class was delivered, and the first promissory-note in suit was for the difference in price of these bags of rice.

The Judgment of the Recorder of Rangoon was as follows :—

The Plaintiff in this case is a broker and also a dealer in rice. During the year 1899 he had dealings with the Defendants who are rice-millers and bought rice to a very large extent from them. Some of the rice he took delivery of and paid for. In other cases he resold the rice to the millers. According to his evidence these transactions were carried out on behalf of the Defendants by one Kaim Chiew who has absconded. On the 11th of September the Defendants' firm owed the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,27,820 for "differences," and Kaim Chiew gave the Plaintiff a promissory note, Exhibit A for this amount "for value received in difference on rice." He also gave him another promissory note for Rs. 5,198-1 "for value received in brokerage." Subsequently the Plaintiff received two bills from the Defendants against one Moolla Abdool Rahim for Rs. 10,500. He collected this sum, and after giving the Defendants credit for it sues for the balance Rs. 1,23,625-12.

It is not disputed that the second word in the Chinese signature on the promissory note does not read "Yes." Some witnesses say that part of it reads "ship" others that it is unintelligible.

The Defendants' case is first that the business of the firm was carried on by one Puck Chan until he became ill towards the end of 1898 and that subsequently it was carried on by one Chang Wa. I have no doubt however after Mr. Mack's evidence that the business was carried on by Kaim Chiew and there is one very significant fact in support of this, namely, that the Defendants have not been able to call any independent evidence to show that at the time of the transactions between Plaintiff and Defendants' firm the business was carried on by Chang Wa. But it is not disputed that Kaim Chiew was a member of the Defendants' firm, and as a member of the firm he would be entitled to carry on business on its behalf, and no private arrangement between the partners not communicated to the Plaintiff would bind him. I hold then that Kaim Chiew did carry on the business of the Defendants' firm and had power to bind it by the notes in dispute.

Then the Defendants' case further is that the notes were not signed in such a manner as to bind the firm, and evidence has been given to show that when borrowing money from the firm of R. M. M. A. the promissory notes were signed by three of the partners and the "shop" mark of the firm affixed. But Cheng

KONG YEE LONE &amp; Co. v. LOWJEE NANJEE.

Wa has to admit that he alone signed contracts in the name of the firm and did not use the "chop" mark. It has also been argued on the authority of Kirk v. Blurton (2) where the signature "John Blurton & Co. instead of "John Blurton" the true style of the partnership was held not to bind the firm, that as the second word in the signature is not "Yee" the Defendants are not bound. Other authorities were referred to, to the same effect, Stephens v. Reynolds (3), Faith v. Richmond (4), Leverson v. Lane (5), and Yorkshire Banking Co. v. Beatson (6).

I do not consider however that these authorities can apply in such a case as this where the signature is in a language unknown to the person taking the document purporting to bind the firm. It is different in England where the signature is in a language known to both parties. It would be impossible to carry on business in such a town as Rangoon if it was necessary for a person taking a document purporting to be signed by a partner in the name of the firm to satisfy himself that the name was correctly signed. Documents may be and are signed every day in mercantile offices in Chinese, Burmese, Hindustani, Bengali, Tamil, Telugu, Gujarati, Hebrew and other languages. No firm, or at all events very few firms, could possibly keep a collection of expert clerks who could inform them whether the signatures were correct. The question in every case must be whether the person signing purported to sign the name of the firm. It would open the door to fraud of the gravest character to hold otherwise.

Then it was argued on behalf of the Defendants that the transactions were gambling transactions and were to the knowledge of the Plaintiff fraudulent as against their firm. As to this last charge there is no evidence whatever. The question as to gambling is settled by The Universal Stock Exchange, Ltd. v. Strachan (1). That was a case of bargain and sale of stock. Cave, J., in summing up said:—"A man goes to a broker and directs him to buy and sell so much stock as the case may be. That may be in the eye of the purchaser a gambling transaction or it may not. If he means to invest his money in the purchase of the stock which he orders to be bought that undoubtedly is a perfectly legitimate and real business transaction. If he does not mean to take up his stock, if he means to sell again before the settling day arrives, that may be a gambling transaction so far as he is concerned, but it is not necessarily a gambling transaction so far as the broker is concerned; and in order to be a gambling transaction such as the law points at, it must be a gambling transaction in the intention of both the parties to it,.....notwithstanding these ostensible terms of business, was there a secret understanding that the stock should never be dealt with?" This summing up was held to be perfectly

The question then is "Was there a common intention to wager." I do not see how I can so hold having regard to the fact that rice was in certain instances delivered and paid for. In the case I have just referred to and in In re Gieve (7) there never was any transfer of stock at all. In my opinion the Plaintiff is entitled to succeed and there will be a decree for the amount claimed with interest from date of decree at 6 per cent. with costs.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. James Fox for the Appellants contended, criticising the evidence, that the Recorder was wrong in holding that Wong Kaim Chiew, the 1st Defendant (who had disappeared from Rangoon on or about 31st October 1899, the date the action was commenced, and had not been since heard of), was the managing partner of Defendants' firm or had authority to bind that firm. That there was no evidence that the signature to the promissory notes was either that of the firm, or such as they were in the habit of using.

That the so-called contracts for the differences were gaming and wagering transactions; that there was no consideration for the small note; and that they could not be sued on or enforced in law. Sec. 30 of the Indian Contract Act was noticed and The Universal Stock Exchange, Ltd. v. Strachan (1) and Ex parte Gieve (7) were commented on.

Mr. Danckwerts and Mr. Mayne for the Respondent in addition to commenting on the above cases contended that the transactions were legal and binding, and Wong Kaim Chiew had ample authority to bind the Defendants' firm. They referred to Forbes v. Marshall (8). It was submitted that the Indian Contract Act was narrower than the English Act, see sec. 30. It did not contain "gaming;" Forget v. Ostigny (9); secs 17 and 18, Indian Registration Act.

KONG YEE LONE & Co. v. LOWJEE NANJEE.

The Defendants pleaded that the character signed to the notes indicates not their firm but somebody or something else; and further that the dealings on which the notes are founded were effected between the Plaintiffs and one Kaim Chiew who, though a partner, was not the manager of the firm and had no authority to bind it. A large part of the controversy in the Court below and at this Bar related to these two defences. Their Lordships will not discuss them further now. One turns on the niceties of Chinese handwriting; and the other on a variety of circumstances adduced to show the position of Kaim Chiew in the Defendants' firm. Both have been ruled by the learned Recorder in favour of the Plaintiff, and at the close of the argument their Lordships were clear that the evidence fully justified his rulings.

A more serious objection to the Plaintiff's suit is that the consideration for which the promissory notes were given was a gambling transaction. The law applicable to the case is the Indian Contract Act which enacts as follows:—

“30. Agreements by way of wager are void; and no suit shall be brought for recovering anything alleged to be won on any wager, or entrusted to any person to abide the result of any game or other uncertain event on which any wager is made.”

This is substantially a transfusion of English law into the Indian statute book. Mr. Danckwerts urged that there is a difference between the expression “gambling and wagering” used in the English Statute and in the earlier Indian Act, XXI of 1848, and the expression “by way of wager” used in the present

Indian Act. Their Lordships are unable to perceive the distinction. Two parties may enter into a formal contract for the sale and purchase of goods at a given price, and for their delivery at a given time. But if the circumstances are such as to warrant the legal inference that they never intended any actual transfer of goods at all, but only to pay or receive money between one another according as the market price of the goods should vary from the contract price at the given time, that is not a commercial transaction, but a wager on the rise or fall of the market. The question is of which nature were the dealings which formed the consideration for the notes sued on. Were they for genuine purchases of rice or only for payment of money by one or the other according to the changes and chances of the market?

The contracts by which the Plaintiff purports to buy rice from the Defendants are broadly divisible into two classes. They are distinguishable on their face by what is called the option clause. In one class of contracts, shown in Exhibits D12 to D20, the seller has an option to deliver rice from a number of specified mills, among which that of the Defendants is not included. In the other class, shown in Exhibits D to D11, the only mill specified is that of the Defendants. In fact this second class leaves no option to the seller, though the expression used in and appropriate to the first class is retained in the class where only the Defendants' mill is specified.

The Defendants' mill is a small one, capable, as the Plaintiff states, of putting out 30,000 bags in a month. Their partnership capital, too, is small, being fixed by their deed at a trifle more than a lac of rupees.

In the year 1899, by 14 contracts ranging in time from January to the end of August, the Plaintiff bought from the Defendants 22,250 bags of rice. All these contracts, which are set out in the record and are conveniently tabulated in the case lodged for this appeal, are contracts of the second class, viz., for rice from the Defendants' mill. All were duly fulfilled by delivery and payment.

Contracts of the first class are very different both in their character and in the treatment of them, by the parties. The Plaintiff's clerk, Sitaram, produced an account (Exhibit I, Rec. p. 106) showing the dealings which took place between the parties from January 1898 to August 1899. They are very large, considerably exceeding half a million of bags. The witness was asked to mark the items for which the rice had been delivered. The items so marked (see Exhibit I. 1) consist of the 22,250 bags which fell under the contracts mentioned as of the second class, and 5,000 more which are the subject of other contracts made subsequently to the date of the promissory notes. It does not appear by the record whether those 5,000 bags were bought under the first or the second class of contract.

There is some difficulty in applying Sitaram's oral evidence to Exhibit I, because the exhibit relates to a wider range of dealings than those under discussion. The oral evidence is to the following effect:—

"Out of 193,250 bags sold to Plaintiff 27,250 were delivered.

"Of the amount in Exhibit I put down as bought by Defendants from Plaintiff, i.e., 2,58,000 bags none at all were delivered. Those were re-sales for differences. On the 28th June whoever acted for Defendants began a very heavy speculation. On that day Defendants sold to the Plaintiff 30,000 bags, on the 5th July 30,000, on the 10th July 10,000, on 18th 30,000, on 18th 15,000, 24th 30,000 for delivery August—October.

"On 5th August Defendants bought 62,000 and 94,000, bags. On 7th August 20,000; on 21st August Plaintiff purchased 20,000 bags.

"Exhibit A was given for differences on these sales."

Whether the differences were for the sales in August alone or for those in June and July also, is not clear, and there is a slight discrepancy in the figures. But that does not substantially affect the result of the witness's accounts and statements, which is clear enough. Out of the half million or more bags represented in Exhibit I, there were delivered prior to the date of the promissory notes 22,250 bags, every one of which was sold under the second class of contract. As to the other 5,000 delivered it is not shown that they were under the first class. For all that appears there has not been delivery of a single bag under the first class. During seven weeks in June, July and August 1889 were made the contracts on which the notes in suit are founded. They are the last seven items in Exhibit I. They appear to be for 1,99,000 bags at various prices aggregating upwards of 5 crores of rupees. The latest delivery was to be on the 7th October.

Now the output of the firm itself would not be much over 60,000 bags during the currency of the contracts; and they had dealings with other persons besides the Plaintiff. The capital of the firm as stated was a trifle more than a lac of rupees. The cost of the goods would be that amount multiplied five hundred fold. It is possible for traders to contemplate transactions so far beyond their basis of trade, but it is very unlikely. In point of fact they never completed nor were they called on to complete any one of the ostensible transactions. The rational inference is that neither party ever intended completion. When the two classes of contracts are compared: the one class suitable to traders such as the Defendants and fulfilled by them, the other extravagantly large and left without any attempt at fulfilment; the rational inference is strengthened into a moral certainty. Their Lordships think that from these data it is unreasonable to draw any other conclusion than that the description which the larger promissory note gives of the consideration for it is the correct one. It is for "difference on rice;" not, as now contended, for the price of rice resold by the Plaintiff to the Defendants.

The judgment of the learned Recorder does not dwell on the above considerations. He quotes the judgment of Mr. Justice Cave in the case of The Universal Stock Exchange, Ltd. v. Strachan (1), which, as their Lordships agree, lays down the law very clearly. He then asks whether there was in this case a common intention to wager; and he adds 'I do not see how I can so hold, having regard to the fact that the rice was in certain instances delivered and paid for.' But he does not observe that the instances all belong to the class of contracts as to which it is reasonable to infer that they were genuine contracts for the sale and delivery of goods.

Their Lordships hold that the consideration of the notes sued on was a number of wagering contracts within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act. They will humbly advise His Majesty so to declare, and reversing the decree below to dismiss the suit with costs. The Plaintiff must also pay the costs of this appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2117 of 1898.

Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

Mesne profits, suit for—Onus—Notice of vacating possession.

In a suit for mesne profits as in other cases it is incumbent on the Plaintiff to establish not only the existence of his right, but also the extent of it.

There is nothing in the circumstances of the present case to take it out of this general rule.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1898, against the decree of Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah

ISHAN CHANDRA BURDHAN v. AINUDDIN MIA.

Mymensingh, dated the 28th June 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Okhoy Kumar Mittra, Munsif of Pingna, dated the 17th of May 1897.

This appeal arose out of a suit for recovery of mesne profits. Plaintiff stated that he was eight annas co-sharer in a certain jote, that he was dispossessed from the land by Defendants Nos. 1 to 9 and by one Jabani Sheikh, the predecessor in interest of Defendants Nos. 10 to 15, and that in execution of a decree he took symbolical possession on the 26th Falgoun 1298, but that the said Defendants having declined to deliver up actual possession of the land, Plaintiff again sued for possession and mesne profits from 26th Falgoun 1298 to 25th Agrahayan 1300 and obtained a decree which had been confirmed in appeal, and Plaintiff took possession of the land on the 27th Agrahayan 1303. The present suit was brought for mesne profits from 26th Falgoun 1300 to 27th Agrahayan 1303 and the claim was laid at Rs. 1,000.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

HILL, J.—The facts of this case have not perhaps been ascertained by the Courts below with as much precision as could have been desired, and there are certain matters of detail with respect to which our information is faulty. We have not, however, been asked to obtain that information, and the appeal has been argued upon the basis of the facts actually found.

The suit was for mesne profits for a period extending from the 26th Falgoun 1300 to the 27th Agrahayan 1303. Of the 16 Defendants in the suit the last is impleaded merely pro forma. The 10th to the 15th inclusive are the representatives of one Jabani Sheikh, deceased. The first three are talukdars and the remaining Defendants along with Jabani Sheikh appear to have been either their servants or cultivators of the land. The Plaintiff is the owner of an 8 annas share in a jote situated in the taluk of the first three Defendants, and he asserts that while in possession of this share he was dispossessed by the first nine Defendants and Jabani Sheikh. He thereupon instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Chowki Pingna and obtained a decree restoring him to possession. This decree was put into execution, and on the 26th Falgoun 1298 the Plaintiff obtained symbolical possession of the property. He failed however in consequence of the continued opposition of the then Defendants to obtain actual possession and in consequence he again sued the same persons for possession. This suit also resulted in a decree in the Plaintiff's favour, but Ainnuddin Mia, the present first Defendant, presented an appeal against the decree which appeal was pending until the 25th October 1895, when it was dismissed. On the 27th Agrahayan 1303 the Plaintiff obtained possession under his decree. The claim is thus with respect to the period intervening between the institution of the second suit for possession and the date upon which the Plaintiff went into possession. In the meantime and during the pendency of the appeal above-mentioned, the then Defendants with the exception of Mathura Nath who seems to have been a mere servant of the talukdar Defendants Makura Bluia who died several years ago though the date of his death is not shown, and Jabani Sheikh filed a petition in the Court of the Munsif of Chowki Pingna in which they asserted that they had quitted the land, and disclaimed all further connection with it, praying the Munsif at the same time to pass such orders as would free them, from further harassment at the hands of the Plaintiff. This petition was dated the 3rd November 1894 (18th Kartic 1301). It was replied to by the Plaintiff on the 23rd Agrahayan 1301 by a counter-petition in which he prayed that the Defendants' petition might be dismissed with costs on the grounds that it was a mere ruse; that all the Defendants had not joined in it, and that consequently those who were parties to it could not effectually yield up possession; and that the Defendants had no right to apply to give up possession unless and until the first Defendant withdrew his appeal. Whether any order was passed on these petitions does not appear, but it is mentioned by both the lower Courts in their judgments in the present suit that the Plaintiff stated in his evidence that his reason for not resuming possession when the petition of the 3rd November 1894 was presented was that the appeal of the first Defendant was then pending, and there was no knowing whether it would be decided in his favour or against him. It was in these circumstances that the present suit was brought, and the Munsif found that the Defendants were, notwithstanding their petition, in possession during the whole of the period between the 26th Falgoun 1300 and the 27th Agrahayan 1303 and decreed accordingly. The Subordinate Judge however being of opinion that there was no satisfactory evidence to show that the Defendants were in possession after the 18th Kartick 1301 or that they in any way interfered with the Plaintiff's enjoyment of the property after that date modified the Munsif's decree by limiting the mesne profits to the time between the 26th Falgoun 1300 and the 18th Kartick 1301, and hence this appeal.

It was contended before us that the Subordinate Judge was in error in throwing upon the Plaintiff the onus of proving the duration of the Defendants' possession; that the mere fact that the Defendants had vacated the land without the intervention of the Court was not sufficient to exempt them from liability for subsequent mesne profits: that inasmuch as all the Defendants did not join in the petition of the 3rd November 1894, it was ineffective as regards those who did: that since all the Defendants were instrumental in ousting the Plaintiff from possession they were all liable for mesne profits for the whole of the period during which any one of them remained in possession: and lastly that the effect of the pendency of the first Defendant's appeal was to preclude him and his co Defendants from altering their position qua the possession of the land.

With respect to the first objection it appears to me that it is incumbent on the Plaintiff in a suit for mesne profits as in other cases to establish not only the existence of his right but also the extent of it. The first he does by proof that the Defendant has either personally or by his agents or dependants wrongfully deprived him of the enjoyment of the land which may be in question ; the second by proof of the duration of the wrongful possession, and it is for that period only, the period of actual or constructive possession by the Defendant, that damages are claimable. This is the general rule, and it appears to me that there is nothing in the circumstances of the present case to take it out of it. The Court below which had the evidence on both sides before it has held that the Plaintiff failed to establish that the Defendants were in possession or otherwise interfered with the Plaintiff's enjoyment after the 18th Kartick 1301, and that, I think, is conclusive of the appeal, for it is a finding which embraces all the Defendants and in the face of which it is impossible for us to hold that any one of them was in possession at a later date. The argument that it would be unjust to require the Plaintiff to be continually on the watch for the purpose of ascertaining when his property was vacated by a wrong-doer was disposed of in the case of Abbas v. Fassih-ud-din (1) and at all events the Defendants' petition of the 18th Kartick which has been treated by the Court below as a bona fide proceeding was sufficient to give notice to the Plaintiff in the present case that the Defendants were, as has in fact been found, no longer in possession. This petition does not, I may add, operate to my mind as a mere tender of possession but was intended to notify to the Plaintiff through the medium of the Court that the land had been already vacated. The fact that one of the Defendants was at that time prosecuting an appeal which questioned the Plaintiff's right to possession is not inconsistent with the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge, for it would have been open to him though not in possession, and even if the Plaintiff had been actually in possession to procure the reversal of the decree giving possession to the latter if it so happened that his own title was the better one. It is a consideration which, to my mind, is quite beside the true issue.

In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to deal with the more difficult question of what the rights of the parties would have been, if it had been found that the Defendants were jointly instrumental in dispossessing the Plaintiff and that some of them remained in possession after the 18th Kartick. The argument on this point, I may add, proceeded wholly on an assumption which is unsupported by anything in the findings of the Court below, viz., that in point of fact the Defendants were jointly concerned in the acts of dispossession.

It seems to me that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs. *

PRINSEP, J.—I am of the same opinion.

GYANNESSA v. MOBARAKANNESSA (1) distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd of January 1899, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sarun (Babu Behari Lal Mullick), dated 17th September 1898, modifying the decree of the Mun-

The facts of the case were as follows :—

The suit, out of which this appeal arose, was brought by the Plaintiff for a declaration of his title to certain property and for confirmation of his possession therein. The Plaintiff claimed the whole of the property under the following titles, namely, one-half by right of inheritance from his father, one-eighth by exchange from the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6, and three-eighths by right of inheritance from one Hanuman.

As to the one-eighth share the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 were the joint owners of Rudrapur and the Plaintiff alone was the owner of a share of Rampur. The Plaintiff instead of getting Rudrapur partitioned, which he was entitled to do, by an oral arrangement with those Defendants obtained Rudrapur in its entirety and gave his share of Rampur to the Defendants.

The Defendant No. 3 who alone contested the suit put the Plaintiff to the strict proof of his title.

The Court of first instance gave the Plaintiff a decree, which was on appeal modified by the Subordinate Judge who gave the Plaintiff a declaration of his right to  $\frac{2}{8}$ th of the property and a declaration of confirmation of possession to that extent.

The Defendant No. 3 preferred this appeal, and on his behalf it was urged, first, that the lower Court had no power to make a declaration in favour of Defendants Nos. 4 to 6, and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the exchange of the one-eighth share of the property said to have been effected between the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 was valid on the ground of the transaction having been really a partition.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 17th of September 1898.

The suit is brought by the Plaintiff for a declaration of his title to certain property and for confirmation of his possession therein. The Plaintiff claims the whole of the property under the following titles, namely, one-half by right of inheritance from his father, one-eighth by exchange from the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6, and three-eighths by right of inheritance from one Hanuman.

The contesting Defendant was the Defendant No. 3, who traversed the whole of the Plaintiff's case and put him to proof of his title as well as of his possession.

The Court of first instance gave the Plaintiff a decree.

The Subordinate Judge modified the first Court's decree and gave the Plaintiff a declaration of his right to  $\frac{2}{3}$  of the property and a declaration for confirmation of possession to that extent.

The Defendant No. 3, the only contesting Defendant in this Court, now appeals. On his behalf two pleas have been urged before us, namely, first, that the declaration in favour of the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 given by the lower Appellate Court is ultra vires, and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the exchange of the one-eighth share of the property said to have been effected between the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 is valid on the ground of the transaction having been really a partition.

We think there is no force in the first of these contentions, because although the lower Appellate Court has in its decree given to the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 a declaration that they are owners of  $\frac{2}{3}$  of the property, that declaration can really have no effect whatever against the present Appellant, the Defendant No. 3. The suit was brought by the Plaintiff, and what is operative in favour of the Plaintiff and against the Defendant No. 3 is the declaration which the Plaintiff has obtained. The declaration which the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 have obtained is superfluous and cannot injure the Defendant No. 3, because it is a well-known principle of law that there is no res judicata between co-Defendants.

With regard to the second of the contentions on behalf of the Appellant in this case we are of opinion that it is a good plea and must be given effect to. The Sub-Judge upon this point says : "The facts are that the Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 are the joint owners of Rudrapur, and the Plaintiff is the owner of Rampur. The Plaintiff had a right to get Rudrapur partitioned with Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and others. Instead of having Rudrapur partitioned, he got it in entirety and gave to the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 his share in Rampur. This was something like partition, and though it was an exchange, it was not the exchange as defined in sec. 118 as was held by the High Court in the case quoted above Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa (1) and required no registered writing for its completion." The Sub-Judge, therefore, admits in this passage in his judgment that the transaction was an exchange, yet he says it was not affected by sec. 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, because it was some thing like partition, and he justifies his conclusion to this effect by a reference to the case of Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa (1).

We have, however, examined this case and we think that it is a case of an entirely different nature from the present one. In that case "some of the owners possessing an undivided share in several properties took by arrangement a specific property in lieu of their shares in all the properties;" and it was held that this transaction was not an exchange within the meaning of sec. 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, but the completed transaction amounted to a partition which is not required by law to be effected by an instrument in writing." Now, it will be observed that in that case all the owners had shares in the properties affected by the transaction, that is to say, all had shares in the specific property given to the Plaintiff and all had shares in the property in which the Plaintiff gave up his share, taking the specific instead. But these are not the facts in the present case. In the present case the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 were joint owners of Rudrapur; but the Plaintiff alone was owner of Rampur and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 had no share in Rampur. Therefore the transaction was clearly an exchange and does not come within the purview of the case cited by the Sub-Judge and the transaction must be held invalid under sec. 118 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned pleader for the Respondents admits that the partition is not, strictly speaking, a partition, and that the case cited by the Sub-Judge is not, strictly speaking, in point, but he justifies the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon two grounds: (i) that there was no question on this point raised in the Court of first instance, and (ii) that his client is found by both the Courts to be in possession of the entire property. The first of these arguments has been dealt with by the Sub-Judge in his judgment. He says:—"On this point the lower Court said that because the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 did not come forward to deny the exchange and because the Plaintiff did not expressly deny it, therefore it was proved. But the lower Court omitted to consider whether this oral exchange, even if proved, was valid according to law, and, secondly, that the Defendant by his reservation in the written statement put the Plaintiff to strict proof of the exchange and its validity." The Defendant referred to in this passage is the Defendant No. 3 because he is the only contesting Defendant; and that being so, looking at his pleadings in his written statement, it was incumbent, as pointed out by the Sub-Judge that the Plaintiff should strictly prove his case. We are accordingly of opinion that the Plaintiff has failed to prove his title to the one-eighth share in question.

Then with regard to the second plea of the Respondent, no doubt it is perfectly case, should not the prosecution be under sec. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, if a prosecution is to lie at all? It has been held that sec. 211 and not sec. 182 applies to the case of a person bringing a false charge, In the matter of Russick Lal Mullick (2); and to the case of a person who makes a complaint to the Police of a cognizable offence, Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (1). In the present case a charge was made and no mere information was given to a police-officer. One of the charges, that of theft, was a cognizable offence.

2. Under the circumstances of this case, is a prosecution precluded by reason of one of the charges, namely, the using abusive language, having been found to be true? In the case of Mukti Bewa v. Jhotu Santra (3) it was held that where one of several charges jointly made, proved to be true, no compensation could be given to the accused for the charges which proved to be false. Is that principle to be held to include prosecutions under sec. 182 or sec. 211, where one of several charges is true and the others false?

Mr. O'Kinealy appeared for the Crown.

No one appeared for the accused.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

Two questions of law have been referred to us, under sec. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by one of the Presidency Magistrates of Calcutta. Before mentioning these questions, it is necessary to state how the case came into the Magistrate's Court. It appears that on the 6th of December last, one Giridhari Naik made a certain complaint at the Colutola Thana. That complaint was entered in a book kept for the purpose, and was investigated by the Police, who came to the conclusion that part of it was true and the other part false. The Inspector of the Thana, thereupon, prosecuted Giridhari Naik under sec. 182 of the Indian Penal Code, for giving false information, with intent to cause a public servant to use his lawful power to the injury of another person, namely, Bechoo Kurmi. This prosecution was started with the sanction of the Commissioner of Police.

The questions submitted to us are whether the prosecution should not have been under sec. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, if at all, and not under sec. 182; secondly, whether considering the fact that a portion of the complainant's story was found to be true, a charge either under sec. 211 or under sec. 182 of the Indian Penal Code, can be maintained against him.

So far as the first question is concerned, it seems to us that the matter is concluded by the Full Bench ruling in the case of Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (1), where it was substantially decided that when a false charge is made to the Police of a cognizable offence, the offence committed by the person making the false charge falls within the meaning of sec. 211 of the Indian Penal Code,

Regarding the second question, it is necessary to refer to the provisions of sec. 211, which runs as follows: "Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person institutes or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both, etc." In the present case, the complaint was made at the Thana with the object of setting the Police in motion. It seems to us difficult to lay down any precise rule or principle in respect of the question upon which we are called to express an opinion. It appears to us that each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and, what is to be looked to, is the nature of the charge. The section, undoubtedly, contemplates a charge, which is indivisible in its nature, and, therefore, what is to be considered is the nature of the complaint or charge made by the accused: In other words, whether the complaint is substantially true and what is false is a mere fringe to the complaint, or whether the substantial complaint is false and what is true is a mere fringe or in other words a mere accessory circumstance. This is a matter entirely for the consideration of the Court which has to determine the question. The case referred to by the learned Presidency Magistrate only declares that where a portion of the case is substantially true, it can hardly be said that it is frivolous or vexatious so as to entitle the Magistrate to award compensation. An analogy of that case may assist the Magistrate or the Judge in dealing with prosecutions under sec. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, to determine the character of the real charge preferred by the present accused under sec. 211, whether it is substantially true or whether it is substantially false.

(2) 7 C. L. R. 382 (1880).

With these remarks we direct that the reference be returned to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for communication to the Magistrate concerned.

[ON APPEAL FROM THE BENGAL HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	JOSEPHINE ROSE
LORD MACNAGHTEN.	HARRISS and
LORD ROBERTSON.	another, Plaintiffs,
SIR R. COUCH.	Appellants,
SIR FORD NORTH.	v.
1901.	EDWARD BROWN and
Heard, 1 & 11, May.	others, Defendants,
Judgment, 22, June.]	Respondents.

Will, construction of—Bengali Will—Terms of art—Words of direct and simple gift—Vesting of a bequest, words necessary for—Parjyapta haibek, meaning and effect of—Appointment of guardian with direction to make over gift on legatee attaining majority, effect of—Judges trying a cause consulting another Judge, propriety of—Ex parte hearing—Re-hearing, application by Respondent for re-hearing.

In construing Bengali Wills it must be remembered that there is no line of precedents attaching to Bengali terms meanings which make them understood as terms of art by Bengali lawyers. The only safe course is to give to the words their plain and ordinary meaning.

There are no particular words necessary to the vesting of a bequest or a legacy.

The words "parjyapta haibek" whether it means "descend to" or "devolve or go" or "shall become vested" has the effect of vesting the legacy at once.

Where there is a bequest in favour of a person simply it confers a vested interest and the appointment of an executor and guardian to that person while he is a minor, with a direction to make over the property to him on his attaining majority does not postpone the vesting of bequest.

Judges who have heard the arguments and who are responsible for the decision can hardly with propriety rest it on the authority of one who has not heard the arguments and is not responsible for the decision though he also may be a Judge of the High Court.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Calcutta High Court (Amcer Ali and Pratt, JJ.), dated the 10th June 1898, dismissing the suit which had been partially decreed by the Subordinate Judge of Barisal.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—One Thomas Paul D'Silva died on the 7th February 1857 leaving a Will in the Bengali language and character, dated the 5th January 1857, whereby he appointed Edward Brown, the Defendant No. 1, his executor. The testator left him surviving two nieces, Flora and Cecilia, Defendants Nos. 2 and 7. Flora was a minor and unmarried at the time of the testator's death, and Cecilia was of age and married to F. M. Proby. The clauses of the Will material to this report were the 11th and a portion of the 15th. The 11th clause was as follows:—

"After carrying out all the directions and paying the legacies specified in the above-mentioned paragraphs, all my ancestral and self-acquired moveable and immoveable properties that shall remain, as also the moveable and immoveable properties left by Domingo Manuel Anthony D'Silva and which I have inherited, shall descend in equal shares to the eldest son to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother John Emanuel D'Silva (namely) Mrs. Cecilia Proby and Miss Flora D'Silva who are now alive. The sons of those daughters (of my brother) shall, after their birth, remain under the control and guardianship of the Executor Saheb until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 (twenty-one) years, and whenever the eldest son of any of the ladies shall attain majority, the executor will make over his share to him to his satisfaction.* Of my two brother's daughters I give to the elder (namely) Cecilia Proby the Bharpasha Tofetbari dwelling-house inherited by me, and to the younger (namely) Miss Flora the house at Shibpore. But if, for the purposes of management of my properties, it should be necessary for the executor to stay in any one of the said two houses, there shall be raised no objection to his doing so. And as regards the ornaments and tables and almirahs and other articles that I have in my custody and under my control, I give the same to the said daughters (of my brother) in equal shares. The elder of them is married. Immediately upon my death, she will get her half share of the same from the executor. The younger one has not been married yet. She is under age. When she arrives at marriageable age, she will be given in marriage to a suitable person with the consent and according to the views of the executor. At the time of her marriage, the executor will give her the half share she is entitled to, and as regards the sum of Rs. 50 (fifty) a month which has been fixed for the maintenance of each of the said two daughters (of my brother), the elder of them will be paid her monthly allowance month after month. The younger shall be sent to school and her necessary expenses at the school will be met from her fixed monthly allowance. Finis."

The material portion of the 15th clause was to this effect:—"The terms of this vasiatnama (Will) will remain final, irrevocable and unaltered down to the death of the executor appointed by me, that is to say, down to the time when the eldest sons of my brother's daughters shall after birth attain majority."

By the said Will the testator further gave a monthly allowance of Rs. 50 each to the two nieces for their natural lives. Cecilia had a son born of her who lived beyond the age of 21 years and a moiety of the residuary estate was duly made over to him.

Flora married George Williams in 1878. She had an infant son born to her in August 1883 who lived only a few hours. The husband and wife subsequently lived apart. On 31st March 1882 Flora, in the belief that she was entitled to the moiety of the residuary estate as an heiress of the testator, sold one-half of the said moiety to three Mahomedan gentlemen who were the 3rd, 4th and 5th Defendants to the suit. The 3rd Defendant transferred his interests to Amar Chand Pal, the 6th Defendant. The 7th and 8th Defendants were Cecilia Proby and her husband.

On the 12th August 1892 Flora sold her remaining half share of the moiety and also her monthly allowance of Rs. 50 to Amrita Lal Banerji for Rs. 3,000.

On the same date George Williams assigned to the same individual for Rs. 4,000 any right he had as sole heir to his son to receive the moiety of the testator's estate.

Amrita Lal on the same day sold to A. E. Harriss, the Plaintiff, for Rs. 9,000 what he had acquired under the two last-mentioned deeds.

George Williams died soon after the assignments, and no further issue was born to him.

The present suit was thereupon instituted by A. E. Harriss (now represented by the Appellants) as assignee of the interests of Flora Williams and her husband George Williams against the executor of the Will of Thomas Paul D'Silva and the other Defendants hereinbefore mentioned praying, inter alia, (1) that the Will may be construed and the rights of the parties declared, (2) for a declaration that the moiety of the residuary estate vested in the deceased son of Flora Williams and after his death devolved on George Williams, and that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover this as purchaser and for possession of the same, and (3) for a declaration that he was entitled to the monthly allowance of Rs. 50 which had been given by the testator to Flora Williams from the 12th of August 1892.

The principal question in the suit was the right construction of the 11th clause of the Will.

The Plaintiff's case was that, on the birth of the infant son of Flora Williams, the moiety of the testator's estate vested in him and on his death passed to his father. The Defendants, on the other hand, contended that the moiety did not vest in the infant son and that there was an intestacy as to this moiety which passed equally to Flora and Cecilia.

A further question was raised by Flora Williams that her assignment to Amrita Lal Banerji had been fraudulently obtained and was not binding on her.

The Subordinate Judge held that under the Will the moiety did not vest in the infant son but was given to the eldest surviving son of Flora who attained the age of 21 years and that accordingly Amrita Lal obtained nothing by his purchase from George Williams, but he found that the assignment by Flora to Amrita Lal was binding on her and the latter was thereunder entitled to the monthly allowance. The material portion of the Subordinate Judge's judgment on the question of construction was as follows:—

"The learned counsel contended that paragraph 11 of the Will, on which the case mainly turned showed that the words "eldest son" alluded to therein meant the first-born son and that the estate vested in him as soon as he was born. The Will is in the Bengali language. There are words and expressions in paragraph 11 which, as it seems to me, indicate that the construction suggested cannot be accepted as correct. The passage I rely upon is:—'তখন যে কন্যার যে জ্যেষ্ঠ পুত্র বয়োপ্রাপ্ত হইবে তাহাকে বৃদ্ধি দিবেন।' The words 'যে জ্যেষ্ঠ পুত্র' coming after the words 'যে কন্যার' are in my opinion significant. They mean the eldest son living and not the first born eldest son. The words 'যে জ্যেষ্ঠ পুত্র' in the passage denote whoever may be the eldest son living to complete the age of 21 years. Again, there is not a single word in the Will to indicate that the estate bequeathed would vest in the son as soon as he would be born. On the contrary, the testator directed that the share bequeathed would be made over to him by the executor on his attaining and completing the age of 21 years and not before. The English translation [of the passage] quoted above from the judgment of the Honourable Court in this connection is:—"and whenever the eldest son of any of the daughters shall attain majority, the executor will make over charge of his share to him to his satisfaction." The word 'charge,' it seems to me, has not been well placed there. The expression 'তখন তাহার অংশ তাহাকে বৃদ্ধি দিবেন' means in this connection, that the executor shall make over his share (and not the charge of his share) to him to his satisfaction. If the word 'charge' be retained in the translation, it might mean that the estate would vest in the son on his birth and the executor would remain in charge of the same till he would attain majority, when merely the charge of the same would be made over to him. The testator intended, and to my mind in clear and explicit language, that the estate would remain in the hands of the executor, a trusted and valued friend of his who had rendered him sundry good offices as recited by him in the Will, till the sons of his nieces would complete their respective ages of 21, and then, and not before, the estate or shares of the estate would be made over to them, and that they would have, before the arrival of that time, to remain under his control and guardianship."

The Plaintiff appealed from the above judgment and the Defendant Flora Williams filed a cross-appeal. The High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) agreed with the Subordinate Judge on the construction of the Will but reversed his decision as to the monthly allowance. They did not find that the assignment was obtained by fraud but were of opinion that the assignment was an unconscionable bargain and was not binding on Flora Williams. On the question of construction their Lordships' judgment was as follows:—

JOSEPHINE ROSE HARRISS v. EDWARD BROWN.

"The Will is in the Bengali language and character and English documents cannot, in our opinion, give an indication of the meaning of the testator's words in this case. We must endeavour to gather his intention and meaning from his own document. The Subordinate Judge, who is a Bengali himself, and is fully conversant with the language in which D'Silva's Will is written, has held that the testator did not intend to give a vested interest to the eldest sons of his nieces immediately upon birth. The passage in the judgment dealing with this question is extremely important and is as follows:—(here their Lordships quoted the passage given above).

Considering that the learned Judge who has construed the document is, as we have already pointed out, himself a Bengali it would require very cogent reasons to induce us to place a different construction upon the clause in question. But after giving to it our own independent and careful consideration, we think the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is perfectly correct. (Then their Lordships stated the passage in Bengali in Roman character).

"We had this passage translated by one of the Court translators, who has chosen to translate the words pariyapta haibek by the English words "will become vested." We regret that, in our opinion, his version is entirely incorrect. The translation made by the sworn Interpreter on the Original Side of the Court accords, in the interpretation of the words pariyapta haibek with the translation in the Paper-book. The technical meaning conveyed by the English expressions "shall vest," "shall become vested," etc., are not, in our opinion, conveyed by the Bengali words pariyapta haibek, which really mean "shall devolve or go," and indicate the line of devolution. It will be observed that the testator goes on to add that the sons of his brother's daughters, not merely the eldest born, shall, after their birth, remain under the control and guardianship of the executor until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 years, showing thus that it was not the eldest or first-born who would take the property, but the eldest among them who shall attain the age of 21.

"The learned counsel for the Plaintiff contended, that the sons of those daughters who were to remain after their birth under their control and guardianship of the executor meant the two eldest sons in whom the estate had already vested. But the original "putragan" really refers to all their sons, the intention of the testator evidently being that during their minority his nieces' sons should be maintained out of his residuary estate, and only when the two eldest among them should attain majority were their respective shares to be made over to them. And this view is confirmed by what the testator declares in the 15th clause of his Will, that is, that until the majority of whoever might be the eldest at the time among the sons of his brother's daughters, the estate was to remain in the hands of the executor absolutely and for all purposes. In the construction of this clause, we have also had the advantage of the opinion of Mr. Justice Gupta, who is fully conversant with the Bengali language, which is his mother tongue, and who agrees with us in the meaning to be attached to the clause in question

"In our opinion therefore the view taken by the Subordinate Judge in this case is fully borne out by the language of the Will, namely, that the testator intended that the moiety should go to the eldest male child of his two nieces who attained the age of 21; and inasmuch as Flora Williams, though a widow, may still marry and give birth to a son, the residuary estate must, in accordance with the wishes of the testator, remain in the hands of the executor, as provided by Thomas Paul D'Silva."

The Plaintiff thereupon appealed to the Privy Council.

JOSEPHINE ROSE HARRISS v. EDWARD BROWN.

Mr. Asquith, K. C., and Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

1st May 1901—

Mr. Asquith argued, that the “eldest son” took a vested interest, there was no gift over. The gift was not made contingent. There cannot be two eldest sons. The High Court was wrong in coming to the conclusion that it meant the eldest son living and not the first-born son; whether the correct translation was “shall descend” or “shall devolve” or “shall go to,” the vesting was on the birth of the eldest son. It was an erroneous construction to say that only when the two eldest sons of his nieces should attain majority were their respective shares to vest. On the other point Mr. Mayne was to follow, but their Lordships intimated that they did not consider it necessary to hear Mr. Mayne.

The Respondents were not represented by counsel.

Their Lordships reserved their judgment.

On the 11th May—

Before Lords Macnaghten, Davey, Lindley and Sir Richard Couch and Sir Ford North, an application was made on behalf of one of the Respondents for the re-hearing of the appeal.

In the petition of the Respondent Cecilia Proby to the Right Hon'ble the Lords of the Judicial Committee it was stated that the record in the above appeal arrived in London in August 1890; that Appellants' solicitors entered appearance at the Privy Council Office on 6th November 1900. That by the mail which left Calcutta on 7th March last the Calcutta agents of Petitioner's London solicitors, Messrs T. L. Wilson & Co., wrote them stating that Petitioner's muktcar had called on them and had promised to remit funds to enable Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. to appear by counsel on her behalf at the hearing of the appeal.

That on receipt of such letter Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. wrote to Appellants' London solicitors on 26th March asking them to consent to the appeal standing out of the list for May into the June list.

That Appellants' solicitors declined to give the consent.

That Petitioner's solicitor then on 1st April cabled to their Calcutta agents, Messrs. Wilson and Chatterjee, “Hearing 3rd May.”

That the appeal was heard ex parte by their Lordships on the 1st May, and judgment was reserved. That on the 2nd May Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. received the following cable from Calcutta: “Appear for Respondent Cecilia.” That thereupon Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. wired back that appeal had been argued and judgment reserved.

That on 3rd May the said Calcutta agents cabled back instructions to make an application for a re-hearing and Petitioner prayed their Lordships to permit counsel to be heard on her behalf in support of the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon who appeared on behalf of the Petitioner pointed out that this appeal had come on for hearing within 9 months of the arrival of the record and referred to the facts mentioned in the petition.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—If the application is granted, you will have to pay the costs of the re-hearing in any event.

JOSEPHINE ROSE HARRISS v. EDWARD BROWN.

Are you agreeable to its standing over for you to consider that?

Mr. Arathoon.—Yes, that order will suit me very well. Mr. Mayne appears to oppose.

Mr. Mayne urged that it will establish a bad precedent, if Respondents were allowed after they find out that an appeal is going against them to make such applications, it was likely that they would frequently act in this manner. He further pointed out that leave to appeal was granted so far back as February 1899, and there was no reason shown for any indulgence in this case. Any way if the application is granted, then costs must be paid of the rehearing.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Their Lordships always regret having to hear an appeal ex parte.

After consideration Lord Macnaghten said the prayer will be refused with costs.

On the 22nd June—

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—Thomas Paul D'Silva, who died in February 1857, made a Will, dated the 5th January 1857, of which he appointed the Respondent, Edward Brown, sole executor.

After leaving various legacies, he disposed of the residue of his estate by clause 11, which is as follows:—

"After carrying out all the directions and paying the legacies specified in the above-mentioned paragraphs, all my ancestral and self-acquired moveable and immoveable properties that shall remain, as also the moveable and immoveable

properties left by Domingo Manuel Anthony D'Silva, and which I have inherited, shall descend in equal shares to the eldest son to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother John Emanuel D'Silva (namely) Mrs. Cecilia Proby and Miss Flora D'Silva, who are now alive. The sons of those daughters (of my brother) shall after their birth remain under the control and guardianship of the Executor Sahib until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 (twenty-one) years, and whenever the eldest son of any of the ladies shall attain majority, the executor will make over his share to him to his satisfaction. Of my two brother's daughters I give to the elder (namely) Cecilia Proby, the Bharpasha Tofelbari dwelling-house inherited by me, and to the younger (namely) Miss Flora, the house at Shibpore. But if for the purposes of management of my properties it should be necessary for the executor to stay in any one of the said two houses, there shall be raised no objection to his doing so.

"And as regards the ornaments and tables and almirahs and other articles that I have in my custody and under my control I give the same to the said daughters (of my brother) in equal shares.

"The elder of them is married. Immediately upon my death she will get her half share of the same from the executor. The younger one has not been married yet. She is under age. When she arrives at marriageable age she will be given in marriage to a suitable person with the consent and according to the views of the executor. At the time of her marriage the executor will give her the half share she is entitled to, and as regards the sum of Rs. 50 (fifty) a month, which has been fixed for the maintenance of each of the said two daughters (of my brother) the elder of them will be paid her monthly allowance month after month. The younger shall be sent to school, and her necessary expenses at the school will be met from her fixed monthly allowance. Finis."

The Will is in the Bengali language, and this is the translation, which has been transmitted by the High Court to the Registrar as an official translation of it.

Cecilia Proby had a son born on 17th May 1858 who lived to be 21, and to whom on his attaining his majority, one moiety of the estate was handed over by the executor.

Flora married George Williams in 1878. She had an infant son born on 23rd August 1883, who only lived a few hours. Subsequently, she and her husband had differences and lived apart. George Williams died after the assignments next spoken of, and no further issue was born to them.

On the 31st March 1892, Flora Williams sold half of her interest in the second moiety of the testator's estate to the third, fourth and fifth Respondents.

On the 12th August 1892, Flora Williams executed a deed to Amrita Lal Banerji by which after reciting her previous assignment to the above three Respondents she assigned to him for Rs. 3,000 the residue of her interest in the half-share of the residue of the testator's estate and also the allowance to her of Rs. 50 per month. On the same day George Williams executed a deed, by which, after reciting that upon the birth of the eldest son of Flora Williams by him the moiety of the residuary estate became as he was advised and believed vested in the said eldest son and upon his death he George Williams became entitled to it as his heir, he assigned to Amrita Lal Banerji all his interest in it for Rs. 4,000, and Amrita Lal Banerji on the same day assigned to Alfred Edmund Harriss all his interests under those two deeds for Rs. 9,000.

The suit in this appeal was brought by Harriss who has since died and the Appellants are his administrators against Brown the executor and the other Respondents. The plaint prayed that the Will might be interpreted and the rights of the respective parties declared by the Court, that it might be declared that the moiety of the remaining estate vested in a deceased son of Flora Williams, and after his death it devolved upon George Williams, and the Plaintiff was entitled to recover this as purchaser; that if the Court held that Flora Williams was entitled to anything then the Plaintiff was entitled to recover it as purchaser, that Flora Williams had sold her monthly allowance of Rs. 50 to the Plaintiff and he was entitled to it. The Respondent Brown by his written statement alleged that nothing vested in the infant son of Flora Williams and that there was an intestacy under which that moiety passed equally to Flora and Cecilia. Flora Williams in her written statement alleged that she had transferred half of her interest to the third, fourth and fifth Respondents and that the deed in favour of Amrita Lal Banerji was obtained from her by fraud.

The first question for consideration

is what is the construction of the Will as to the shares of the residue. The suit was first heard by the Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Backergunge on the 12th September 1896. In his judgment (Rec. 77) he states the paragraph of the Will in the same words as are stated in the translation in the transmitted record of proceedings with one exception. Instead of the words being as in that "the executor will make over his share to him" it is "the executor will make over charge of his share to him." Then after a paragraph which need not be noticed the Judge refers to the contention of the Plaintiff's counsel that the words "eldest son" meant the first-born son and that the estate vested in him as soon as he was born, and says that the Will is in the Bengali language and there are words and expressions in paragraph 11 which as it seems to him indicate that the construction suggested cannot be accepted as correct. The learned Judge then says: "The passage I rely upon is (quoting the Bengali original); the words mean the eldest son living and not the first born, the words in the passage denote whoever may be the eldest son living to complete the age of 21 years." Now an eldest son to be born is not the same as an eldest son who shall live to attain the age of 21 years and who may be a second, third or fourth born son. The correctness of the translation "eldest son to be born" does not appear to be questioned, but the words are held not to have their ordinary meaning apparently because they are followed by the direction to the executor to make over the share to the son on his attaining majority. Then he says

"Again there is not a single word in the Will to indicate that the estate bequeathed would vest in the son as soon as he would be born." This is a serious error. The words "descend to the eldest son," mean to go down to him, to belong to him in succession to the testator and refer to his birth. It will be seen that the High Court translates the Bengali by "devolve or go" which has the same meaning.

The learned Judge proceeds to say "On the contrary the testator directed that the share bequeathed would be made over to him by the executor on his attaining and completing the age of 21 years and not before." This is another error. The Will is not to the contrary when it says that the sons of the daughters shall after their birth remain under the control and guardianship of the executor until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 years and whenever the eldest son of one of them shall attain majority the executor will make over his share to him. It will be seen that the High Court also relies upon the direction to the executor to make over the share as showing that it was not to be vested until the attaining the age of 21 years. The Subordinate Judge had a translation with the word "charge" in it which it seemed to him ought not to be there and he says that "if the word 'charge' be retained it might mean that the estate would vest in the son on his birth and the executor would remain in charge of the same till he would attain majority when merely the charge of the same would be made over to him." This is really what is intended by the direction that the sons shall remain under the control and guardianship of the executor until they attain majority and whenever one of them does the executor "shall make over his share to him." The executor as guardian would have charge of the share vested in the son and these words merely point to the possession or enjoyment of it.

Upon the question whether the assignment by Flora Williams to Amrita Lal Banerji was valid and that effect should be given to the purchase by Harriss the Judge held that it should and accordingly made a decree in his favour only for a fourth share of the accumulations of the income of the half share bequeathed to the son of Flora Williams and for the monthly allowance of Rs. 50 and dismissed the suit as to the rest of the claim.

Harriss having died, the present Appellants as his representatives appealed to the High Court and Flora Williams made a cross-appeal on the ground that her sale to Amrita Lal Banerji was not binding on her. After noticing in its judgment that the Will is in the Bengali language and character and that the Subordinate Judge, who is a Bengali himself, was fully conversant with the language in which the Will is written, the High Court states the passage in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which their Lordships have commented upon. Then having stated in Roman characters the Bengali words of the material part of the clause, they say "we had this passage translated by one of the Court translators who has chosen to translate the words parjyapta haibek by the English words 'will become vested.'" We regret that in our opinion his version is entirely incorrect. The translation made by the sworn interpreter on the original side of the Court accords in the interpretation of the words parjyapta haibek with the translation in the Paper-book. The technical meaning conveyed by the English expressions "shall vest" "shall become vested" are not in our opinion conveyed by the Bengali words parjyapta haibek which really mean "shall devolve or go" and indicate the line of devolution." This appears to their Lordships to be a misconception of what words are necessary for the vesting of a bequest or legacy. A bequest in favour of a person simply (that is without any intimation of a desire to suspend or postpone its operation) confers a vested interest. It must be remembered that it is within a comparatively recent period that Indian testators have adopted English modes of creating interests in their estates. There is no line of precedents attaching to Bengali terms meanings which make them understood as terms of art by Bengali lawyers. It is not suggested in this case that the meaning affixed by the Courts to the testator's language is a sense required by a course of practice known to vakils. The only safe course is to give to his words their plain ordinary meaning. The official translation in the record, that by the sworn interpreter of the High Court, and that of the Judges agree regarding the critical words. They are words of direct and simple gift to the eldest son. The learned Judges appear to find in the appointment of an executor and guardian to the minors with a direction to make over the property to them on their attaining majority something contrary to an intention that the gift should vest in the object at once. It is new to their Lordships to hear that these ordinary directions have any effect in suspending the ownership of the property and it seems to them that such a ruling is calculated to disturb settled principles. The judgment continues—"It will be observed that the testator goes on to add that the sons of his brother's daughters, not merely the eldest born, shall after their birth remain under the control and guardianship of the executor until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 years showing that it was not the eldest or first-born who would take the property but the eldest among them who shall attain 21. The learned counsel for the Plaintiff contended that the sons of those daughters who were to remain after their birth under the control and guardianship of the executor meant the two eldest sons in whom the estate had already vested. But the original 'putragan' clearly refers to all their sons, the intention of the testator evidently being that during their minority his nieces' sons should be maintained out of his residuary estate and only when the two eldest among them should attain majority were their respective shares to be made over to them." In their Lordships' opinion the contention of the Plaintiff's counsel is right. The words "the sons of those daughters" following immediately the bequest plainly refer to the sons to whom it is made. The 15th clause of the Will to which the learned Judges refer as confirming their opinion is consistent with the contention of counsel and their Lordships do not see any reason for the opinion that all the sons were during their minority to be maintained out of the residuary estate. The result is that their Lordships are of opinion that on the birth of the son of Flora Williams the half share in dispute became vested in him and on his death it passed to his father as his heir. The learned Judges say that in the construction of the clause they have had the advantage of the opinion of Mr. Justice Gupta who is fully conversant with the Bengali language which is his mother tongue and who agrees with them in the meaning to be attached to it. Their Lordships remark upon this that Judges who have heard the arguments and who are responsible for the decision can hardly with propriety rest it on the authority of one who has not heard the arguments and is not responsible for the decision though he also may be a Judge of the High Court. It is true that this case is a peculiar one in which Judges have to interpret a language which seems to be imperfectly known to themselves and to be familiar to a colleague. But then their Lordships are not informed how Mr. Justice Gupta translates the Bengali words. It is only said that he agrees with the meaning which the other learned Judges below attach to the clause in question. He does not appear to have thrown any new light on the rendering of the words into English. It must be taken that on this point he agrees with his colleagues of the High Court and with their sworn interpreter and with the official translation in the record. If so, the agreement with the decision must be on account of that further reasoning which has led the Courts below to inferences from which their Lordships dissent.

JOSEPHINE ROSE HARRISS v. EDWARD BROWN.

The learned Judges say that, as the Subordinate Judge is a Bengali, it would require very cogent reasons to induce them to place a different construction on the clause in question. Certainly, it is impossible to be too careful in ascertaining the exact effect of the Bengali terms. But that has been done after an unusual amount of testing, and there is no disagreement about it. The decision of both lower Courts rests on principles of construction common alike to English and Indian documents; and that is the point on which their Lordships differ from them.

The second question is whether the deed of sale to Amrita Lal Banerji by Flora Williams of the 12th August 1892 was valid, she having in her written statement alleged that it was fraudulently obtained. The Subordinate Judge held that the fraud was not proved and that Harriss's purchase from Amrita Lal Banerji "must stand and be given effect to." The High Court in the appeal to it did not decide this question but considering the amount of the accumulations which Flora Williams would be entitled to receive upon their construction of the Will as well as the monthly allowance of Rs. 50 they were of opinion that the bargain was of an unconscionable character and could not be sustained. According to their Lordships' construction of the Will Amrita Lal Banerji obtained only the monthly allowance by his purchase and there is no ground for holding that this was an unconscionable bargain.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to reverse the decrees of both the lower Courts and to make a decree declaring that a moiety of the residuary estate was vested in the deceased son of Flora Williams and at his death it devolved upon George Williams and the Appellants are entitled to it as representing Harriss the purchaser. And ordering that an account of the estate since the death of the testator be taken and that any money found due from the Respondent Brown on adjustment of the account shall be paid to the Appellants. Also declaring that Flora Williams sold her monthly allowance of Rs. 50 and that the Appellants are entitled to it and ordering all the money that is due for it from the 12th August 1892 with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum to be paid to them.

Their Lordships think that the Appellants and the executor Edward Brown are entitled to take their costs of all the proceedings in India out of the portion of the estate of Thomas Paul D'Silva in the hands of the executor but that all other parties should bear their own costs of those proceedings and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The Appellants will likewise have their costs of this appeal from the same source.

Their Lordships have already directed that the Appellants' costs of opposing the petition of the Respondent Cecilia Proby to be heard after the hearing had concluded shall be paid by her.

Appeal allowed with directions as to costs of the various parties and an account ordered to be taken.

Judgment,

RAPHAEL ROBINSON,

Respondent,

Plaintiff.

Private international law—Foreign Court—Foreign judgment—Suit on a foreign judgment to recover money due for board, lodging and tuition—Contract, breach of, within jurisdiction, if necessary—Jurisdiction of English Court over British subjects residing in British India—Notice of action—Jurisdiction of British Indian Court to go into merits of the action in the English Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 2, 13, Expl. 6—Order XI, Rule 1 (e) under the Judicature Act—Residence in England if necessary to fix liability on a foreign judgment—Interest on money decreed, when no provision for such is made in foreign judgment, if recoverable—Order XLII, Rule 16—1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, sec. 17—Indian Interest Act (XXXII of 1839).

As a general rule a Court can exercise jurisdiction over a foreigner only if he is resident within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction. Natives of British India, though foreigners, owe allegiance to the common sovereign of England and British India and are subject to the supreme legislative authority in the British Empire. If therefore the supreme legislature in the British Empire authorises an English Court in any class of cases to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner by reason of the cause of action arising within its jurisdiction and that foreigner is a native of British India, he cannot treat the judgment passed as a nullity merely because he did not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. Order XI, Rule 1 (e) under the English Judicature Act constitutes a legislative Act of the sovereign power regulating the jurisdiction in the case of a British subject resident in British India and outside the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the English Courts and gives the English Courts jurisdiction over such British subjects in a case which falls within the order. But it is open to a Defendant to show that this is not so and that the English Court had in fact no jurisdiction.

GURDYAL SINGH v. RAJA OF FARIDKOT (1) followed and explained.

In a suit based on a foreign judgment, the Plaintiff cannot recover more than appears on the face of the judgment and when such judgment is silent as to interest, he cannot make the Defendant liable for interest on the amount of the English judgment, the English statutes as to judgments carrying interests (Order 42, Rule 16, and 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, sec. 17) not applying to India.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1899, against the decree of Babu Chandi Charan Sen, 1st Sub-Judge of Backergunge, dated the 10th of July 1899.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The Plaintiff, Raphael Robinson, as the representative of one Herman Robinson, brought the present suit, out of which this appeal arose, on a foreign judgment—an ex parte judgment of the Queen's

SYED MOAZIM HOSSEIN KHAN BAHADUR v. RAPHAEL ROBINSON.

Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of England—for an amount equal to Rs. 6,551 and odd against Syed Moazim Hossein Khan Bahadur and his son Syed Mutahar Hossein. The foreign judgment upon which the suit was brought said nothing about interest. The claim in the English Court was for board, lodging and tuition of Syed Mutahar Hossein, the son. In his defence the father pleaded that he was not served with the writ or any copy thereof in the English action, that he had never been within the jurisdiction of the English Court, that he never resided either permanently or temporarily within the jurisdiction of the English Court, and that the judgment was made without jurisdiction and was inoperative against him. His son's defence was substantially the same, though he admitted he had been in England for upwards of two years but had left some time before the institution of the suit. Both Defendants pleaded that, on the merits, the judgment in the English Court ought not to have been passed and that it was a fraudulent action. The father further said that he had no dealings with Herman Robinson and that he never undertook to pay the boarding and lodging expenses of his son with the latter. It was further contended that neither of the Defendants had personal notice of the action in England and that they did not appear in the English action, nor submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court; and that the claim for interest was untenable.

Mr. Henderson, with him Babus Basanta Kamar Bose and Jnanendra Mohun Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe and Babu Prosunno Gopal Roy for the Respondent.

Mr. Henderson.—The cases of the first and second Defendants stand on a different footing. The evidence of the father shows that he received no notice of the suit in England; and if so, he is not bound. Apart from this there was no jurisdiction as against him as he had never been a resident in England or subject to the English Courts. His son did at one time reside in England, but he had left that country before the suit in which the judgment sued upon was passed was instituted, and therefore there was no jurisdiction in his case also. Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (1). The lower Court has distinguished this from the case cited holding that British India is not an independent country and that natives of British India do owe allegiance and obedience to the British Sovereign. But the Privy Council in referring to the independence of the country and allegiance of the party sued were merely describing the state of things which existed in that particular case and did not intend to lay down a different rule for a case such as the present. So in Nalla Karuppa Settiar v. Mahomed Ibura Saheb (9), it was held that the Court at Kandy in Ceylon had no jurisdiction over the Defendant. In any case the Defendants are not entitled to interest.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose, (on the same side).—The matter must be determined by reference to the terms of Order XI of the Judicature Acts which authorises service outside the jurisdiction. Here the case is not within the of the order for there was no breach of contract within the jurisdiction of the English Courts.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe (for the Respondent).—The service has been duly proved. It is clear upon the authorities that the merits of the case cannot be examined. Want of jurisdiction may no doubt be shown, but there is a presumption of jurisdiction which has not been removed. This is not a case of simple but of assumed jurisdiction over the parties: Piggott's Foreign Judgments, 2nd Ed., 129, 132—133—136, 145, 164. Service out of the jurisdiction is an express statutory enlargement of the jurisdiction of the English Courts. Piggott's Service out of the Jurisdiction i, xlii, xlv, xlix, lvii. Though legislation is presumably territorial, Parliament has power to extend the operation of a statute to the whole or any part of the British Empire, Id. lviii—lx, lxiii. That has been done in the case of Order XI, which has operation over British subjects in British India. Even if it be held that it has not operation proprio vigore then inasmuch as the British Legislature has thought it proper to confer jurisdiction on English Courts over non-residents, it is not for the Courts of a Dependency to say that such a rule is contrary to justice, convenience or the principles of private international law, and such Courts should give effect to the judgment and recognition to the principles upon which the jurisdiction to issue service out of the jurisdiction is based. Turnbull v. Walker (10), Cookney v. Anderson (11), Whaley v. Busfeld (4).

The case is within Order XI. As regards the son there was an actual breach of contract within the jurisdiction of the English Courts. As regards the father the case was apparently one of contract by correspondence, and the place where the answer ceased to be under the sender's control was the place where the contract was made. Piggott's Foreign Judgments, Additional Notes, 1886, p. 7. As to interest, see 1 and 2 Vic., Cap. 110.

Mr. Henderson in reply. The citations from Piggott on Foreign Judgments and Service out of the Jurisdiction whilst recommending the views urged by the Respondents show that the case-law has not gone the length of actually deciding in favour of the propositions submitted by them. In any event assuming the correctness of those propositions the Respondent has not brought himself within the terms of Order XI upon which the jurisdiction is said to be based.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The Plaintiff in this suit is the legal personal representative of one Herman Robinson, and the Defendants are father and son, viz., Syed Moazim Hossein Khan Bahadur, and Syed Mutahar Hossein, Barrister-at-law. I shall refer to them as the father and the son. The suit is on a foreign judgment, viz., on an ex parte judgment of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of England, for an amount equivalent to 6,551 rupees and odd, a judgment recovered against both the Defendants. In his defence the father pleaded that he was not served with the writ or any copy thereof in the English action, that he had never been within the jurisdiction of the English Court, and that the judgment was made without jurisdiction, and was inoperative as against him. His son's defence was substantially the same, though he admitted he had been in England for upwards of two years, but had left some time before the date of the institution of the suit. Both Defendants pleaded that, on the merits, the judgment in the English Court ought not to have been passed, and that it was a fraudulent action. Upon this latter point I may remark at once that, even if it were competent for the Defendants to go into the merits of the suit on which the English judgment was based, which I do not think they can properly do, the son has not tendered himself as a witness in this case, nor put in any evidence whilst the father does not go beyond saying that he had had no dealings with Herman Robinson, and that he never undertook to pay the boarding and lodging expenses of his son with the latter. The claim in the English Court was apparently for board, lodging and tuition. Neither of the Defendants appeared in the English action, or submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court. Upon the question of whether or not the Defendants were duly served, and had notice of the English action, the son has not ventured to go into the box and challenge the statement as to service, told by the witness Nibaran Chandra Chattopadhyaya, whilst the father only ventures to say that he does not recollect that any writ from England was served upon him. On the evidence, it must be taken that both Defendants were duly served. Assuming there was jurisdiction in the English Court, and that it was properly exercised, it has not been disputed that, as a general principle, the Court in which the suit on the foreign judgment is brought cannot properly go into the merits of the action which resulted in the foreign judgment sued upon, but the Appellants contend that by virtue of the last words of explanation 6 of sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which explanation runs as follows: "Where a foreign judgment is relied on, the production of the judgment duly authenticated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appear on the record; but such presumption may be removed by proving the want of jurisdiction," they are entitled to rebut the presumption by proving the want of jurisdiction of the English Court. It is said for the Appellants that the jurisdiction of the English Court was based entirely upon the view that the case fell within Order XI of 1883, Rule 1, sub-sec. (e), and the Defendants say they are entitled to show that that was not so, and consequently that there was a want of jurisdiction in the English Court. I think they are entitled to show this. The father says he has substantiated this by his evidence, that he never wrote to Herman Robinson and had no dealings with him, and in this suit that evidence is uncontradicted, and may, I think, be relied upon. This argument, however, does not assist the son, for he has put in no evidence. I now pass to the important question of whether the English Court had jurisdiction over the Defendants, and upon this point I refer to the case of Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (1) where the law on the subject was very carefully considered. That no doubt was the case of a judgment obtained in a foreign country, but against one who was not a subject of that country. In the present case the English Court is a "foreign Court" within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the judgment is a foreign judgment. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say:—"Under these circumstances, there was, in their Lordships' opinion, nothing to take this case out of the general rule, that the Plaintiff must sue in the Court to which the Defendant is subject at the time of suit (actio sequitur forum rei") which is rightly stated by Sir Robert Phillimore (International Law, Vol. 4, sec. 891) "to lie at the root of all international, and of most domestic, jurisprudence on this matter. All jurisdiction is properly territorial and extra territorium jus dicenti, impune non paretur." Territorial jurisdiction attaches (with special exceptions) upon all persons either permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, while they are within it; but it does not follow them after they have withdrawn from it, and when they are living in another independent country.....As between different provinces under one sovereignty (e.g., under the Roman Empire) the legislation of the sovereign may distribute and regulate jurisdiction; but no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction which any Foreign Court ought to recognise against foreigners, who owe no allegiance or obedience to the power which so legislates.

"In a personal action to which none of these causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced in absentem by a Foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has not in any way submitted himself, is by International law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it, and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation except (when authorized by special local legislation) in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced.

"These are doctrines laid down by all the leading authorities on International law; among others, by Story (Conflict of Laws, 2nd edition, secs. 546, 549, 553, 554, 556, 586) and by Chancellor Kent (Commentaries, Vol. I, p. 284, note (c), 10th edition), and no exception is made to them in favour of the exercise of jurisdiction against a defendant not otherwise subject to it by the Courts of the country in which the cause of action arose, or (in cases of contract) by the Courts of the locus solutionis. In those cases, as well as all others, when the action is personal, the Courts of the country in which a defendant resides have power, and they ought to be resorted to, to do justice." I have cited from this judgment at length, as it was much relied upon by the Appellants. Here the father was never permanently or even temporarily resident within the territorial jurisdiction of England, and consequently, had he been a foreigner, that jurisdiction would not have attached upon him. But then arises the question whether the principles laid down in the Privy Council case from which I have quoted, apply to the case of an Indian who is a subject of the Sovereign both of England and of British India, or merely to the cases of foreigners who owe no allegiance or obedience to the power, the Courts of which have passed the judgment sued upon.

In Dicey's "Conflict of Laws," p. 369, the following rule is laid down; "in an action in personam in respect of any cause of action the Courts of a Foreign country have jurisdiction."

Case 2.—"When the defendant is at the time of the judgment in the action, a subject of the Sovereign of such country," and reference is made to Schibsby v. Westenholz (2) and Rousillon v. Rousillon (3). In the former case the Court said: "We think some things are quite clear on principle. If the defendants had been, at the time of the judgment, subjects of the country where judgment is sought to be enforced against them, we think that its laws would have bound them." In the present case the Defendants were, at the time of the judgment, subjects of the sovereign both of England and of British India, though at the date of the judgment they were not within the territorial jurisdiction of England: they were resident in British India. It is, however, contended for the Plaintiff that quod the circumstances of this case, there exists territorial legislation of the sovereign power giving the English Courts jurisdiction over British subjects wherever they may be, and placing them under the jurisdiction of the English Courts, or at least making it compulsory upon them to come in and submit to that jurisdiction. Upon this point I may perhaps refer to the observations of the late Lord Justice Cotton who says, in the case of Whaley v. Busfeld (4) "service out of the jurisdiction is an interference with the ordinary course of the law, for generally, Courts exercise jurisdiction only over persons who are within the territorial limits of their jurisdiction. If an Act of Parliament gives them jurisdiction over British subjects wherever they may be, such jurisdiction is valid, but apart from Statute, a Court has no power to exercise jurisdiction over any one beyond its limits." It is contended for the Plaintiff that Order XI of 1883, Rule 1, sub-sec. (c) which has a statutory force and which order was referred to by Lord Justice Fry in the case I have just cited as "a complete code governing service out of the jurisdiction"—(I am referring to the English Courts' orders)—gives the English Courts jurisdiction over subjects of the British Crown wherever they may be. The Appellants say that the object of service under that order is not to give jurisdiction over the party served, but only to give him notice of a proceeding affecting his rights, so as to give him an opportunity of coming in to defend them, The Credits Germanische, Limited v. Van Weede (5). This no doubt is so, in the case of a foreigner, but is it so in the case of a subject of the British Crown resident outside the territorial jurisdiction of England, but in a Dependency of the British Crown? Though no doubt, British India has its own Legislative Councils, the subjects of the British Crown there are subject to the Supreme Legislative authority of the Imperial Parliament, and Order XI Rule 1, sub-sec. (e) would appear to be general in its sphere of operation excepting only Scotland and Ireland.

In my opinion the order in question constitutes a Legislative Act of the Sovereign power regulating the jurisdiction in the case of a British subject resident in British India, and outside the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the English Courts, and gives the English Courts jurisdiction over such British subjects, assuming that the particular case falls within the order. I think, however, that it was open to the Defendants to show, and that the father has shown, that the action in the English Court was not founded, as it purported to be, upon any breach or alleged breach within the jurisdiction of the English Court of any contract made by him, which was to be performed within such jurisdiction, and consequently that the English Court had no jurisdiction in the matter or to order service out of its jurisdiction. The present suit therefore must fail as against the father, and the suit as against him be dismissed with costs, and he must have the costs of the appeal.

The case of the son is different. No evidence has been put in on his behalf to rebut the presumption that the English Court was one of competent jurisdiction, as was done by the father, and that being so, I think, upon the grounds which I have stated, that he is liable. I do not think, however, that he is liable for interest on the amount of the English judgment: the Plaintiff cannot, I think, recover more than appears on the face of the judgment sued upon. The English Statute as to judgments carrying interest does not apply to India, nor does the Indian Statute as to interest assist the Plaintiff. The decree against the son must be modified to that extent. That however is a very small matter, and should not affect the costs of the appeal. The decree, therefore, subject to such modification, must stand as against him, and his appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BANERJEE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff-Respondent against the Appellants. The suit is based on a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England, which is a Foreign judgment within the meaning of the term as defined in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the main question for determination in this appeal is whether that judgment is binding on the Appellants.

It is contended for the Defendants-Appellants, first, that the judgment upon which the suit is based is not binding on the Defendants as neither of them resided within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court when the suit was brought; secondly, that it is not binding on the Defendants as neither of them had personal notice of the suit; thirdly, that it is not binding on the Defendants as the Court which passed it had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit; and, fourthly, that the claim for interest is untenable.

In support of the first contention, it is argued that residence, permanent or temporary, within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, is necessary to make a Defendant, who is a foreigner, subject to its jurisdiction; and Story's Conflict of Laws, secs. 539 and 546, Phillimore's International Law, Vol. IV, sec. dcccxc, and Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (1) are relied upon. Upon principle as well as upon authority, it is no doubt true, as a general rule, that a Court can exercise jurisdiction over a foreigner only if he is resident within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction. But the reason of the rule is, as stated by Story in his Conflict of Laws, (sec. 539) that "no Sovereignty can extend its process beyond its own territorial limits to subject either persons or property to its judicial decisions;" and the same reason is given by the Privy Council in Gurdyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (1) in the following passages of their Lordships' judgment: "As between different provinces under one Sovereignty (e.g., under the Roman Empire) the legislation of the sovereign may distribute and regulate jurisdiction; but no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction which any Foreign Court ought to recognise against foreigners who owe no allegiance or obedience to the power which so legislates." Now can it be said that the same reason holds good when the foreigner is a native of British India, and the Court which passed the judgment in question was the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England? Though the Defendants here are foreigners they owe allegiance to the common sovereign of England and British India, and are subject to the supreme Legislative authority in the British Empire. It is true that India has a separate Legislature, and an Act of Parliament does not apply to India unless India is expressly included in its operation; but that is based upon convenience of legislation and not upon any want of authority in the Parliament to legislate for India. If, therefore, the Supreme Legislature in the British Empire authorises an English Court in any class of cases to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner by reason of the cause of action arising within its jurisdiction (as is the case where Order XI, Rule 1 (e) under the Judicature Acts applies), and the foreigner is a native of British India, he cannot treat the judgment passed as a nullity, merely because he did not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. The first contention of the Appellants must, therefore, in my opinion fail.

The second contention might upon the authorities, see Sreehuree v. Gopal Chunder (6), Edulji v. Manekji (7), Bangarusami v. Balasubramanian (8) and Rousillon v. Rousillon (3) have succeeded, if it had been shown that the Defendants had no personal notice of the suit in the English Court. But upon the evidence I do not think that that has been made out; and I agree with the Court below in holding that they had notice of the suit. The second contention therefore must also fail.

It remains now to consider the third contention of the Appellants. By sec. 13,

SYED MOAZIM HOSSEIN KHAN BAHADUR v. RAPHAEL ROBINSON.

Explanation VI of our Code of Civil Procedure the Foreign judgment produced is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent jurisdiction, but the presumption may be removed by proving want of jurisdiction; and in my opinion that has been done so far as Defendant No. 1 is concerned. For the only basis of the jurisdiction of the English Court in this case was that under Order XI, Rule 1 (e), that is, by reason of the breach of contract upon which the suit was founded having occurred within the jurisdiction of that Court; and the evidence of Defendant No. 1 on this point, which stands un rebutted and which I see no reason to disbelieve, shews that he never entered into any contract with the Plaintiff and so there never could have been any breach of contract by him within the jurisdiction of the English Court. I may add that in saying this I am not going into the merits of the case but am only considering the evidence which it is open to the Defendants under Explanation VI of sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure to adduce to shew that the Foreign Court had no jurisdiction to pass the judgment in question.

The case of Defendant No. 2, however, stands on a different footing. There is no evidence adduced on his behalf on this point, and the judgment of the English Court which is presumptive evidence in favour of that Court having jurisdiction, stands un rebutted in his case. The fourth contention in appeal, namely, that relating to interest, is, I think, well-founded. The foreign judgment on which the suit is based says nothing about interest; and neither Order XLII, Rule 16 nor Statute 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, sec. 17 on which the claim for interest seems to be based, is applicable to India; nor does the case come within the scope of Act XXXII of 1839.

The result then is that this appeal will be allowed and the decree of the Court below set aside with costs as regards Defendant No. 1, but as regards Defendant No. 2, the appeal will be dismissed and the decree of the lower Court affirmed with costs, subject to the modification indicated above, namely, that the claim for interest is disallowed.

(PER TATEOR, J.)—It is doubtful whether the High Court has the power under sec. 526 of the Code to transfer cases which do not relate to matters which may strictly be described as criminal as relating to a crime or offence under the law. The High Court has such power under sec. 29 of the Letters Patent, where the expression "criminal case" appears without the distinction which apparently exists in the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of cases tried by a Criminal Court as opposed to civil cases.

Meaning of "case" and "criminal case" as used in the Code discussed.

This was a rule issued on the 23rd of May 1901, against the proceedings instituted against the Petitioner by the District Magistrate of Maldah on the 25th of April 1901.

The facts of the case and the arguments addressed to the Court appear from the judgment of Ghosh, J. For arguments refer to the notes: s. c. 5 C. W. N. cclv.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Sarat Chandra Khan for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General, Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti and Joygopal Ghose for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

GHOSH, J.—This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Maldah to show cause why, having regard to the statements made in paras. 3 and 4 of the affidavit of one Baman Chandra Chowdhury, affirmed on the 23rd May 1901, and those contained in para. 12 of the verified petition presented to this Court, as also the statements made by the Petitioner to the Magistrate himself in a petition dated the 10th May, the case under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, mentioned in the said petition to this Court, and now pending in the file of the said District Magistrate, should not be transferred to Rajshahye or some other district.

The District Magistrate has, through a Deputy Magistrate, submitted an explanation, in which, among other matters, he raises the question whether this Court has power, under sec. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, to transfer a case under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to some other Magistrate. And he has relied upon the case of Pandurang Govind Pujari (1) decided by the Bombay High Court.

The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the opposite party has also raised before us the same question ; and he has contended that, in the circumstances of the case, it is not expedient to transfer the proceedings from Maddah to some other Magistracy.

I propose, in the first instance, to discuss the question whether, under sec. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has the power to make the transfer, and, if it has not such power, whether it can do so under the Charter Act.

It will be observed, on a reference to sec. 435 of the Code, that though the High Court may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed by such inferior Court, yet proceedings under Ch. XII which contains among others sec. 145, are not proceedings within the meaning of the section ; and it may, therefore, be doubted whether, under sec. 439 of the Code, this Court is possessed of revisional powers in regard to a proceeding under sec. 145. But it has been held in several cases that this Court under the powers of general superintendence vested in it by sec. 15 of the Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict. Ch. 104, has the power of interfering with an order under that section, if it be made without jurisdiction or it is an illegality affecting jurisdiction, see Ansh Mollah and others v. Ejakar Uddi Mollah and ors. (2). And the question here arises, whether this Court, being possessed of revisional powers, though not under Ch. XXXII of the Code, which deals with reference to, and revision by, the High Court, has not also the power to transfer a proceeding under sec. 145 from one Court to another, when the ends of justice require it.

Sec. 526 of the Code begins by saying "whenever it is made to appear to the High Court—(a) that a fair and impartial enquiry or trial cannot be had in any Criminal Court subordinate thereto, or (b) that some question of law of unusual difficulty is likely to arise, or (c) that a view of the place in or near which any offence has been committed may be required for the satisfactory enquiry into or trial of the same, or (d) that an order under this section will tend to the general convenience of the parties or witnesses, or (e) that such an order is expedient for the ends of justice or is required by any provision of this Code."

And it then says : "It may order (i) that any offence be inquired into or tried by any Court not empowered under secs. 177 to 184 (both inclusive), but in other respects competent to inquire into or try such offence ; (ii) that any particular criminal case or appeal or class of such cases or appeals be transferred from a Criminal Court subordinate to its authority to any other such Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction ; (iii) that any particular criminal case or appeal be transferred to and tried before itself, or (iv) that an accused person be committed for trial to itself or to a Court of Session."

Two important questions here arise : first, whether an investigation in a case under sec. 145 is not an "enquiry" within the meaning of clause (a), and second, whether the Court of a Magistrate, when it deals with a case under sec. 145 is not a "Criminal Court" within the meaning of the section. That it is an "inquiry" within the meaning of the Code is perfectly clear from sec. 4, clause (k), which says "inquiry includes every inquiry other than a trial conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court;" and so it has been held in the case of Satish Chandra Panday v. Rajendra Nath Bagchi (3) where a question was raised whether a District Magistrate or a Sub-divisional Magistrate is entitled to transfer or withdraw a case under sec. 145 from the file of a Magistrate subordinate to him; and it was held that such power did exist.

As to the other question, namely, whether the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of a case under sec. 145 is a "Criminal Court," it seems to me that it is a Criminal Court within the meaning of the Code. It is a Court which is constituted under sec. 6 of the Act, and bound to administer the law relating to Criminal Procedure as prescribed by the Code. If, therefore, a proceeding under sec. 145 is an enquiry in a Criminal Court as indicated in the first part of sec. 526, let us consider, whether it is a criminal case within the meaning of the second part of the section. No doubt the first clause in that part of the section refers to an "offence," but the second clause is more general, and it seems to me that, if the expression "particular criminal case or appeal" or "class of such cases or appeals" refers only to offences, nothing could be simpler for the Legislature than to have framed it, so that there could be no doubt about it. They might have said that "the inquiry into or trial of any particular offence, or the appeal in such case, or class of such cases or appeals, be transferred, etc., etc.;" but instead of that, they use a different phraseology. Reference was, however, made in the course of the argument to the fact that inasmuch as the word "criminal" governs the word case, as also the word appeal, both the proceedings must arise out of some offence committed, and that the use of the expression "accused person" in clause (iv) bears out that position. No doubt, the word "criminal" governs both the case and the appeal, but I am not prepared to say that it follows from this that the "criminal case" referred to must have reference to some offence committed, nor do I think that the expression "accused person" supports that contention. These words, with reference to some other sections of the Code (secs. 340, 342 and 437) have received a wider interpretation, namely, "a person over whom a Magistrate is exercising jurisdiction," see Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (4), Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna (5), Queen-Empress v. Mutasaddi (6).

Upon reference to Act IV of 1840, secs. 2 and 4, it will be found that, in the event of a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace concerning any property, the Magistrate was authorised to inquire which party was in possession, when the dispute arose and was empowered to put such party into possession, and to maintain him in possession, until the rights of the parties were determined by a competent Court; and, further, that where a person had been forcibly dispossessed of any property, the Magistrate was authorised to restore that party into possession and maintain him in such possession until the right to possession was determined by a competent Court. This Act, however, was repealed by Act XVII of 1862, which was in turn repealed by Act X of 1872. In the meantime, by Act XIV of 1859, sec. 15, it was provided that a suit would lie in the Civil Court for recovery of possession of any immovable property, if a person be dispossessed otherwise than by due course of law, if such suit were brought within six months from the dispossession. And we also find that, by sec. 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861, the Magistrate was empowered to determine, in the case of a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace concerning any land, water or fishery, which party was in possession of the subject-matter of dispute. Ever since then, the Magistrate has continued to exercise jurisdiction in a case like this, when there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace; and the Civil Court has also continued to exercise the jurisdiction which was vested in it by sec. 15, Act XIV of 1859 (substituted by sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act). The jurisdiction which under Act IV of 1840, was vested in the Magistrate, seems now to be divided between the Criminal Court and the Civil Court; and while the Civil Court under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is authorised to restore a party into possession, if he has within the last six months been dispossessed without his consent, otherwise than by due course of law, the Criminal Court, in the event of an imminent danger of a breach of the peace resulting from a dispute between the parties, can only maintain a person in possession, if he is found to be in such possession upon the date of the institution of a proceeding under sec. 145, or, if he was in possession within two months antecedent to that date. But the foundation of a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Code, as already indicated, is the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace; and when such a dispute is not shown to exist, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action. In this view of the matter, the proceeding under sec. 145 partakes of the character of a criminal case and, though that section lays down only a preventive measure and it occurs in Ch. XII which is contained in Part IV headed "Prevention of offences" yet I am not prepared to hold, as it has been contended before us, that it is not a "criminal case" within the meaning of the Code. It will be observed that there are other sections of the Code, which deal with preventive measures, and which are contained in the same Part IV, e.g., secs. 107 and 110. Are proceedings under these sections, criminal cases or what? I think these may well be described as criminal cases; and this Court, I am informed, has exercised jurisdiction in transferring such cases under sec. 526 of the Code, see, for example, the case of Ahmed Hossein (7); and I find that in that case, the question was raised by the

LOLIT MOHAN MOITRA v. MAHARAJA SURYA KANTA ACHARYA CHOWDHRY.

Magistrate concerned, upon the authority of a case in In the matter of Amar Singh (8) whether this Court had authority to transfer such cases to some other district; and, notwithstanding the objection raised, an order was made for the transfer. If a proceeding under sec. 107 or sec. 110 may be regarded as a criminal case which may be transferred, I do not see how a proceeding under sec. 145 can be regarded in any other light, and as to which this Court has not the power to make an order of transfer. It is noteworthy that sec. 192 of the Code, under which a District Magistrate or a Sub-divisional Magistrate may make an order of transfer in any case, occurs in Part VI, headed "proceedings in prosecutions," and in a chapter which deals mostly with the procedure in enquiry into offences. And it seems to me that it would be rather anomalous if a District Magistrate, while not authorized to interfere with an order made under sec. 145, has the power to transfer a case instituted under that section from the file of one Subordinate Magistrate to another, the High Court, though possessed of Revisional powers and entitled to set aside such an order, is not authorized to make an order of transfer. In this connection, I may refer to a note by Sir Henry Prinsep, in his recent edition of the Code of Criminal Procedure under sec. 526, p. 516, which runs as follows :—"The High Court may also order that a criminal case or appeal be transferred to and tried before itself, or that the accused be committed to itself, or to a Court of Session. It should be noted that by the use of the expression 'a criminal case' the order of the High Court is not restricted to an enquiry or trial of an offence. But an order for the transfer of a criminal case or appeal can be made only when such case or appeal is before a Court ordinarily competent to try or hear it."

Upon these considerations I should be inclined to think that the expression "criminal case" occurring in sec. 526 may well be understood, as simply distinguished from a civil case or, in other words, that "a criminal case" is one over which a Criminal Court exercises jurisdiction.

But there is one point which, I am bound to say, does raise a doubt whether the Legislature meant to give the High Court power to make a transfer in a case other than strictly criminal, under sec. 526. Secs. 192 and 528, in speaking about the withdrawal or transfer of a case by a District Magistrate, use the words "any case" whereas sec. 526 says "criminal case." And while sec. 44 of the old Code of 1872 (corresponding to sec. 192 of the present Code) provided for the transfer "of criminal cases" by the amending Act XI of 1874, the word 'criminal' was struck out, and has been omitted from all the subsequent enactments while sec. 64 (corresponding to sec. 526) of the Code of 1872 used the expression "criminal case," and this expression has throughout been retained. These two circumstances create a doubt whether, the Legislature meant to confer on the High Court the power of making a transfer in cases other than those in which a person is charged with an offence. And that being so, I proceed to consider whether this Court has not the power to make the order of transfer under the Charter Act. Under sec. 15 of the Act, the High Court has the general power of superintendence over all Courts which may be subject to its Appellate jurisdiction including the power to direct the transfer of any suit or appeal, and it has been held by this Court in several cases that the High Court has the power to set aside an order under sec. 145 if such an order is made without jurisdiction, or if there is an illegality in the order affecting jurisdiction. Under that section, this Court has taken powers to revise the proceedings of Presidency Magistrates, such powers being doubted to exist under the Code of Criminal Procedure, see Empress v. Naba Kumar Patnaik (9), and I do not understand why, if this Court is empowered under its general powers of superintendence under the Charter Act to interfere with the proceedings held by a Magistrate under sec. 145, it has not also the power to transfer such proceedings from the file of one Magistrate to that of another. In this connection I desire to refer to sec. 178, Criminal Procedure Code, which runs as follows: "Notwithstanding . . . sec. 526." The proviso, to my mind, clearly indicates that the High Court has the power to make an order of transfer either under sec. 526 of the Code, or under sec. 15 of the Charter Act. If the High Court may, under sec. 15 of the Charter Act, direct the transfer of any case or class of cases committed for trial in any district, for trial to any Sessions division, I do not understand why the same power may not be exercised in respect of a case under sec. 145 of the Code, which a Magistrate has taken cognizance of. I hold that this Court has the power to make an order of transfer under the Charter Act. And I may here mention that this Court has on certain occasions entertained applications for the transfer of cases under sec. 145 though I cannot find any case where the order was actually made, the applications being rejected on the merits.

I now come to deal with the merits of the application that has been presented to us. This Court has on several occasions observed that, next to the importance of deciding a case fairly and impartially, is the importance of conducting oneself in such a manner as to inspire in the minds of the parties a confidence that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them. And I need hardly say that, if by reason of the words or conduct of a Magistrate or Judge before whom a case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is a bias against him in the mind of the officer concerned, it would be expedient for the ends of justice to transfer the case from his file to that of some other officer competent to try it, though there may not be any actual bias, see Dupeyron v. Driver (10) and Queen-Empress v. Bhairab Chunder Chakraborty (11). In the present instance, the affidavits presented to this Court and a petition presented to the Magistrate himself before whom the case is pending attribute to him certain words as having been uttered by him, in the course of the investigation, to the agent of the Petitioner which, if uncontradicted, might reasonably create an apprehension in his mind that the Magistrate is biased against him. Neither the explanation submitted by the Magistrate, nor the counter-affidavit filed by the opposite party, distinctly contradicts the statements made on behalf of the Petitioner. We can have no doubt in our own minds that, notwithstanding the words which have been attributed to the Magistrate, he has no real bias against the Petitioner; but still, so far as the Petitioner is concerned, such words are calculated to create in his mind a reasonable apprehension that justice may not be done to him. In this view of the matter, and without casting upon the Magistrate the slightest reflection, we think it expedient for the ends of justice to transfer the case from his file to that of the District Magistrate of Rajshahye.

We gather from the affidavits that have been presented on either side that most of the witnesses to be examined in this case are witnesses that would come from or near the property, the subject-matter of dispute, and that the means of communication between that part of the district of Maldah and the town are nearly the same as between it and Rajshahye. That being so, I do not think that it would cause any real hardship to any of the parties concerned, or to their witnesses if they have to go to Rajshahye. It will be for the District Magistrate of Rajshahye to determine whether he should take up the case himself or transfer it to the file of some other Magistrate in his district. If there be any sub-division in that district which is comparatively closer to the property, which is the subject-matter of dispute, than the headquarters of the district, the District Magistrate will transfer it for inquiry to the officer in charge of that sub-division.

We accordingly make the rule absolute.

TAYLOR, J.—Looking at the history of the present Code of Criminal Procedure it is clear that in 1874 by Act XI of that year a distinction was made by the Legislature between “cases” and “criminal cases.” In certain sections but not in all, the wording was altered from the latter to the former; the word “criminal” being on those instances omitted.

Having regard to this fact and to the further fact that the distinction has been continued and extended (see secs. 178, 192, 528, 556 where the wording is “case” and secs. 526, 527 where the wording is “criminal case”), I am of opinion that the two phrases are not in the Code of Criminal Procedure co-extensive; and that the phrases are not used indiscriminately or interchangeably. And further it appears to me that the phrase criminal case is intended to be used in a limited sense and not to apply to every case cognizable by a Criminal Court. For this reason and also in consideration of the provision of sec. 435 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, I would doubt the existence of a power under sec. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, to transfer cases which do not relate to matters which may strictly be described as “criminal” as relating to a crime or offence under the law.

But the power, it appears to me, exists under sec. 29 of the Letters Patent. In the Letters Patent “criminal case” appears to be used without the distinction which apparently exists in the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of cases tried by a Criminal Court as opposed to civil cases. Under the circumstances of the present case, which have been set out fully in the judgment of my learned brother, I am of opinion that we ought to exercise the power we undoubtedly possess in the interests of justice and I concur in the proposed order.

SIR R. COUCH.
SIR FORD NORTH.	PRAN NATH ROY

Suit to set aside ex parte decree and sale thereunder—Fraud—Application to set aside ex parte decree refused—Suit, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 13, 108, 244 and 311.

A suit lies to set aside an ex parte decree and the sale held in execution thereof on the ground of fraud, though an application to set aside the decree under sec. 108, Civ. P. C., had previously been refused.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Calcutta High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.), reversing the decree of the Sub-Judge of Pubna.

The object of the suit brought by the Respondent, Pran Nath Roy, as Plaintiff, was to set aside an ex parte decree for rent obtained by the 1st and 2nd Defendants against the 7th Defendant Ram Krishna Sircar, and the Plaintiff, and to recover from Defendants 3rd, 4th and 5th (i.e., the Appellants) possession of a property (village Dogachi) belonging to Plaintiff which was sold in execution of that decree, and purchased by them in the name of Defendant No. 6, Navadip.

The Plaintiff's case was that the suit culminating in that sale was from first to last a fraud in which the Defendants who purchased were concerned.

The Appellants filed written statements in which besides objecting on the merits, it was pleaded that the Plaintiff having attempted unsuccessfully to set aside the ex parte decree under sec. 108, C. P. C., and the execution under sec. 311 and not having appealed therefrom could not bring the present suit.

The Sub-Judge summarily dismissed the suit as not maintainable in consequence of the proceedings under sec. 108.

On appeal the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:—

"This suit has been dismissed, without trial, on the preliminary issue as to whether it was maintainable having regard to the provisions of secs. 13 and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the fact that the Plaintiff's application for setting aside the decree and the sale under secs. 108 and 311 of the Code were rejected.

• The object of the suit is to set aside an ex parte decree for rent obtained by the first and second Defendants against Ram Krishna Sircar, the seventh Defendant, and the Plaintiff, and to recover from the third, fourth and fifth Defendants possession of a property of the Plaintiffs, which was sold in execution of that decree and purchased by them in the name of the sixth Defendant. The plaint sets out that the Plaintiff had nothing to do with the jote in respect of which the rent was decreed, or with Ram Krishna Sircar; that the suit was fraudulently brought at the instigation of the third, fourth and fifth Defendants in order to get hold of the Plaintiff's property at a low price, and that with a view to carry out the fraud no summons was served and a false return of service was caused to be given; that the Defendants did not proceed against the tenure for which the arrears were due as against the property of Ram Krishna, but fraudulently caused a very valuable property of the Plaintiffs to be sold without service of any of the processes required by law and by getting false returns of service submitted, and themselves purchased it for a price much below its value. In short, the Plaintiff's case is that the suit culminating in the sale was, from first to last, a fraud, in which the Defendants, who purchased and got possession of his property, were concerned.

In order to see whether the suit is maintainable, we must assume the facts to be as stated: two more facts which are not mentioned in the plaint, but about which there is no dispute, must be added. Those are, that the Plaintiff applied under sec. 108 of the Code to get the ex parte decree set aside, and also applied under sec. 311 to get the sale set aside, and that both applications failed.

As we understand the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, he would have decided the preliminary issue referred to above in favour of the Plaintiff but for the one circumstance that the Plaintiff had applied unsuccessfully to get the ex parte decree set aside under sec. 108 of the Code. He says that, in applying under that section, the Plaintiff adopted the proper, but not the only, course open to him; that there was an appeal against the order rejecting his application, of which he did not avail himself; that the effect of the rejection order was to change the ex parte decree into a contested decree which the Court had no jurisdiction to set aside except by way of appeal, and that without setting aside the decree the Plaintiff could not get back the property sold in execution of it.

It is not, and could not be now, contended that a suit will not lie to set aside a decree obtained by fraud, nor is it contended that a fraudulent decree which is obtained ex parte, can only be set aside under the provisions of sec. 108 of the Procedure Code. The case of Abdul Mazumdar v. Mahomed Gazi (1) is an authority that a suit will lie to set aside an ex parte fraudulent decree although no endeavour has been made to get the decree set aside and the suit revived under sec. 108.

The contention is, that when a person against whom an ex parte decree is passed, does apply under sec. 108 to have the decree set aside and fails, he cannot afterwards, on the same ground as was put forward in the proceeding under sec. 108, bring a suit to get the decree set aside, even if fraud is alleged. It is said as regards the decree, that the only fraud here alleged is in the non-service of the summons, and that it was found in the proceedings under sec. 108, that the summons was served, or at all events, that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that it was not served. We do not understand the learned pleader for the Respondent to argue that the question of the service of the summons is in this case res judicata. His argument, broadly stated, is that when two courses are available and one is resorted to and fails, recourse cannot be had to the other.

It may be conceded that the Plaintiff could not bring a suit to set aside the decree on the bare ground that the summons was not served, or that he was prevented for some good reason from defending the suit; and that would be so whether he had or had not availed himself of the remedy provided by sec. 108. Nor could he maintain a suit to set aside the decree on the bare ground that he was not liable for the rent decreed, for it was decided in the suit that he was liable. His case is not of that description: it is that the suit in which the decree was obtained was a fraud in its inception and throughout, and he seeks to recover property of which he has been deprived by means of the fraudulent decree, and which has passed into the possession of persons who are said to have been parties to the fraud, but not parties to the suit in which the fraudulent decree was passed. It is not correct to say that the only fraud alleged is in the non-service of the summons. This was a part of the scheme and the means, or one of the means, by which the fraud was committed. It may be necessary for the Plaintiff, in order to get relief, to attack the decree, and he does attack it as fraudulent. If the decree was obtained by fraud and the Plaintiff was in consequence deprived of his property, the Court has full power to set aside the decree and restore his property unless its jurisdiction in the case of ex parte decrees is taken away; but there is nothing in secs. 108, 244, 311 or in any other provisions of law to which we have been referred, which does take it away. Sec. 13 of the Code clearly offers no bar. The issues which arise are not the same, the parties are not all the same, and the Court which decided the ex parte suit has no jurisdiction to decide this suit.

(1) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 605 (18 4).

RADHA RAMAN SHAH v. PRAN NATH ROY.

The mere fact that the Plaintiff failed to obtain relief on the narrow ground on which he might have obtained it under sec. 108, cannot prevent him from getting relief on the much wider grounds now put forward.

It is said, and correctly, that the Plaintiff might have appealed against the rejection order under sec. 108. All that can be said is that if he had appealed and succeeded, there might have been no necessity for the present suit. If this is a valid objection, it would apply equally to a case in which a Plaintiff had made no application under sec. 108, but had at once brought a suit to set aside the decree. The avoidance of unnecessary litigation may furnish some ground for arguing that before a person brings a suit, he ought to exhaust the remedy provided by sec. 108; but not that if he fails in his application under sec. 108, he is debarred from bringing a suit.

The only case cited as a direct authority for the Appellant's contention, is that of Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Modhoo Soodun Mundul (3). There the Plaintiff brought a suit to set aside a rent-decree obtained under Act X of 1859, on the ground that a confession of judgment on which the decree proceeded, was not put in by him, but was fraudulently placed on the record by other parties. The Plaintiff had applied to the Deputy Collector who passed the decree, to revive the suit under sec. 58 of the Act on this particular ground; but the Deputy Collector rejected the application, holding that the confession of judgment was not fraudulently obtained. The Plaintiff did not appeal, as he might have done, against the rejection order, and a Division Bench of this Court held that the Plaintiff having a remedy by way of appeal, which he did not resort to, was precluded from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the decree. The ground on which the decision is arrived at, is not clear, and there is no allusion in the judgment to fraud as the foundation of the suit. The case might be an authority for holding that no civil suit would lie until the remedy provided by sec. 58 of Act X of 1859, which is, generally speaking, analogous to the provisions of sec. 108 as regards civil suits, was exhausted, in which event it would apparently conflict with the decision in the case of Abdul Macumdar v. Mahomed Gazi (1); but it is no authority for the proposition that a person failing to obtain relief under sec. 108 is debarred from bringing a suit to get the decree set aside on the ground of fraud. When there is an appeal against a decision, the effect of not appealing is that the decision holds good for what it is worth; so far as concerns any other modes of relief available, the person not appealing is in no worse position than if he had appealed and failed.

We must hold that the suit is maintainable and that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong. The decree is set aside and the case remanded under sec. 582 of the Procedure Code for trial. The costs of this appeal will abide the result. The Appellant will be entitled to a refund of the value of the Court-fee stamps."

The Defendants thereupon appealed.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellants relied on sec. 108, Civ. P. C., and the proceedings that took place on that application. *

The Respondents were not represented.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Their Lordships are all agreed that the preliminary objection cannot be sustained, and that the High Court were right in overruling it. We have nothing before us but the bare fact that the Plaintiff endeavoured to get an ex parte decree set aside under sec. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the Court may try whether the summons was served or whether the Plaintiff was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. We are not told what went on before the Court upon that occasion, and it is impossible to say that the matter now alleged as fraudulent matter came in any way before the Court under the application which was made by virtue of sec. 108.

It seems to their Lordships that the High Court have taken an entirely right view of the matter, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed. No Respondent having put in an appearance, there will be no costs.

Solicitor: Mr. W. W. Box for the Appellant.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of April 1899, by A. B. Miller, Official Assignee of Bengal and Assignee to the estate of Ambica Charan Dutt, Insolvent, Judgment-debtor, against the order of Babu Karuna Das Bose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 18th of February 1899.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment of the Chief Justice.

Babus Sarada Charan Mittra, Boidya Nalh Dutt and Nalini Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—Two points arise upon this appeal. The facts, stated shortly, are these. In 1895, the decree-holder, in a suit to enforce his mortgage, attached certain immoveable property. In 1898 one of the judgment-debtors was declared an insolvent. On the 6th of May 1898 a vesting order was duly made in the insolvency proceedings. Subsequently an order for sale of the property attached was made, and on the 3rd of October 1898, the Official Assignee intervened, and on the 18th of February 1899, the First Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs passed the order which is the subject of the present appeal. By that order he held that the decree-holder had priority in respect of the attached property over the Official Assignee. The latter has appealed. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies in this case, on the ground that the Appellant, the Official Assignee, is not the "representative" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of cl. (c) of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The point is not free from difficulty. There are authorities in the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts, the first Kashi Prasad v. Miller (1), and the second, where, however, the point is only incidentally touched upon, Sardarnal Jagonath v. Aranvayal (2) which are against the view of the Official Assignee being the "representative" within the meaning of the section. If these authorities be well-founded, no appeal lies to this Court.

It is not necessary for the purposes of to-day to decide the point, but the inclination of my opinion is against the above view. It seems to be a somewhat narrow construction to place on the term "representative," looking at the position in which the Assignee stands to the insolvent. The Official Assignee no doubt represents in one sense the interests of the judgment-debtor's creditors, generally, but can it be justly said that he does not also represent the interests of the judgment-debtor himself. For instance, to the extent of any surplus remaining after paying the creditor, the Official Assignee represents the debtor in respect of that surplus.

Upon the merits, it looks, at first sight as if there were a conflict between two Full Bench decisions, viz., the one Anund Chunder Pal v. Punchoo Lall Soobalah (3) in which it was distinctly held that the Official Assignee can only take the interest which the judgment-debtor had, which in this case would be an interest subject to the rights of the attaching creditors, and the other Shib Kristo Shaha Chowdhry v. A. B. Miller (4). But there is this distinction between the last-mentioned case and the present one; in the former the attachment was before judgment, here it is after decree. But apart from this distinction, which, perhaps, in principle, is not very material, my view is that the law, as propounded in the earlier case, ought to be followed on the short ground that the Official Assignee stands in the shoes of the insolvent, and that he takes the property subject to any equities which are good as against the latter. In other words the Official Assignee cannot be in a better position than the insolvent.

The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs. The record may be sent down as early as possible.

BANERJEE, J.—I am of the same opinion. There are two questions arising for determination in this case, first, whether the Official Assignee is the representative of the insolvent judgment-debtor within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the point to be determined in this case is, consequently, one under cl. (c) of that section so as to make the order of the Court below appealable, and, second, whether the effect of a vesting order made under the Insolvency Act, 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21, has the effect of giving the Official Assignee priority over the claim of a judgment-creditor in respect of property attached at his instance previous to the passing of such order.

Upon the first question I may say that the matter is not free from doubt and difficulty. The question whether the point in this case comes under cl. (c) of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure has to be determined with reference to the nature of the objection raised by the Official Assignee. His objection here was, that the property in dispute, though belonging to the judgment-debtor was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the Respondent against him by reason of the order passed in the insolvency proceedings. So far as that objection goes, the Official Assignee represents not so much the judgment-debtor as the creditors taken as a body. But though that is so, it must be borne in mind that if the Official Assignee succeeds in defeating the present application for execution of decree, the property released from attachment will go to augment the assets of the insolvent for distribution among his creditors, and may help to secure the final discharge of the insolvent under sec. 59 of the Act. And I may add that the Official Assignee so far represents the judgment-debtor, that all the property that the judgment-debtor may have is vested in him. He may also, under sec. 29 of the Statute, institute and defend actions and suits on behalf of the insolvent. On the whole, therefore, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that the Official Assignee is a representative of the insolvent judgment-debtor within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code and that the order appealed against is therefore appealable.

On the second point raised in this case, I need only say that it is governed by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Anund Chunder Pal v. Punchoo

Lall Soobalah (3) and that the case of Shib Kristo Shaha Chowdhry v. A. B. Miller (4)* is distinguishable from the present, as the attachment in that case was one before judgment and not in execution of a decree, as it was in this case.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

BANERJEE, J. (MACLEAN, C. J., concurring).—In these appeals which arise out of applications for execution of certain rent decrees for sums not exceeding Rs. 500, the main question for determination is, whether an application for the execution of a decree obtained by one of two or more joint-landlords for his share of the rent, is governed by the special rule of limitation laid down in Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act or by the general law of limitation, namely, Art. 179 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877.

If the special law of limitation applies, the applications for execution are barred, unless they can be treated as being in continuation of certain previous applications made within three years from the date of the decrees. If the general law of limitation governs the cases, the applications are in time.

The Courts below have held that the applications which are admittedly made by a co-sharer landlord for the execution of decrees for his share of the rent, are not governed by Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and are not barred by limitation; and hence these appeals by the judgment-debtor.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant contends that a suit by one of several joint-landlords for his share of the rent, being a suit between landlord and tenant, is a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and a decree made in such a suit is a decree under that Act, although certain provisions of the Act, namely, those relating to the sale of tenures and holdings in execution of rent decrees, may not apply to such a decree. He argues that if it were otherwise, and if the special law of limitation did not apply to these cases, anomalous results would follow, such as this, that whereas a rent decree for a sum not exceeding five hundred rupees, if obtained by all the joint-landlords suing together, must be completely executed within three years, a co-sharer landlord obtaining such a decree can keep it alive for execution against the tenant for twelve years by making successive applications at intervals of three years. And in support of his contention he relies upon secs. 143 and 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the cases of Prem Chand Naskar v. Mokshada Debi (1), Narain Mahton v. Manofi Pattuk (2) and Parameshwara Namasudra v. Kali Mohan Namasudra (3). On the other hand, Babu Nilmadhub Bose for the Respondent argues that the only rent decrees which can be treated as decrees under the Bengal Tenancy Act are decrees obtained by the entire body of landlords; that a decree obtained by one of several joint-landlords for his share of the rent is one obtained independently of that Act; and that the anomaly pointed out by the other side may be explained by the fact that a co-sharer landlord cannot obtain satisfaction of his rent decree by the sale of the tenure or holding in arrear, and the Legislature may in consideration of that fact have thought it fit to allow him a longer time for realizing the amount of his decree. And in support of this argument, reliance is placed upon sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the cases of Beni Madhub Roy v. Joad Ali Sarkar (4), Durga Churn Mundal v. Kali Prosunno Sircar (5) and Sadagor Sirkar v. Krishna Chandra Nath (6). It is further contended for the Respondent that even if the cases were governed by the special law of limitation, the applications were not barred as they were made in continuation of previous applications, which were in time.

If the last-mentioned contention of the Respondent be well founded, it would not be necessary to consider the question raised by the Appellant. But I am unable to accept it as correct, seeing that the previous applications contained no list of properties to be attached, that they were not amended but were rejected, and that the present applications have been made as fresh applications. It is unnecessary therefore to determine the question stated at the outset. That question is not free from difficulty. After a careful consideration of the able arguments on both sides, the conclusion I arrive at is that the decision of the Courts below that the cases are not governed by the special law of limitation is right.

The special law of limitation relied upon by the Appellant, namely, Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is, by its express terms, limited in its operation to decrees made under that Act or any Act repealed by it. The decrees in these cases were not made under any of the Acts repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, as they were made after those Acts have been repealed. Then were they made under the Bengal Tenancy Act? It is argued for the Appellant that they were so made, because they were made in suits between landlord and tenant, and all suits between landlords and tenants are suits under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The minor premise in the above reasoning is true, but not so the major. It is true that a suit by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the by a tenant is a sui between landlord and tenant; but to say that such a suit is one under the Bengal Tenancy Act would be to ignore the general scheme of the Act, as indicated by sec. 188, which says that anything which is required or authorized to be done by the landlord under the Act must be done by all the joint-landlords acting together, or by their authorized agent. Secs. 143 and 144 of the Act relied upon by the Appellant no doubt speaks of suits between landlord and tenant generally, but they do not show that a suit by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the rent is, in the face of sec. 188, a suit under the Act. Such a suit is maintainable, not as a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act, but as a suit independent of the Act, and outside its scope, as was in effect held in Prem Chand Naskar v. Mokshada Deli (1) and Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jadu Ghose Alkushi (7). I may here add that the preamble of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which may be referred to as indicating its general scope [see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, p. 59, and Turquand v. Board of Trade (8)] shews that the Act is intended to amend and consolidate, not the entire law of landlord and tenant, but only certain enactments relating to that law. The old law (see Act X of 1859, secs. 105 and 108, and Act VIII of 1869, B. C., secs. 59, 64) contained provisions for the execution of rent decrees obtained by co-sharer landlords for their separate shares of the rent as well as those obtained by all the joint-landlords acting in concert. But the Bengal Tenancy Act contains provisions only in respect of rent decrees of the latter sort, these being the only rent decrees which, regard being had to sec. 188, can come within its scope. It has accordingly been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Beni Madhub Roy v. Joad Ali Sarkar (4) that sec. 170 of the Act applies only to rent decrees obtained by all the joint-landlords acting together. Moreover, the view I take, that a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the rent is not a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act, is in accordance with that taken in the case of Durga Churn Mundab v. Kali Prosunno Sarkar (5). There are no doubt several provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act which are quite general in their terms, and some of these, as for instance those of sec. 153 and of Art. 3 of Sch. III, have been held applicable to suits by or against one of several joint-landlords, see Narain Mahton v. Manofi Pattuk (2) and Parameshwara Namasudra v. Kali Mohan Namasudra (3). But those cases were decided with reference to the language of the provisions of the Act bearing upon them. Thus in the first-mentioned case the words "amount of rent annually payable by a tenant" occurring in sec. 153, were held to "include the case of rent payable by a tenant to one of the co-sharer landlords who collects his rent separately; and in the second case Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Act was held applicable to a suit against a co-sharer landlord. Sec. 188 has no bearing upon either of these two cases; and the decisions in those cases do not militate against the view I take of the meaning and scope of Art. 6, which speaks, not of decrees for rent nor of decrees in suits between landlord and tenant, but of "decrees made under the Act," which must be held to mean decrees obtained in suits brought in accordance with and not in disregard of sec. 188. It is argued for the Appellant that as Art. 6 of Sch. III is expressly applicable to decrees made under Act VIII of 1869, B. C., and Act X of 1859 (repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act) and a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the rent would be a decree under either of those two Acts if the suit was brought when those Acts were in force, it would be unreasonable to hold that the article is inapplicable to such a decree where the suit is brought after the repeal of those enactments. The answer to this argument is that the Legislature may have intended to make a change in the law, and there is reason for thinking that a longer time may have been given to a co-sharer landlord to have satisfaction of a rent decree obtained by him, than is given to joint-landlords acting together, seeing that the latter can obtain satisfaction of their decree by the sale of the tenure or holding in arrears. And this circumstance will explain also the anomaly referred to in the Appellant's arguments.

For these reasons I think the order appealed against is right, and those appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 31st of August 1900, against the order of G. Gordon, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 28th of May 1900, affirming the order of Babu Sudhangshu Bhusan Roy, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 24th of April 1899.

This appeal arose out of an application for execution made in a partition suit.

SURJA KUMAR DUTT v. ARUN CHANDRA ROY.

In 1890 a decree for partition was made in a suit between the parties. Under that decree the Appellant was directed to pay to the Respondents, who were Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in that suit, and to the Defendant No. 1 therein, a sum of Rs. 800 by way of equality of partition. At that time the Respondents, i.e., the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were minors. No application for execution was made until April 1899, when the present application was made. On that date the Defendant No. 2 had attained majority but only within 3 years of his making the application, while Defendant No. 3 was still a minor. The Appellant contended that the application was barred by limitation. Both the Subordinate Judge and, on appeal, the District Judge held that sec. 7 of the Limitation Act was applicable and the application was not barred. Hence this appeal.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Hari Bhusan Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The only question which arises on this appeal is, whether the present application for execution is barred by the statute of limitation.

It appears that the suit is one for partition in which a decree was made so far back as 1890, and under that decree, the present Appellant had to pay to the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 a sum of Rs. 800 or Rs. 900 by way of equality of partition. So far as this payment was concerned it was a joint decree. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the present Respondents. Nothing has been done by the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to enforce the above-mentioned portion of the decree until the present application was made by the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the younger of whom is still a minor, whilst the other attained his majority a short time, at any rate within 3 years, before the present application.

The question is, whether the present application is out of time, and this depends upon whether or not the applicants are entitled to the benefit of sec. 7 of the Limitation Act. Both the lower Courts have held that the claim is not statute-barred.

There is no case in this Court which directly touches the question, though that of Anando Kishore Dass Bakshi v. Anando Kishore Bose (1) has some bearing upon it. It is conceded by the Appellant that the case does not fall within sec. 8 of the Limitation Act. There was no one who could give a discharge for the money without the concurrence of the minors, the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

But it is urged for the Appellant that the present applicants are not protected by sec. 7 of the Act. Now sec. 7 says:—I will read only that portion which is pertinent—“If a person entitled to make an application be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor.....he may.....make the application within the same period, after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed.”

SURJA KUMAR DUTT v. ARUN CHANDRA ROY.

To my mind there is no difficulty in the construction of the section: the language is quite clear, and read in its natural and ordinary meaning, covers the case of the present applicants. Here the applicants at the time from which the period of limitation was to be reckoned were minors, and prima facie they would appear to be entitled to the special protection afforded by the section. But it is contended for the Appellant that the section does not apply when the minor is not the sole creditor or claimant, but is one of several joint creditors or claimants. There is nothing in the language of the section to support this view which seems to me to be contrary to sec. 8 which defines what is to happen in the case of one of several joint creditors or claimants being a minor, and which section would be unnecessary if the Appellant's contention were well founded. However, as I have indicated above, I can see nothing in the section to warrant such a construction.

The Appellant, however, relies upon certain cases in the High Court of Madras, which no doubt are in his favour.

In the case of Seshan v. Raja Gopala (2), it was held that the section applied to cases in which there is either one decree-holder and he is a minor or in which all the joint decree-holders are minors or labor under some other disability. The learned Judges relied upon an English case, that of Perry v. Jackson (3), which, however, was a case decided under the proviso to the statute of James 1, and of 3 and 4 William 4, c. 42, s. 4. But there is an important difference between the language of the proviso in the English statute, and sec. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act. In the proviso in the English statute the words are: "If any person or persons" which seem to indicate that the proviso applies only to cases in which the sole claimant is a minor or if there are more than one claimant where they are all minors or otherwise under disability. And this is pointed out by Lord Kenyon in his judgment, for he says: "the words of this clause, grammatically speaking, do not apply to the present case; they only extend to cases where the person individually a single Plaintiff, or persons in the plural, when there are several Plaintiffs, are not in a situation to protect their interests." He lays stress upon the expression "persons" in the proviso. Here, as was conceded, no valid discharge could have been given without the concurrence of the minors. I should be disposed to think that the principle of law enunciated in Perry v. Jackson (3) has found its way into sec. 8 of the Indian Act, but I do not think it covers the case now before us. There are two subsequent decisions in the same High Court to the same effect.

The view, however entertained by the Madras High Court, has not been accepted by other High Courts in India. In the case of Govind Ram v. Tatia (4), where the case in the Madras High Court was cited, a different conclusion was arrived at, and the construction of sec. 7 of the Limitation Act for which the present Appellant contends was not accepted, whilst in the case of Zamir SURJA KUMAR DUTT v. ARUN CHANDRA BOY.

Hassan v. Sundar (5) decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, the last-mentioned case in the Bombay High Court was followed. There is, therefore, between the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad, on the one hand, and of Madras on the other, a difference of opinion upon the point, and, in my opinion, speaking with all respect for the decisions in the Madras High Court, the view taken by the other High Courts appear to me to be the sounder. I see no reason to say anything about sec. 231 of the Code, the language of which is plain.

I think, therefore, that the claim is not out of time. The appeal consequently fails and must be dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

BANERJEE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question upon the determination of which the decision of this case depends is, whether when one only of several joint decree-holders is a minor, sec. 7 of the Limitation Act can save an application for execution by the minor decree-holder from being barred by limitation. The learned vakil for the Appellant asks us to answer that question in the negative; and the ground upon which he bases his contention is, shortly, this, that sec. 7 of the Limitation Act can save an application for execution from being barred only where either the sole decree-holder is a minor, or where all the decree-holders are minors; and that where some of the joint decree-holders are not minors, the section cannot save the application of any one of the decree-holders from the operation of limitation. And in support of this contention he relies upon the cases of Seshan v. Raja Gopala (2), and Narayanan Nambudri v. Damodaran Nambudri (6).

There is nothing in the language of sec. 7 of the Limitation Act to support the contention of the learned vakil for the Appellant. That section enacts—I am reading only so much of the section as bears upon this case—that “if a person entitled to make an application be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, he may make the application within the same period, after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed.”

Where there is a joint decree in favour of several persons any one of them is, under sec. 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled to make an application for execution of the decree; and if he is a minor, the provisions for extended time, under sec. 7 of the Limitation Act, would apply to him. To hold that sec. 7 does not save the case of a minor decree-holder, when he is one of several joint decree-holders who are not all under disability, would be to import into sec. 7 some provision similar to what is contained in sec. 8 of the Limitation Act; and could that have been intended? I think not, because the reason upon which the provision in the first part of sec. 8 rests would be inapplicable to such a case, having regard to the provisions of sec. 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It cannot be said that one of several joint decree-holders can give a valid discharge without the concurrence of the other. Indeed sec. 231 of the Code goes to show that there cannot be such a valid discharge, but that the Court, when it allows execution to proceed at the instance of one of several joint decree-holders, is to pass such orders as it thinks necessary to protect the interests of persons who have not joined in the application for execution. In my opinion, therefore, there is nothing in sec. 7 of the Limitation Act to support the construction contended for by the learned vakil for the Appellant.

As for the two Madras cases relied upon in the argument, with all respect for the learned Judges who decided them, I must say I am unable to agree with the view taken by them. The decisions in those cases are based upon the case of Perry v. Jackson (3), which was a case upon the construction of a provision in an English statute somewhat similar to sec. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act. But, as has been pointed out in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, the language of the English statute is different, and for the present purpose, materially different, from that of sec. 7 of the Indian Act. I, therefore, dissent from the view taken in the Madras cases, and following the cases of Govind Ram v. Tatia (4) and Zamir Hassan v. Sundar (5), answer the question stated at the outset in the affirmative.

Appeal dismissed.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PAYAG SINGH (1) dis-sented from.

This was a rule issued on the 10th of January 1901, against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narainganj, dated the 3rd of September 1900, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by the Sessions Judge of Dacca on the 27th of October 1900.

The facts of the case, material to this report as stated by the Magistrate, were as follows:—

“The accused is the proprietor of village Amlabo in the thanah of Raipura, and one Madhab Rai was his naib in that village, and one Ram Charan has been a refractory tenant of that village.

“On the 15th May (1900) a large body of tenants and peons of Amlabo cutchery armed with sulfies, kochees, daos and lathis pursued Ram Charan to his brother's house, and dragging him out of the hut, mortally wounded him and severely wounded his two brothers. Madhab Rai accompanied the rioters and stood close by while the riot was going on. It is admitted that accused is a 16 anna proprietor of the property, and it is clear that there was a riot of a most serious nature and that neither the proprietor nor his agent, Madhab Rai, did anything to stop it. For the prosecution it is not suggested that the landlord had any knowledge that this particular offence was likely to be committed. The question for decision is whether the zemindar's agent had any such knowledge. The answer can only be in the affirmative. It is proved that he actually accompanied the rioters and that after the riot he has been absconding; that the rioters were tenants of his tahsil and peons in his employ; that deceased was a man who had offended the naib in various ways by complaining against him to his landlord, by refusing to pay rent and by encouraging one Jalil to bring a case against one of the naib's men, Abir, who had, under a lease granted by the naib, cultivated land in Jalil's possession."

The accused resided in the town of Dacca, the principal city of the district in which his estates are situated.

On these facts the Magistrate convicted the accused under sec. 154, P. C., and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge his appeal was dismissed.

The case then came in revision before a Bench of this Court, consisting of Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.

These learned Judges differed in opinion as to the propriety of the conviction.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Moulvi Syed Mahomed Tahir for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to shew cause.

The DISSENTIENT JUDGMENTS were as follows:—

AMEER ALI, J.—It appears that on the 15th of January last a serious riot, took place in the village of Amlabo of which the Petitioner is the proprietor. He himself resides at Dacca, and it is not alleged that he had personal cognizance of the occurrence. It is stated, however, and may be taken as found, that his naib or agent, Madhab Rai, who according to the prosecution, has been absconding since, aided and abetted the riot.

The Petitioner was prosecuted under sec. 154 of the Indian Penal Code before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narainganj who, on the authority of a case in the Allahabad High Court to which I shall presently refer, has convicted and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000, the maximum penalty provided in that section. On the question of the part taken by the naib the Magistrate expressed himself as follows:—

"It is proved that he actually accompanied the rioters and that after the riot he has been absconding, that the rioters were tenants of his tahsil and peons in his employ, that deceased was a man who had offended the naib in various ways, by complaining against him to his landlord, by refusing to pay rent and by encouraging one Jalil to bring a case against one of the naib's men, Abir, who had under a lease granted by the naib cultivated land in Jalil's possession." He also found that the Petitioner had no knowledge of or concern in the riot.

On appeal the Sessions Judge affirmed the conviction. But as the naib was not on his trial, the learned Judge naturally and properly made a reservation in these terms: "he (the agent) is supposed to have abetted it (the riot) and it is possible he was present but that is a question which has not as yet been decided." Assuming, however, the finding of the Magistrate to be correct there can be no question that the naib was directly concerned in the riot.

Sec. 154 runs as follows:—"Whenever any unlawful assembly or riot takes place, the owner or occupier of the land upon which such unlawful assembly is held, or such riot is committed, and any person having or claiming an interest in such land, shall be punishable with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees, if he or his agent or manager knowing that such offence is being or has been committed, or having reason to believe it is likely to be committed, do not give the earliest notice thereof in his or their power to the principal officer at the nearest police-station, and do not, in the case of his or their having reason to believe that it was about to be committed, use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent it, and in the event of its taking place, do not use all the lawful means in his or their power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly."

The question which we have to decide, upon the construction of the section, relates to the extent, in the circumstances of the case, of the owner's liability to punishment, in other words whether he is liable not only for the laches of his agent but also for his criminal acts, for logically reviewed the hypothesis upon which the lower Courts have proceeded amounts to that.

The question, so far as this Court is concerned, is res integra. The passages cited to us from the judgments of NORMAN, J.,* and PRINSEP, J.,† do not, in my opinion, afford any help in construing the section, and I think the inferences attempted to be derived from them are somewhat misleading. But the Allahabad High Court in the case of the Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (1) has held that a landlord is liable under sec. 154 "for the acts of commission and the acts of omission not only of himself but also of his agent or manager." From this view, which is rather a sweeping generalization, I venture respectfully to dissent.

A cursory consideration of the section may perhaps give rise to the impression that as the landlord is made liable for the neglect of a duty on the part of the agent, he must perforce be liable also for his criminal acts; that, as he is liable for the "laziness" of his agent, to use the expression of the lower Courts, he must also be liable for his guilt.

An analysis of the section which unfortunately is not happily worded, and an examination of its scope and object would show, I think, that the above view is not well-founded.

The section declares in the first place that the owner of the land on which a riot or unlawful assembly is committed or held becomes punishable if he or his agent or manager, knowing that such offence is being committed or has been committed or having reason to believe that it is likely to be committed, does not give the earliest notice thereof in his or their power at the nearest police-station. (It will be observed that this portion of the section is extremely comprehensive in character and embraces not only the past and present but also the future.) The second provision makes it punishable on the part of the owner or his agent or manager if he or they "having reason to believe that a riot was about to be committed" do not use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent it. The third imposes the same penalty if in the event of a riot taking place he or they do not use all lawful means in his or their power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly.

The section, therefore, contemplates three different breaches of duty (a) omission to give notice, (b) abstention from preventing, (c) negligence to suppress.

Generally speaking, vicarious punishment is not recognized by civilised systems of criminal law at least in these days. But the Indian Legislature, for probably sufficient reasons, has in Chap. VIII of the Indian Penal Code departed in some instances from this principle and made owners of property responsible for the negligence of their agents or managers, but I do not find any indication in the law that they are liable for the criminal acts of their servants except on the ground of abetment.

In my opinion penal provisions have to be strictly construed, nor can the liability to punishment for the neglect of a statutory obligation be extended by inferential reasoning. Unless, therefore, the law can be construed to mean that the owner, although absent and wholly unaware of the riot or its commission, should be regarded as guilty if his agent or manager takes part in it, it seems to me difficult to hold that he is punishable under this section.

In the present case it is not suggested that the Petitioner had any independent knowledge of the occurrence which he refrained from communicating to the Police, or that he had any means of information other than through the ordinary channel, viz., his naib. If the naib himself takes a part in the riot or aids and abets in its commission, he is guilty of the actual commission of the offence or of its abetment and, not under sec. 154 which deals with neglect of a certain duty imposed by law. And if he cannot be made liable under sec. 154 I fail to see how, upon right reasoning, the owner whose means of information is dependant upon the naib and whose omission to give information must run on parallel lines with that of his agent, can be made liable under that section. It was urged that this view would enable landlords to escape punishment by putting forward suggestions regarding the actual criminality of their agents. To my mind, this argument leaves out of consideration the distinction the Code itself lays down between the commission of a criminal act and the neglect of a duty. The latter is punishable with a fine only whereas the substantive offence makes the offender liable to imprisonment, transportation for life or even the penalty of death, according to the circumstances of the case. It is hardly likely that a proprietor would try to evade the imposition of a fine by suggesting that his agent was actually concerned in the crime.

In my opinion it would be straining the law to make the absent owner who has himself no knowledge of the occurrence liable for not giving information of the riot that has taken place if his agent takes part in it and as a rioter actually taking part in it, does not, as a matter of course, give notice of it. Suppose, for example, the owner happens to be in England or some other distant country and a riot takes place on his property in which his agent is directly concerned either as an actor or abettor. Naturally no information is given by him to the

KAZI ZEANUDDIN AHMED v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Police. On what principle is the owner to be made liable under the section? Is it to be for the laches of the agent? But the act of the agent has ceased to be mere laches; it has already become a crime. Or is the owner to be punished vicariously for the crime of his servant? "The law does not furnish any warrant for this extreme view.

The notice is to be given at "the nearest police-station;" why? In order to enable the Police to take immediate action to prevent or suppress the riot or to bring the offenders to justice. It is the agent on the spot who is primarily responsible for this duty; and his failure makes the owner liable for his neglect. But a charge of neglect assumes, that the agent is not directly concerned in the commission of the offence. If he is so concerned it ceases to be neglect. It is a substantive crime.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the conviction of the Petitioner ought to be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

But as my learned brother is of a contrary view, the case will be referred to the Honourable the Chief Justice under the provisions of sec. 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

PRATT, J.—The Petitioner was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Narain-ganj of an offence under sec. 154, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000. The conviction was confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Dacca.

This rule was issued on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside on the ground that the facts found do not warrant a conviction under sec. 154.

The facts found are that the Petitioner is sole proprietor of village Amlabo, that a serious riot involving loss of life took place on that property, that the Petitioner's naib was aware that the riot would be committed, and so far from doing anything to prevent or suppress the riot he actually accompanied the rioters and stood close by while the riot was going on, and that he has absconded and cannot be found. For the prosecution it is not suggested that the landlord himself had any knowledge that the riot was likely to be committed. He has been convicted on the authority of the case of Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (1) which lays down that a landlord is liable under sec. 154, I. P. C., for the acts of commission as well as omission not only of himself but of his agent or manager. In that case, as in the present one the landlord's agent went to the scene accompanied by a great number of men and fomented the riot in which a man was killed. We are asked to hold that that decision is wrong and does not correctly interpret the law. It is urged that the law could not intend that a landlord living at a distance from the scene of disturbance should be punished for the criminal acts of his agent. Admittedly the law punishes a landlord for the culpable negligence of his agent. There is nothing in the words of the section under consideration from which it can be gathered that a distinction is to be drawn between an agent's acts of omission and of commission so far as the landlord's amenability to punishment is concerned.

There is no reported case in this Court.

KAM ZEANUDDIN AHMED v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

exactly in point. From some observations of Norman, J., in Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (4), it may be inferred that the accused in that case would not have been held guiltless if the finding of the first Court had stood, viz., that hired lathials were members of the unlawful assembly, some of them actually engaged as combatants on the side of the Paul Defendants. It was observed that; "There would be no doubt that the finding that such men were retained would have been quite sufficient to justify the inference that the zemindars and their agents, so far from using all lawful means in their power to prevent the riot, had made preparations beforehand to enable their faction to take an active part in it." So that a criminal act on the part of an agent, viz., the employment of hired lathials to take an effective part in the riot was held sufficient to bring the zemindars within the purview of sec. 154, I. P. C.

In the case of Tarakant Das v. Queen-Empress (5) Prinsep, J., in upholding the conviction of an absentee landlord under sec. 154 on account of the negligence of his local agent added the observation that: "There is much reason to believe that the riot was promoted in the interest of the zemindar." So that the learned Judge was evidently of opinion that active promotion of the riot by the landlord's agent would not excuse the landlord from being penalised under the section.

If the law were interpreted as the learned counsel for the Petitioner contends that it should be, it would always be easy for the landlord to procure immunity by creating evidence enough to raise a doubt as to his agent's criminality.

In cases under the cognate sec. 155 where a riot is committed for the benefit of the landowner the connivance of the local agent, who fails to perform the duty imposed upon him by law, must from the nature of things be generally suspected even where it cannot be proved. The contention raised on behalf of the Petitioner if pressed to its logical conclusion would under such circumstances render it illegal or at all events unsafe to punish the landowner, and so the law would become a dead letter.

The provisions of the law are doubtless of a somewhat exceptional nature, but as I observed before there is nothing in them which differentiates between cases of active connivance and of mere passive negligence on the part of an agent, and the Courts cannot impose a distinction which does not exist and could not, in my opinion, have been intended.

I would therefore discharge the rule.

The learned Judges having differed, the matter was referred to the Honourable the Chief Justice under sec. 429 of the Cr. P. C. His Lordship the Chief Justice referred the matter to Mr. Justice Rampini for decision.

KAZI ZEANUDDIN AHMED v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The case, out of which the reference arises, is one in which a zemindar of the Dacca District, Kazi Zeauddin Ahmed, has been convicted of an offence under sec. 154, P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000.

The facts of the case, as set out in the judgment of the Magistrate, are as follows :—

(See pages 772-773, supra).

On these facts the Magistrate convicted the accused under sec. 154, Penal Code, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge his appeal was dismissed.

The case then came in revision before a Bench of this Court, consisting of Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.

These learned Judges differed in opinion as to the propriety of the conviction.

Mr. Justice Ameer Ali is of opinion that the conviction should be set aside on the ground that an owner or occupier of land can only be held liable under sec. 154, P. C., for acts of omission and laches on the part of his agent and not for criminal acts committed by him. Mr. Justice Pratt, on the other hand, considers that there is nothing in sec. 154, P. C., which justifies the inference that any such distinction is to be drawn between an agent's acts of commission and his acts of omission, and relying on the authority of a ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (1), he would affirm the conviction and discharge the rule.

It is to be noted that both the learned

(1) I. L. R. 12 All. 550 (1890).

Judges are agreed that knowledge on the part of the owner or occupier of the land of the acts or intentions of the agent is not an essential element of an offence under sec. 154, and that he may be convicted under the section though he may be in entire ignorance of the acts of his agent or manager.

In this case it is of course not found or even imputed against the accused that he had any personal cognizance of the riot at which his agent Madhab Rai was present.

I have had the advantage in this case of hearing Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee on behalf of the accused. Mr. Bonnerjee supports the view of Mr. Justice Ameer Ali that under sec. 154, P. C., an owner or occupier of land can only be held responsible for the acts of omission of his agent, and contends that when his agent or manager commits any criminal act such as rioting, or abetting a riot, then, as the agent is punishable under the criminal law, the owner or occupier of the land, the principal of the agent, is absolved from all liability to the provisions of sec. 154. He further argues that the case of Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (1) has been wrongly decided.

It is clear that the case of Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (1) is a direct authority for the view taken by Mr. Justice Pratt; for there it is said: "The knowledge of the owner or occupier in cases of this kind is immaterial. He is liable for the acts of commission and the act of omission not only of himself but of his agent or manager. Payag Singh's karinda so far from using all lawful means in his power to suppress the unlawful assembly took all unlawful means in his power to encourage it. We convict Payag Singh under sec. 151 of the Indian Penal Code."

KAZI ZEANUDDIN AHMED v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

I am unable to see that this decision of the Allahabad High Court is incorrect, and I agree with Mr. Justice Pratt in thinking that there is nothing in the terms of sec. 154, P. C., which justifies the distinction drawn by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Bonnerjee between acts of commission and acts of omission on the part of the landowner's agent. Mr. Bonnerjee contends that though the section itself does not expressly lay down any such rule, it intends to do so, and that such a distinction should be drawn, because when an agent commits a criminal act he is punishable under the criminal law and the law is satisfied, and does not demand another victim. But this does not seem to me to be the intention or the meaning of sec. 154. There seems to be no ground for holding that sec. 154 is intended to punish the landholder when his agent has not rendered himself liable to the criminal law, and that when the agent has done so, then his liability is at an end. On the contrary, the provisions of sec. 154 appear to me to be intended to impose on non-resident landholders and their agents the duty of maintaining the public peace and preventing unlawful assemblies and riots on their estates and to render the former liable for any dereliction in the discharge of this duty.

Mr. Justice Seton-Karr has observed in Queen v. Harnath Rai (2):—"A zemindar by leaving his estates and residing at the Presidency cannot avoid his duties and liabilities, and it is his business to appoint fit and proper persons to manage his local affairs and to enable him to perform the duties imposed on him by the legislature. Moreover, it is the zemindar's duty to be regularly acquainted with all that goes on in his zemindari."

In these circumstances I cannot see why an owner or occupier of land should be responsible only for the acts of omission of his agent, and should not be held responsible for his acts of commission, which are of a more serious nature, and generally attended with graver consequences than mere acts of omission.

There appears to me to be no principle of criminal law that justice should be satisfied with one victim and that when a landowner's agent renders himself amenable to the law, his principal should go free.

It is true that the provisions of sec. 154 are of a very exceptional nature, and may in some cases work harshly. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali puts the hypothetical case of a landowner going to England or some distant country, and asks if he is still to be liable to punishment under sec. 154. It is to be presumed that Mr. Justice Ameer Ali means to ask whether he would be liable on his return to the district in which his estates are situated; for the local Courts of this country would have no authority over him as long as he resides in England. In such a case, no doubt, if the landowner had been long away from his estates, and had not intentionally visited the distant country to free himself from the responsibility for criminal acts committed on his estates by his agents in his absence, the provisions of sec. 154 might work harshly. But it does not follow that the provisions of sec. 154 would be held applicable in such a case; for in "In the matter of Rudha Nath Chowdhury (3)," a lenient and reasonable interpretation was put on the terms of sec. 154. In this case it was said: "We are disposed to think that a non-resident partner or co-sharer cannot be convicted in addition to the resident sharer under secs. 154 and 155. If the resident sharer brings himself under these sections, it is right he should pay the fine which would be a fine on the sharers: but to impose a fine on an absent sharer in addition, who has taken no active part in the management of the estate seems to us to be unduly stretching the law."

(3) 7 C. L. R. 289 (1880).

The accused in the present case, however, is not a non-resident partner or co-sharer within the meaning of this ruling. He resides in the town of Dacca, the principal city of the district in which his estates are situated. His estates are not more than two days' journey by walking from Dacca. By railway or steamer the journey is a shorter one. He is the sole proprietor of the land, which was managed for him by his agent, Madhab Rai. His agent obviously instigated and was present at a most serious riot which ended in the loss of a man's life. In these circumstances, I cannot doubt that the applicant is amenable to the provisions of sec. 154 and has been properly convicted and fined under that section.

I accordingly discharge this rule.

Act XIV of 1891, sec. 8—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Additional Judicial Commissioner sitting alone.

Case in which an appeal, heard by the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh sitting alone, was remanded to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to be tried by the Judicial Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner sitting together.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh dismissing the Plaintiff's appeal to him.

Mr. Degruyther for the Appellant submitted that under sec. 8, Act XIV of 1891, the Additional Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction, sitting alone, to hear the appeal, it should have been heard by him and the Judicial Commissioner sitting together.

Mr. Mayne for the Respondents admitted that that appeared to be so.

During the course of the arguments Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jarrahir Singh (1) and Ex parte Anderson (2) were mentioned—also that no costs were allowed by their Lordships.

A discussion then took place whether their Lordships should hear the appeal granting special leave to Appellant or remand the case for trial by a proper Court of Appeal.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD HOBHOUSE.—In this case their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to discharge the decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, of the 17th August 1896, to allow the appeal, and to remand the case to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, to be tried by the Judicial Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner sitting together, as provided by law.

Their Lordships give no costs of the present proceedings.

Terms upon which stay of execution pending an appeal was granted.

In this suit the Plaintiff propounded a document as the last Will and testament of Luchminarain Bogla of which he claimed to be the executor. Luchminarain Bogla died on March 6th, 1901, leaving property worth about 30 lacs, the major portion of which consisted of a banking and money-lending business and the business of a Government contractor. The Defendant who claimed to be the heiress-at-law of the deceased and as such entitled to his estate challenged the Will on the ground that it was a forgery. Prior to the hearing a Receiver of the estate including the above-mentioned businesses had been appointed. After a protracted hearing before Stanley, J., the learned Judge on July 1st pronounced in favour of the Will and directed the immediate issue of probate to the Plaintiff and the discharge of the Receiver. On July 3rd the Defendant obtained a rule returnable the next day calling on the Plaintiff to show cause why the issue of probate should not be stayed and the appointment of the Receiver continued pending the hearing of the appeal against that decree. On July 4, Stanley, J., delivered the following judgment discharging the rule with costs.

STANLEY, J.—This matter comes before me on a rule obtained by the Defendant calling on the Plaintiff to shew cause why a stay should not be put on the granting of probate pursuant to the decree made on the 1st of this month and why a stay should not also be put on the order of the Court discharging the Receiver.

MUSSAMUT BRIJ COOMAREE v. RAMRICK DASS.

The application is made under the provisions of sec. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code, which enables the Court which passes a decree, for sufficient cause, to order execution of the decree to be stayed.

In this case the testator, Luchminarain Bogla, carried on business in Calcutta, Rangoon, Chooroo and Mandalay as a banker and money-lender, and also as a contractor for the supply of military and other stores.

This business was in full activity at the time of his death which occurred very suddenly on the 6th of March last.

The Defendant who is the adoptive mother carries on a like business of a very extensive character and is said to be a lady of great wealth.

When the application for probate was made to me originally and a caveat had been lodged by the Defendant, it became necessary that something should be done for the protection of the property of the deceased, and though I was very averse to appoint a Receiver, I found myself coerced to do so under the circumstances, and a Receiver was appointed on the 26th of March pending the final determination of the case.

It is alleged by the Plaintiff that there is a great deal of competition between these two firms, the firm of the late Luchminarain Bogla and the firm of the Defendant, and that if the executor under the Will of the deceased is not put in possession of the property, serious loss will be sustained by the estate.

The action was heard before me at great length. The hearing occupied thirty-three working days and a great deal of evidence, both oral and written, was tendered on both sides.

There were features of some difficulty and circumstances which, as I have stated in the judgment, gave rise to suspicion.

After I heard the evidence I found that those suspicions had been removed and I formed a clear opinion as to the merits of the case put forward by the Plaintiff.

I had no doubt as to the genuineness of the Will, I had also no doubt but that the defence advanced by the Defendant was unworthy of credit, but though this is my own personal view, it may be that other Judges would take a different view of the case.

A large amount of evidence which I considered of a reliable character in support of the Will has been given by the Plaintiff which has not been met or discredited.

I am asked now to put a stay on my order and, under the discretionary power which I have under sec. 545, to direct that execution be stayed until an appeal which is proposed to be made to the Appellate Court is determined.

No appeal has been presented but I am told, and I have no doubt that it is true, that an appeal is ready and can be presented forthwith.

It must be a considerable time before the case in the Appeal Court will be reached unless the case is expedited. The result of my putting a stay on the execution would be that the business which is now carried on by the Receiver, would continue in his hands with the result that irreparable injury would result to the estate for the reasons stated in the Plaintiff's affidavit.

The proposed order is one which would tamper and interfere with the carrying on of the business. The Plaintiff suggests that it would suit the Defendant because if the competition of the firm of Luchminarain Bogla be out of the way her business will be benefited.

It appears to me therefore that this is a very exceptional case, and I cannot but feel that that there is truth in the Advocate-General's remark that irreparable loss will be sustained if the legitimate owner of the property be not placed in possession of it.

This is not a case like the case upon which reliance is placed by the Defendant's counsel, the case of Wilson v. Church (6). In Wilson v. Church (6), under an order of Court, directions were given for payment of moneys to 900 or a 1,000 people, many of whom were resident in the Continent and others in America, and they were not parties to the suit.

If the fund in that case had been distributed under the decree it could not be recovered, whereas if the money was in Court, the Plaintiff and the bondholders could not be injured, the money would be safe and interest would run on it at four per cent.

Here however the property would be dwindling day by day as I gather and probably in a year or two would be depreciated, it may be 50 or 60 per cent.

Under these circumstances I shall not take the responsibility of staying the execution of the decree.

It is pointed out to me that if I do not put some stay on the grant of probate, probate will be handed to the Plaintiff forthwith and an appeal will be rendered nugatory.

To prevent this I will give an opportunity to the Defendant of filing his petition of appeal and also of appealing against this order.

I shall discharge this rule with costs but I shall give the Defendant a fortnight from this date to make such application to the Court of Appeal as she may be advised, and I shall stay issue of probate for one fortnight from this date and also the order discharging the Receiver.

The Defendant appealed.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Mr. Mittra, Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Shelley Bonnerjee for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General, Mr. Palit, Mr. O'Kinealy, and Mr. Garth for the Respondent.

The Advocate-General took a preliminary objection that no appeal lay.

Mr. Mittra.—Stanley, J., was under the impression that there was an appeal from his order, as is apparent from his judgment.

The application was made under sec. 545 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Any order made under that section is considered as an order in execution proceedings and as such comes within the purview of sec. 244 and the definition of a decree as given in sec. 2 of that Code and is therefore appealable. See Ghayidin v. Fakir Buksh (9), Udeyadeta Deb v.

MUSSAMUT BRIJ COOMAREE v. RAMRICK DASS.

Greyson (10), Musaji Abdulla v. Damordas (11); and the cases cited by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy at p. 721 of the 5th Ed. of his notes to the Civil Procedure Code.

[MACLEAN, C. J.—As you raised this objection, Mr. Advocate-General, would you like to be heard first? The Advocate-General.—Yes. I raised the point and am entitled to a reply.]

The Advocate-General (on the preliminary objection).—I do not contest the rulings just now cited. They only decide that orders passed under sec. 545 of Code of Civil Procedure come within the definition given in sec. 2 of that Code and are therefore appealable from one Court to another. But I contend that the only right of appeal from an order made by one Judge of the High Court or from a Division Bench of this Court where the judges are equally divided to the High Court is under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. If it were not for cl. 15 of the Letters Patent no appeal would lie from an order of any Judge of this Court except to the Privy Council. See Tootsee Money Dasse v. Sudevi Dasse (12) which decision followed a long series of cases.

The other side contend that this is an order under sec. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code and that section read with secs. 244 and 2 of that Code make this order an appealable one. My answer to that is that in dealing with an appeal from one Judge of the High Court to another Bench of the High Court you must have recourse to sec. 15 of the Letters Patent and not to the Civil Procedure Code. Nor can you include the word "judgment" as used in sec. 15 of the Letters Patent in the definition of a decree as given in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There may be a decree within the definition given by the latter section which is not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The meaning of the word "judgment" as used in sec. 15 of the Letters Patent is to be found in the case of The Justices of Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1); see also Sonlai v. Fazul Habi Dhari (13). This order in no way affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining any right or liability. That had been done previously. There are many orders from which no appeal lies, such as an order granting a certificate that a case is a fit and proper one to appeal to the Privy Council, for such order although affecting the rights and liabilities of the parties is not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent. See Moula Buksh v. Kishen Pertab (14), Lutf Ali Khan v. Asgur Reza (15). Again an order refusing the grant of a certificate has been held not to be appealable; Manly v. Patterson (16). No appeal lies from a decision on one issue in a suit which does not deal with the whole subject-matter of the suit; Ebrahim v. Fukrunnissa Begum (17). An order refusing to extend the time prescribed by law within which an Appellant is required to furnish security for the costs of the Respondent is not appealable; Kishen Persad Panday v. Tiluckdari Lall (18). Nor is an order refusing to stay execution under sec. 608 of the Code of Civil Procedure; Mohabir Prosad Sing v. Adhikari Kunwar (4). There is no appeal against an order refusing an application under sec. 169 of the Indian Companies Act (IV of 1882) for extension of time for serving notice of an appeal under that Act; Wall v. Howard (19). See also Kay v. Briggs (20), The Amstil (21), Lane v. Esdaile (22), Ex parte Stevenson (23). In the present case the learned Judge proceeded wholly in the exercise of his discretion, as is apparent from his judgment and from the manner in which the order is drawn up, for the Defendant is not given liberty to appeal against the order but only to make such application to the Appellate Court as she may be advised. [BANERJEE, J., referred to Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi (2)]. In that case there was no discretion vested in Pontifex, J. He had no discretion to refuse to carry out an order made by Her Majesty in Council. And moreover the Privy Council held that his order did expressly decide a question affecting the rights of the parties. No appeal lies against an order refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council against an order refusing the appointment of a Receiver; Chundi Dutt Jha v. Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (24). Such an order is not a final judgment within the meaning of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code dealing with appeals to the Privy Council.

Assuming they could apply under sec. 545 the order made on their application was no judgment within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent. But I further contend that this is no case for the stay of execution at all and Stanley, J., could not have made any other order than he did. The decree made by him in favour of the Will and directing a grant of probate was a decree made by him sitting in the exercise of the Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction of this Court, and is not a decree that can be executed under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. There is nothing to be done under this decree by or against the Defendant. The rule was so framed as to exclude the direction to the Defendant to pay the Plaintiff's costs. It was only directed against the issue of the grant of probate and the discharge of the Receiver. Under these circumstances there is nothing under the order that has to be done by the Defendant. [BANERJEE, J.—Does the signing and sealing of the decree mean the issue of probate.] When the decree is signed the person who obtained it would take it to the Clerk of the Court and on payment of probate duty he would get his probate. There is nothing to be done by the other side. [MACLEAN, C. J.—The question whether this case falls within sec. 545 or not is a different point altogether to whether this order is a judgment or not under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.] Yes, I was only indicating it. With regard to the preliminary objection, I contend that this order does not determine the rights or liabilities of any party in the suit. It is not therefore a judgment within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent and consequently no appeal lies against it.

Mr. Mitra contra.—We contend that the order made by Stanley, J., is a judgment within the definition given by Couch, C. J., in The Justices of Peace v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1) and is therefore appealable. That definition tallied with the definition of a decree as given in Act VIII of 1859. Since then the definition of a decree has been extended and why should not the definition of a judgment be so extended as to correspond with the present definition of a decree. The cases cited by the other side are all easily distinguishable from this case and it is a noticeable fact that they have not cited a single case in which it has been held that no appeal lies from an order refusing stay of execution of a decree. A useful guide in determining what amounts to a judgment is found in the definition of a decree given in sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The definition of a judgment given by Couch, C. J., is an elastic one and is not confined within the narrow limits the other side seeks to impose upon it. It includes final, preliminary and interlocutory orders. Had this order been made by a District Judge, it would have been a decree as defined by the Civil Procedure Code and would have been appealable to the Appellate Side of this Court. In this case the order was made by a Judge of this Court sitting in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court and his order undoubtedly does determine a question affecting the rights and liabilities of the parties. If his order is allowed to stand the Plaintiff will get possession of the estate, for that is the natural effect of the decree granting him probate and not only will the Defendant be deprived of it, but what is more, she will be deprived of all means of protecting and preserving the estate pending the determination of the appeal. In coming to a decision as to whether an order is a judgment within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent all the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration.

As regards the second point raised I contend that this is a decree capable of execution. See Dharram Singh v. Kissen Singh (25) where the appointment of a manager and the taking possession by him of the property in suit was held to be the execution of a decree. In this case the order directing probate to issue places the property in the hands of the Plaintiff.

Mr. J. G. Woolroffe (on the same side).—While jurisdiction is given by cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, the Court may yet, in order to ascertain the meaning of the word 'judgment,' refer [as was done in The Justices of Peace v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1)] to the Code. Though the latter is of subsequent date the definition of 'decree' therein is not a merely arbitrary one, and from it an indication may be gained that the present order is of an appealable character. In any event that order is within the definition given in the case cited. The merits, there referred to, must include the merits of applications made in or after the suit otherwise there could be no appeal from anything but the final decree in the suit itself. The order appealed from determines a right of liability, namely, the right to probate and possession of the property pending appeal. The cases relied upon by the Respondent are cases in which no question was determined between the parties which directly affected their rights or liabilities.

The Advocate-General in reply.—The question turns on the meaning of the words used by Couch, C. J., in The Justices of Peace v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1). Although that is not a statutory decision, yet in the eyes of lawyers it has as much weight as a statutory decision for it has been confirmed over and over again. The order now sought to be appealed from, only repeats what the learned Judge had done before and refuses to stay his former order. The lis terminates with the decree. After that, the position is the same as if there never had been a lis, and as if the testator had died leaving an undisputed Will with executors, Wieland v. Bird (26). The decisions in Lutf Ali Khan v. Asgur Reza (15), Kishen Persad Panday v. Tiluckdari Lall (18) and Chundi Dutt Jha v. Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (24) have considerable bearing on this point. As regards the case of Hurriah Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi (2) the point there was not a question of executing the decree but one which affected the main issue in the suit. As regards the definition of decree given in the Civil Procedure Code, we are, as I have contended, quite independent of that Code and act under the Charter. There is no authority for saying that the word judgment in sec. 15 of the Letters Patent and the word decree in the Code are synonymous.

[Their Lordships here intimated that they would hear the appeal before deciding the preliminary point.]

Mr. Mittra for the Appellant.—From the affidavits filed on both sides these facts are clear: the estate is a large one and consists principally of moveable property. There is no immoveable property belonging to it within the jurisdiction of this Court. The Plaintiff has no property in British India nor anywhere else. He is a subject of the Maharajah of Bikaner and is at present passing through the Insolvency Court at Rangoon. Probate has been ordered to be issued to him without his being directed to furnish any security. Our contention is that if he gets the property now and we succeed in our appeal we shall recover nothing from him. This is eminently a case for the Court to exercise its discretion under sec. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code. As regards any loss that may be occasioned to the businesses left by the deceased we are prepared to offer any security that the Court may consider reasonable to cover such loss. [BANERJEE, J.—No doubt the language of that section is very comprehensive, but does it contemplate a case like this? Suppose the property the subject-matter of the suit is a mercantile business with a capital of twenty lacs. In such a case could the Appellate Court direct a stay of probate and at the same time direct security to be given for any loss that the business may suffer. If not, one of the conditions of cl. (c) to sec. 545 is unsatisfied.] The Court has ample power under that section to make such a direction and to put the Appellant upon such terms that the Respondent, if the appeal is dismissed, will be in no way prejudiced. But in dealing with cases like the present one the Court ought chiefly to consider what the position of the Appellant would be if the application for stay were refused and the Appellant were successful in his appeal. The principle, it is submitted, is this: where the right of appeal exists, and the question is whether the fund shall be paid out of Court, the Court as a general rule ought to exercise its best discretion in a way so as not to prevent the appeal, if successful, from being nugatory. Where there is a reasonable ground of appeal, and if, not making the order to stay the execution of the decree or the distribution of the fund would make the appeal nugatory, that is to say, would deprive the Appellant, if successful, of the results of the appeal, then it is the duty of the Court to interfere and suspend the right of the party who, so far as the litigation has gone, has established his rights; Polini v. Grey (5), Wilson v. Church (6); see also The

Annot Lyle (27). The fact that this case deals with the granting of probate makes no difference for here if probate is granted it in effect amounts to a distribution of funds. [BANERJEE, J., referred to Maharani Indar Kumari v. Maharani Jaipal Kumari (7).]

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe (on the same side).—The question to be determined is, it is submitted, whether this Court which has already through its Receiver possession of the estate, the subject of litigation, should loosen its hold of such property and make it over to the Plaintiff whose right to possess the same is the subject-matter of the pending appeal. That appeal operates as an extension of the suit, Taylor v. Taylor (28). Both together form one continuous proceeding. This is not a case in which it is sought to dispossess a party of property of which he is in possession. The property being in the Court's custody, the burden is on the Plaintiff to show that he is presently entitled to possession. That burden is not discharged by showing a grant of probate to him when the right to the grant is the very question at issue in the appeal. It is true that there is a decision in favour of the Plaintiff but that must always be the case from the very nature of the application. In Mohesh Chunder Dhal v. Satrugan Dhal (8) both the lower Court and the High Court decided against the Plaintiff and the High Court refused leave to appeal to the Privy Council, yet the latter directed a stay of execution. That case and Maharani Inder Kumari v. Maharani Jaipal Kumari (7) show that the principles laid down in Polini v. Grey (5) and Wilson v. Church (6) have met with the approval of the Privy Council which in the case of Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Ojoodhyaram Khan (29) indicated the facts which should be shown upon an application of this kind. The language of sec. 545 of the Code is however less strict. It is not necessary to show that irreparable damage will but that substantial loss may result unless they be granted. If the lower Court had exercised its discretion it would still be open to the Appellate Court to interfere. But it has not exercised any discretion. There is no finding upon the question (which has been entirely overlooked) whether loss may result to the Defendant; moreover the learned Judge has stated that he will not accept the responsibility of staying execution and has directed that the probate should not issue for 14 days in order that application might be made to this Court. He has thus left the question to be determined by this Court. As to security though sec. 545 is limited to security for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon the applicant (in this case an order for costs) and the Court cannot compel the giving of any other security, the applicant is willing to give reasonable security for any loss which may occur to the Plaintiff by reason of the stay and the retention of the property in the hands of the Receiver. See Brewer v. Yorke (30).

The Advocate-General for the Respondent.—No facts have been stated by the Appellant to show that irreparable mischief will be caused to her if the order she asks for is refused. The affidavit of her manager on which she relies nowhere states that he is advised that there are good grounds of appeal against the decision finding for the Will. On the other hand we show and it is in no way controverted by the other side that the Plaintiff had been the manager of the father of Luchminarain Bogla during the former's lifetime and had largely aided in building up his fortune, that after his father's death Luchminarain Bogla had been ill-treated and turned out of the house penniless by the Defendant who was his adoptive mother, that the Plaintiff thereupon took pity on Luchminarain Bogla, treated him as his son, and instituted on his behalf proceedings in the Rangoon Court in connection with the Will of Luchminarain's father which resulted in the Defendant paying to Luchminarain the sum of thirty lacs of rupees. The proposition that the Court will only consider what loss may be occasioned to the Appellant if the order now sought for is refused is not maintainable. The Court will consider the position of both parties and examine all the circumstances of the case before granting such an order. If this order is granted the Plaintiff will be kept out of the estate of which he is the executor and the businesses belonging to the testator will come to an end for the Receiver has no power to enter into fresh transactions. His appointment has practically resulted in the winding up of the businesses and if it is to be continued the businesses are bound to come to an end. The result will be irreparable injury to the Plaintiff. On the other hand no grounds have been shown to justify the Court to come to the decision that the Defendant will suffer irreparable injury if the order is refused. The mere prospect or apprehension of injury, or the mere belief that the act complained of may or will be done, is not sufficient to entitle the Defendant to the relief she seeks. (See Tagore Law Lectures, 1897, page 105, and the cases cited there). Assuming sec. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the present case, then the granting or refusing of this order is a matter within the discretion of the Judge (Kerr on Receivers, fourth edition, page 5). The learned Judge in the Court below did exercise his discretion and after hearing the Defendant felt satisfied that no grounds had been made for him to stay his hand. In such a case the appeal Court will not interfere unless it can be shown that he proceeded on a wrong principle or made a manifest slip, which has not been shown here. (See Mew's Digest, Vol. 1, p. 382, and the cases cited there).

The appointment of a Receiver always operates as an injunction. Though actual injury need not be shown to enable a party to get this preventive relief, yet the facts relied on must show that injury will follow or to use the words of Lord Chelmsford in Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Ojoodhyaram Khan (29) irreparable injury will be caused to the applicant. As regards what kind of facts must be shown to entitle a party to this preventive relief, see Bindubasini Chowdhurani v. Jahnnabi Chowdhurani (31). No such facts are shown here. No case has been cited where when the Court below has affirmed the title of an executor, the Appeal Court has in an interlocutory proceeding interfered. When a Court has ordered probate to issue it will not interfere with the executor exercising the powers conferred upon him unless a special case is made [Kerr on Receivers, 4th Ed., p. 25, and cases cited there], Devey v. Thornton (32). Though there is a distinction between that case and the present one the principle is the same.

Where the order of a Judge is founded upon matters within his discretion the Appeal Court is reluctant to reverse his order, Hadji Ismail v. Hadji Mahomed (33), Shadi v. Anup Sing (34), Oriental Bank Corporation v. Gobin Lall Seal (35), Wigney v. Wigney (36), Ironmongers Company v. Attorney-General (37).

The cases of Polini v. Grey (5) and Wilson v. Church (6) are beside the point. There there was a fund in Court but here there is no such thing as a fund in Court. That is the initial fallacy that underlies the whole of the argument on the other side. Those cases do not throw any light on the question now before the Court because here the Court is dealing with the grant of probate and has nothing rule was granted on that day limited to the first two objects. That rule was heard by Mr. Justice Stanley on the 4th July and discharged with costs. Hence the present appeal. The application for stay of execution as to the costs was, I understand, not pressed. The question in dispute between the parties is as to the validity of the above Will, and the amount involved in the dispute is very large, about 33 lacs of rupees.

Under the Will the Respondent, as residuary Legatee takes a very large interest estimated at 23 lacs. If the Will be found invalid, the Appellant, the adoptive mother of the testator, takes the estate as her adopted son's heiress. * Mr. Justice Stanley, after a trial which lasted 33 days, found in favour of the Will, and an appeal from his decision has been presented and is pending by the present Appellant, the mother. When Mr. Justice Stanley made his order of the 4th July no appeal was pending, but one has since been filed. A Receiver was appointed on the 26th March 1901.

Various objections are raised by the present Respondent, the successful party in the Court below, to any stay of proceedings being granted. It is urged on his behalf (1) that no appeal lies to this Court from Mr. Justice Stanley's order of July 4th, (2) that the case does not fall within sec. 545 of the Code of Civil Procedure, (3) that the matter was one for the exercise of the judicial discretion of the Court below, and that this Court ought not to interfere with his decision in exercise of that discretion, (4) that on the merits no case has been made out for the intervention of the Court, that no case has been shown that if the appeal, be successful, it will be infructuous by reason of the Respondent removing the assets out of the jurisdiction of this Court, that there is no danger of such a result, and that, having regard to the nature of the assets, a going banking and money-lending business as also that of a contractor for the supply of military stores, the continuance of the Receiver and the refusal to hand out the probate will inflict substantial loss on the Respondent. I will deal with these objections seriatim.

I entertain no doubt but that an appeal lies. The appeal, if at all, can only lie under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865, and it is contended for the Respondent that the order of July 4th is not a "judgment" within the meaning of that section. We have been referred to many cases upon this point and to the definition of a "judgment" given by Sir Richard Couch in the well-known and often cited case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1). That definition is now of some antiquity and is rapidly becoming, if it has not already become, almost classical. I have concurred and I still concur in that definition, but I do not say that it is exhaustive. It is perfectly true that the first order, that of July 1st, decided as between the parties, the question of the validity of the Will, and, as consequent, the discharge of the Receiver. But a new state of circumstances has arisen by reason of the appeal, as also a new and further question, whether, under such circumstances, the Respondent ought to be given the immediate control of this large estate. Upon this new and important question, Mr. Justice Stanley has exercised his judicial discretion, and has come to a decision of great importance, which, if it remain, may possibly render a successful appeal absolutely infructuous. If the view urged by the Respondent be well-founded, viz., that it was the first order which decided the rights and liabilities of the parties, and that the order of July 4th virtually decided nothing as to such rights and liabilities, then it is difficult to appreciate how any order preliminary or interlocutory, could ever be the subject of an appeal under the section. But, obviously, this is not what Sir Richard Couch meant. In my opinion the order of July 4th has decided the very important question, very important in this particular case, that notwithstanding the appeal—for although such appeal had not actually been filed when Mr. Justice Stanley's judgment was delivered, it proceeded upon the footing that one was about to be filed immediately—the Respondent was entitled to the immediate control of the estate, a decision which, if the appeal be successful, would, as I have already said, possibly render it absolutely infructuous, and the case to my mind falls within the definition of a judgment given by Sir Richard Couch, and is consistent with the observation of the Privy Council in the case of Hurrieh Chunder Choudhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi (2). I am but little disposed to place a narrow construction upon the expression "judgment" in sec. 15 of the Charter. I do not think it is necessary to refer to the other cases cited: none of them are directly in point.

(1) 8 B. L. R. 433, 452 (1872).

MUSSAMUT BRIJ COOMAREE v. RAMRICK DASS

Since the case was argued we have been referred to the case of Srimanta Raja Yarlagadda Durga Prasada Nayadu v. Srimanta Raja Yarlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayadu (3) which is directly in point. With all deference to the learned Judges who decided that case, I am unable to concur in their view and for the reasons I have stated above. It seems to me that the Judges have not quite apprehended the true effect of the Calcutta decision in Mohabir Prosad Singh v. Adhikari Kunwar (4) which was in substance a question as to giving security for costs, not of staying execution, though that no doubt was the form the application took.

I now pass to point No. 2. It is stated the case does not fall within sec. 515 of the Code: it is said there is nothing to execute. It is quite clear, that, as regards costs, there is a very substantial matter for execution and therefore the order of July 1st taken as a whole would be one where execution would or might be necessary. It is true that no stay as regards execution for costs is asked for now: but that cannot affect the question whether the order, as a whole, is not one where execution might be necessary. Be that, however, as it may be, I think that when there still remains something substantial to be done under a decree, before it can become thoroughly effectual, that decree has to be "executed" within the meaning of sec. 545. The order of July 1st, as it stood, would avail the Respondent but little for all practical purposes: two things have to be done under it, in order to finally clothe him with the character of executor: he has to pay the stamp fees on probate, and the Court has to hand out to him the probate itself. What is this if it is not carrying out, that is, executing the order? In my opinion the case falls within the section but even if it did not, I think there is an inherent power in the Court to stay under proper circumstances, the drawing up of its own orders, or to suspend their operation if the necessities of justice so require. In my opinion Mr. Justice Stanley had power to deal with the matter, and that does not appear to have been contested before him. There is nothing in the proceedings in the Court below to suggest that any objection was taken on this head.

Then it is said that as the Judge below has exercised his judicial discretion in the matter, this Court ought not to interfere. I am entirely in accord with the view that an Appellate Court ought to be extremely chary of interfering in matters dependant upon the exercise of the judicial discretion of the Court below, but, of course, it can interfere and sometimes has to interfere. I do not know that this point is of much practical importance, for now that the appeal has been filed the Appellant could make a new and substantive application under sec. 545 as in fact she has now done. But, apart from this, the judgment of the lower Court seems to intimate that, whilst the learned Judge himself would not take the responsibility of staying execution of the decree, he was desirous that the opinion of this Court should be taken in the matter, and he suspended the operation of his order of July 1st for a fortnight for that purpose. But, in my opinion, upon the question of interfering with the discretion of the Court below, the judgment is fairly open to the criticism that, in exercising that discretion, the learned Judge has thought only of the loss, by staying execution, to the Respondent, and has not considered the danger of the Appellant losing the fruits of her appeal, if successful. This, to my mind, is a most important feature in the case, and ought to have been well and carefully weighed. Whilst giving, then, all due consideration to the views of the Court below, I do not think there is anything to prevent our interfering in the matter, if we think the facts warrant such interference.

Lastly as to the merits. No doubt the Respondent has got a decree in his favour, based, it is said, upon a strongly expressed judgment. He is entitled to rely upon this and to throw the onus on the Appellant of satisfying us, why he should be deprived of the immediate fruits of his victory. But the position of the Respondent is not, for present purposes, a very strong one. He was the gomasta of the testator, apparently his managing man: he is a Marwari, and, so far as I can learn, not a British subject, but a subject of the Bikaner Raj, and moreover, he is admittedly insolvent, and has no means with which to discharge the insolvency proceedings, save out of the estate, the subject-matter of this litigation. There is evidence too, that, immediately after the testator's death, he took the earliest opportunity of disposing of the testator's money securities and jewels and other property, though this is denied by him. But apart from his interest in the testator's estate, it is clear that the Respondent is a person of no means, and in embarrassed circumstances, and the Appellant says that if he is allowed to get hold of this estate, he will probably realize everything he can, and as quickly as he can, and then go off to Bikaner, and that, if she is successful, her victory will be purely a barren one. On the other hand the Respondent says that, after a long trial, the Will has been found to be valid, that the bulk of the estate is consequently his; that it is very hard that he should be kept out of his money, and that, as the testator's businesses are not being carried on, he is suffering very great, and, as he says, irreparable loss. We must look at both sides of the question.

I am satisfied, on the whole that, having regard to the position of the Respondent, the Appellant has good ground for her fears, and that there is a danger that, unless execution be stayed, her appeal which is undoubtedly a bond fide one, if successful, is likely to be infructuous. There can be no doubt that substantial loss may result to the Appellant unless an order is made staying execution. Then what ought we to do under these circumstances? In my opinion we ought to see that the property is preserved pending the litigation, and that we may safely follow the principle laid down in the English Courts in such cases as Polini v. Grey (5) and

Wilson v. Church (6), a principle which is fully recognized by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases of Miharani Inder Kumari v. Maharani Jaipal Kumari (7) and Mohesh Chandra Dhal v. Satrugan Dhal and others (8). It is perfectly true that the facts of these particular cases were different from those in the present, but the underlying principle is the same. In Polini v. Grey (5) Sir George Jessel said "the Plaintiffs fail in the Court of first instance and in the Court of second instance, but are about, bond fide, to prosecute an appeal to the Court of ultimate resort. The Plaintiffs allege that that appeal will be nugatory if the fund is paid out to the Defendants, and that if the Plaintiffs should ultimately succeed in the House of Lords, that success will be useless to them unless an interim order is made for preserving the fund. I say they so contend and, assuming that contention to be correct in fact, the question is, whether this Court has jurisdiction to prevent such a consequence. It appears to me on principle that the Court ought to possess that jurisdiction, because the principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is this, that the successful party in the litigation, that is, the ultimately successful party is to reap the fruits of that litigation, and not obtain merely a barren success," and at p. 445 the learned Judge continues: "The Court having arrived at the conclusion that the appeal is bond fide, that she intends to prosecute it with a view to determine her rights, and to get a final decision on those rights, and the Court, I assume (for I do not know the facts) being satisfied that there would be danger if it were not to interfere for the interim protection of the fund, of its not being forthcoming if she succeeded in the House of Lords, the question is, is it not the duty of this Court to say that the fund ought to be preserved for the successful party?" And Lord Justice Cotton expresses in effect the same view.

In my opinion, then, the probate ought not to be handed out to the Respondent, nor ought the Receiver to be discharged. But this must be done on terms. The Appellant must undertake to expedite the appeal with all reasonable despatch, and she must give, as she has offered, security for any damages which may accrue to the testator's estate by reason of this stay. The Respondent will have liberty to apply to the Court below that the Receiver may be ordered to pay him out of the estate such sum as that Court may deem reasonable in respect of the costs he has already incurred in the litigation, as also those of the pending appeal, and upon such terms as to security, or otherwise, as it may think proper, and also to apply to the Court if he so desire, that the Receiver may be at liberty to carry on the testator's business which apparently he has been ordered by the Court not to do. He may also have liberty to apply to this Court, if the appeal be not duly expedited, and also as to advancing the hearing of the appeal when it is ready for hearing. As regards the costs of this appeal, though ordinarily the Appellant should pay them as he comes to the Court for a favour, as every point has been so hotly contested by the Respondent who has failed throughout, it would be inequitable to apply that rule in the present case, and the costs will be costs in the appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No: 1000 OF 1899.

RAMPINI, J. SHEIKH KARBAN ALI and GUPTA, J. anr., Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.

1901. SHEIKH JAFAR ALI and ors.,
22, May. Defendants, Respondents.

Record-of-rights—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Chap. X, secs. 105, 106—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13—Settlement proceeding—Entry of rent—Procedure.

Sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that during the pendency of the draft publication any person affected by an entry in the record may raise an "objection" with regard to it, which the Revenue Officer is to "receive" and "consider" and dispose of in a summary manner. From an order disposing of such an "objection" there would be no appeal and no second appeal, and the order cannot have the effect of res judicata.

A "dispute" under sec. 106 is to be "heard" and "decided" by the Revenue Officer under the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits and is subject to appeal and second appeal, and an order, disposing of such a "dispute" will have the effect of res judicata.

DENGU KAZI v. NOBIN KISHORE CHOWDHRAIN (1) considered and explained.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of May 1899, against the decree of A. E. Staley, Esq., Special Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 22nd of February 1899, reversing the decree of Babu Charu Chunder Kumar, Assistant Settlement Officer of Mozufferpore, dated the 4th of November 1898.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Appellants.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Mozufferpore, in a settlement proceeding.

The Settlement Officer had upon the application of certain raiyats held that their rents should be entered as Rs. 13-6-6 instead of Rs. 29-4-6 as alleged by their landlord. On appeal to the District Judge, he held on the authority of the case of Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kishore Chowdhrain (1), that the matter is res judicata, as there had previously been a dispute between the parties in the course of which, viz., on the 16th December 1896, the rent had been found to be as alleged by the landlords (the Respondents before us).

The raiyat Appellants now urge that the matter is not res judicata, as the previous decision of the Settlement Officer was passed in a case under sec. 105, and was not passed between the same parties as the parties to the present suit.

It is not clear from the previous order itself whether it was passed in a case under sec. 105, or one under sec. 106. The Judge, however, describes it as having been passed in a case under sec. 105, but on the authority of Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kishore Chowdhrain (1) seems to think it must be regarded as having been passed in a case under sec. 106 and so, having the force of a decree, must bar the present suit. There is no doubt much in the order of reference and in the judgments in Dengu Kazi's case which favours this view, for in that case it has been held that when a dispute arises about an entry in the record-of-rights, whether during the pendency of the publication of the draft record or even before the making of any particular entry in it, and when such a dispute is decided by the Settlement Officer, his decision is to be regarded as one in a case under sec. 106, from which a second appeal lies under sec. 108, sub-sec. 3. But it must be considered, in the first place, what the two secs. 105 and 106 mean, and in the next place, what the case of Dengu Kazi (1) has decided.

Clearly, we think sec. 105 means to lay down that during the pendency of the draft publication any person affected by an entry in the record may raise an "objection" with regard to it, which the Revenue Officer is to "receive" and "consider," and dispose of in a summary manner. From an order disposing of such an "objection," there would seem to be no appeal [for the Revenue Officer's order is not a decision within the meaning of sec. 108, sub-sec. (2)] and no second appeal, and the order cannot have the effect of res judicata.

On the other hand, a "dispute" under sec. 106 is to be "heard" and "decided" by the Revenue Officer under "the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits" (sec. 107), and is subject to appeal [sec. 108, sub-sec. (2)], and second appeal [sec. 108, sub-sec. (3)]. Such appears to have been the intention of the legislature. The question then is "How far has the Full Bench decision in Dengu Kazi's case (1) altered this?" In this case a dispute had arisen between the landlord and tenant in certain settlement proceedings, which was decided by the Settlement Officer in what he described as a case under sec. 106. When this case came in second appeal before this Court, it was objected that there was no second appeal, as when the case was decided, no record-of-rights had been completed or published and so, on the authority of the cases of Gopi Nath Masat v. Adoitonak (2) and Anand Lal v. Shib Chunder Mukerji (3) it was contended that the case had been decided not under sec. 106 but under sec. 105.

Now the decision in Dengu Kazi's case (1), as we understand it, lays it down that a "dispute" may arise at any time both before and after the publication of the draft record and before the record is made, and that whenever a dispute arises in this way and is decided under sec. 106 it is open to second appeal. The Full Bench does not seem to us to mean to lay down that when an "objection" is made under sec. 105 and is "received" and "considered" by the Revenue Officer, i.e., summarily, without following "the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits," his order disposing of it will be open to either appeal or second appeal, or will have the effect of res judicata.

In the present suit, the previous order of the Revenue Officer is described by the Judge as one under sec. 105, and we have examined it and it appears to us to be an order under sec. 105; for the Revenue Officer in disposing of it does not seem to have adopted "the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits." Hence we do not think it can have the effect of res judicata.

The Appellant's objection that the previous order is not between the same parties as the present suit is founded on the fact that in the previous order the name of the landlord is recorded as Sultan Ali, while in the present suit the names of the landlords are Karban Ali and Sultan Ali—that is to say, there is an additional landlord in the present suit. It may be, however, that Karban Ali was a party to the case under sec. 105, though his name does not appear in the form in which the Revenue Officer has recorded his order. We could not decide this question without having the whole record of sec. 105 case before us. We therefore do not rest our decision on this ground.

SHEIKH KARBAN ALI v. SHEIKH JAFAR ALI.

For these reasons we consider that the Judge is wrong in holding that the present suit is barred by res judicata.

We accordingly set aside his decree and remand the case to him to be disposed of on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2627 OF 1898.

DURGA MOHUN DAS

and others, Defendants,

Appellants,

v.

RAKHAL CHANDRA ROY

CHOWDHURY and ors.,

Respondents.

Permanent tenancy—Long possession and instances of transfer and succession—Notice—Homestead land in Municipal town.

The fact of long possession and instances of transfer and succession may raise a presumption in favour of the permanency of a tenancy. •

TARUK PODO GHOSAI v. SHYAMA CHURN NAPIT (1), PROSUNNO COOMAREE v. SHEIKH RUTTON BEPARY (2) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd of December 1898, against the decree of Babu Shyam Chand Dhar, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Backergunge, dated the 17th of September 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Tara Pada Chatterjee, Munsif, 6th Court of Barisal, dated the 20th of July 1891.

The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment after notice to quit. The land is homestead situated in the town of Barisal within its Municipal jurisdiction. One Ram Sundar Dutta was the tenant of the land in karsa right; from him the Defendant No. 1 since deceased and the father of Defendant No. 2 purchased the tenant's right and were recognised by the Plaintiffs who received rent from them; the Defendant No. 2 was alleged to have sold his 8 annas to the Defendant No. 3 or his wife Manikya, Mala in regard to which fact there was a controversy between the parties. Manikya Mala was added as Defendant No. 5; and Defendant No. 4 was said to be on the land as sub-lessee. The question was whether the holding was one which could be terminated by notice and whether the Defendants could be ejected.

• With regard to the question as to whether the tenancy was permanent and also as to the question of notice the Subordinate Judge in delivering judgment observed as follows:—

“There is no evidence in support of the origin of the tenancy the terms of which are also not known. The land may have been used for residential purpose, but it does not appear whether it was let by the landlord expressly for any such purpose, and admittedly there is no pucca but only katoha house on it. The Defendant No. 1 was on friendly terms with the Plaintiffs, and the Defendant No. 2's father was the translator of the District Judge's Court in which he practised as a pleader and the Plaintiffs out of friendship or any other similar consideration may have acknowledged the purchase of the Defendant No. 1 and Defendants No. 2's father and realized rent from the Defendant No. 2 as they did from the Defendant No. 1 and the Defendant No. 2's father but these facts do not constitute the tenancy as a permanent one. The most that can be said in the tenant's favour is that the tenancy has been in existence from before 1268, B. S., when the Plaintiffs' right accrued, but a possession for such a period as this by itself does not raise any presumption of permanency.

(1) 8 C. L. R. 50 (1881).

(2) I. L. R. 3 Cal. 698 (1877).

DURGA MOHUN DAS v. RAKHAL CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY.

There is no obligation on the part of the Plaintiffs to acknowledge any subsequent transfer or succession, because they admitted the purchase or succession of any tenants on ground such as has been stated above and the status of the tenant in the case is no better than that of a tenant-at-will or from year to year liable to be ejected on a reasonable notice to quit, and no question of any local custom to the contrary is either suggested or established. In coming to the conclusion at which I have arrived, I have been guided by the cases of Taruk Podo Ghosal v. Shyama Churn Napit (1) and Prosunno Coomaree v. Sheikh Rutton Bepary (2) cited on the side of the Appellants."

The evidence shows that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were the real tenants were served with reasonable notices to quit. The transfer by the Defendant No. 2 is not acknowledged by the Plaintiffs who are not bound to admit the tenancy of the transferee. There is a controversy as to whether the Defendant No. 3 or his wife Manikya Mala who is the added Defendant No. 5 is the real transferee. The kobala may stand in her name but they live jointly and the evidence of late Babu Durga Mohun Das shows that the Defendant No. 3 has been in possession of the purchased share. That being so, the Defendant No. 3 may be taken as the beneficial transferee. No question of estoppel as pleaded by the Defendant No. 5 arises in the case. The Plaintiffs are not bound to serve the Defendant No. 5 with a notice but they have thought it fit to serve the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 with reasonable notices although they were not bound to do so. No other question has been pressed.

The appeal was accordingly decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Chandra Kant Sen for the Appellants.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee and Babu Sarat Chander Dutt for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows :—

BANERJEE, J.—In this appeal which arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Respondents for ejectment of the Defendants-Appellants upon notice to quit, two contentions have been raised on behalf of the Appellants; first, that the Court of Appeal below has not tried the question whether the fact of long possession and the instances of transfer and succession proved in the case raised any legitimate presumption in favour of the permanency of the tenancy; and, second, that, upon the question of notice, the Court of Appeal below has come to no sufficient finding as to whether the notices were reasonable.

Upon the first question, it is argued for the Appellant that the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court of Appeal below has merely found that neither the length of possession, nor the transfer and succession proved, can make the tenancy a permanent one, overlooking the real question for consideration, namely, whether from the length of possession and the instances of transfer and succession proved in the case, a reasonable presumption may not arise in favour of the permanency of the Defendant's tenancy; and it is urged that the concluding part of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court where the learned Subordinate Judge says "in coming to the conclusion at which I have arrived, I have been guided by the case of Taruk Podo Ghosal v. Shyama Churn Napit (1) and Prosunno Coomaree v. Sheikh Rutton Bepary (2) cited on the side of the Appellant," goes to support the view that the distinction referred to above has been overlooked. On the other hand, it is argued for the Respondents, that there is one passage, at least, in the judgment where the learned Subordinate Judge says, "the most that can be said in the tenant's favour is that the tenancy has been in existence from before 1268, B. S., when the Plaintiffs' right accrued, but a possession for such a period as this, by itself, does not raise any presumption of permanency," which would go to show that the learned Subordinate Judge has had his mind directed to the question whether the facts proved in the case were, or were not, sufficient to raise a presumption in favour of the tenancy being permanent. The passage in the judgment, just quoted, no doubt goes to a certain extent, to support the contention on behalf of the Respondents. But it does not fully meet the contention on the other side. For all that the learned Subordinate Judge there says is that long possession by itself is not sufficient in this case to raise any presumption of permanency. Has he then any where else in his judgment considered the combined effect of the length of possession that is proved and the instances of transfer and succession in supporting a presumption in favour of the permanency of the tenure? It was argued for the Respondents that the effect of the transfer and succession proved in the case has been separately dealt with, and they have been considered by the lower Appellate Court as being attributable to the friendly feeling subsisting between the parties and therefore not warranting any presumption in favour of the permanency of the tenure. But in the first place, the part of the judgment dealing with these two matters, namely, the instances of transfer and succession, is not very clear, and, then, in the second place, what was necessary for the learned Subordinate Judge to have found was, whether, as a matter of fact, the instances of transfer and succession proved in the case together with the length of possession shown did not, as their combined effect, warrant a presumption in favour of the permanency of the tenure.

In saying this, we must not be understood as indicating in any way an opinion in favour of the tenancy being a permanent one. We cannot in second appeal do this, and we do not therefore indicate any opinion of ours in favour of one side or the other upon this question. But we think it necessary, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may come to a finding, as to whether, the length of possession and the instances of transfer and succession taken together, are sufficient to support any presumption in favour of the tenancy being a permanent one.

Upon the second question also we think that the finding is somewhat defective; and the defect we find in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge upon the question of notice is, that the judgment does not say what time was granted by the notice. All that is found is, that the evidence showed that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were the real tenants, were served with reasonable notice to quit.

We may in this connection refer to the case of Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar (3) to show that the notice ought to be a six months' notice in order that it may be considered to be a reasonable one, whether the Transfer of Property Act applies to the case, or not. The case must therefore go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may dispose it of, after determining the two questions referred to above. The costs will abide the result.

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 720 (1897).

DURGA MOHUN DAS v. RAKHAL CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY.

MACLEAN, C. J.—I agree, though. I think that the case is very near the line. I only wish to add that I do not desire it to be understood by our judgment that we are expressing any opinion as to whether the evidence on the record justifies the presumption of the tenure being a permanent one. That is to be decided by the Court on the remand.

Case remanded.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 236 OF 1899.

HILL, J.	METHURAM DASS,
HARINGTON, J.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
1901.	v.
26, July.	JAGGAN NATH DASS,
	Defendant, Respondent.

Right of suit—Words spoken in answer to a question put by a police-officer conducting an investigation, whether actionable—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882 and Act V of 1898.)

A person who, in answer to a question put to him by a police-officer conducting an investigation under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, stated that the Plaintiff was concerned in the commission of the crime then being investigated, cannot be made liable in an action for damages for words so spoken.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOVINDA PILLAI (1),
GOFFIN v. DONNELLY (2), DAWKINS v. LORD
ROKEBY (3) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1899, against the decree of Babu Sarbessur Mazumdar, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Julpaiguri, dated the 10th October 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Kanti Chandra Mookerjee, Munsif of Julpaiguri, dated the 11th of February 1898.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhury for the Appellant.

Moulvi Serajul Islam for the Respondent.

The sole question in this appeal is whether the Defendant who, in answer to a question put to him by a police-officer conducting an investigation under the provisions of Act X of 1882, stated that the Plaintiff was concerned in the commission of the crime then being investigated, can be made liable in an action for damages for words so spoken.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has held on the authority of Queen-Empress v. Govinda Pillai (1) that no action would under such circumstances lie, and we think that his decision is correct. A person, as was pointed out in that case, examined by a police-officer conducting an investigation under Act X of 1882, was bound by sec. 161 of the Act to answer truly all questions put to him, and on that ground the learned Judges considered that he was entitled to the same protection as that extended to witnesses in a Court of Justice. This view derives support from the cases of Goffin v. Donnelly (2) and Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (3). In the former the Court of Queen's Bench held that a person giving evidence before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to enquire into the circumstances attending the suspension of the certificate of the Plaintiff who was a school master was absolutely privileged in respect of the evidence he gave. "For the purposes of such enquiries" it was said, "committees are appointed and require the attendance of witnesses. If persons so required to attend did not attend, they would be committed for contempt. If they do attend they must answer the questions asked of them and may be examined on oath. The evidence given is, therefore, as much given under compulsion as in the case of a Court of law." So in Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (3) it was held that statements made by a witness before a Military Court of enquiry were privileged in the same way as evidence given in a Court of Justice. Such a Court is not however a judicial body, nor can it administer an oath, but officers of the army are compellable to attend such Courts, if required to do so by competent military authority, and to give evidence, and it was upon this ground that the answer of the Judges to the question proposed to them by the Lord Chancellor and adopted by the House of Lords proceeded. The Lord Chief Baron in answering the question proposed, after referring to the immunity enjoyed by witnesses in Courts of Justice, in respect of statements by them disparaging to another and to the reason for the rule went on to say: "In the present case it appears in the bill of exceptions that the words and writing complained of were published by a military man bound to appear and give testimony before a Court of Inquiry; all that he said and wrote had reference to that enquiry: and we can see no reason why public policy should not equally prevent an action being brought against such a witness as against one giving evidence in an ordinary Court of Justice." And the Lord Chancellor in summarising the circumstances of the case said: "Your Lordships have it in the bill of exceptions that it was an enquiry connected with the discipline of the army: it was an enquiry warranted by the Queen's Regulations and orders for the army: it was called for by the General Commanding-in-Chief in pursuance of these Regulations; and the Defendant in the action was called upon that enquiry as a witness, as a person who was required to make statements relevant to the enquiry which was then being conducted, and it was in the course of that enquiry that these statements were made."

In the present case the investigation was required by law: it was conducted under the provisions of the law, it was ancillary to the administration of justice: the Defendant was bound by law to answer all questions put to him by the police-officer conducting the investigation, and was punishable if he answered untruly and what was said by him had reference to the matter under investigation. Virtually the only distinctions between his position and that of an ordinary witness arise from the fact that his statement was not made in a Court of Justice, and we see no reason accordingly, to use the language of the Lord Chief Baron cited above, why public policy should not equally prevent an action being brought against him as against a witness in an ordinary Court of Justice.

We think accordingly that the suit was not maintainable and that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[ON APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	RAJA PADMANUND
LORD DAVEY.	SINGH and ors.,
LORD ROBERTSON.	Plaintiffs,
SIR R. COUCH.	Appellants,
1901.	v.
Heard, 19, June.	HAYES and ors.,
Judgment,	Defendants,
13, July.	Respondents.

Hindu law—Estate for life—Grant of a moiety thereof to children of the grantee, effect of—Estate of inheritance—Person unborn at the time of execution of the grant—Equity—Specific performance—Construction.

A grant of the whole of an estate to a person for his life and as to a moiety thereof to his children and descendants after his death, with a restriction as to the power of alienation either by the grantee or his descendants, does not confer on the grantee an inheritable estate as to the latter moiety and an heir of the grantee not in existence at the time of such grant is, in Hindu law, incapable of taking thereunder.

BHOOBUN MOHINI DEBIA v. HURRISH CHUNDER CHOWDHRY (1) distinguished.

The fact that for some time after the death of the grantee, the grantor treated his heir, who was not in existence at the time of the grant, as entitled thereunder, does not create an equity in favour of such heir and the latter is not entitled to specific performance of the agreement under which the grant was made.

A Division Bench of the High Court composed of O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ., had on appeal reversed the decision of the District Judge of Purneah and decreed to Plaintiff only one-half of the village in suit Alakjbhari while the District Judge had decreed the whole of it and Plaintiffs had in their amended plaint claimed the whole. The Plaintiffs thereupon preferred this appeal.

The facts were that that village and others were given by Raja Lilanund Singh, the Appellant's father, to his daughter Jogmaya Dai absolutely.

The Appellant on coming of age disputed the right of his father to make such gift of ancestral property and brought a suit to contest it. That suit was compromised in 1874, a pattah was granted of the village in dispute to Jogmaya Dai and she in the same terms executed a kabuliyat.

The terms of the pattah and kabuliyat were, mutatis mutandis, as follows:—

I, Kumar Padmanund Singh, also wish that the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai, my sister, and her children should be maintained and supported, and the said

RAJA PADMANUND SINGH v. HAYES.

Dai also considering the right of me, Kumar Padmanund Singh, and with a view to compromise the suit, consented to relinquish her right which she had acquired under the said deeds sought to be set aside, and a compromise has been effected between us through the intervention of Mr. George Nelson Barlow, C.S.I., Commissioner of Zillah Bhagulpore, to the following effect, viz., the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai shall get an allowance of Rs. 6,000 per annum during her lifetime, and her descendants who may, under the Hindu law, become her heirs, shall get one-half thereof in perpetuity, and in lieu of the same whatever profits the mouzahs which are held by the said Mussamat Jogmaya Dai under the deeds sought to be set aside may yield annually over and above Rs. 6,000, being fixed as the jumma of those mouzahs, the said mouzahs shall be left in the possession of the said Jogmaya Dai, and on the death of the said Dai one-half of the said mouzahs shall permanently remain in the possession of her descendants, who may be alive at that time and may be (her) heirs according to the Shastras on a jumma equal to one-half of the said jumma. The person holding possession of the property shall never have any right to alienate, i.e., to effect any sale, gift or mortgage or permanent mokurari of the whole or a portion of the said properties. Therefore, we, the declarants, in effecting and enforcing the said compromise have, of our own free-will and accord, granted this pattah in respect to the said mouzah Duleri Alakjhari, a permanent jagir mehal in pergunnah Powakhali, Zillah Purneah, and the said mouzah Barapati Rahoa, otherwise called Lalgunge, towzi No. 3524, and sudder jumma Rs. 820-3-2 pies within the jurisdiction of the Bhagulpore Collectorate, from 1282 Fusli on the annual jumma of Rs. 1,234, by taking a kabuliyat, to Srimati Jogmaya Dai, daughter of me Raja Lilanund Singh Bahadoor, and sister of me Kumar Padmanund Singh, on the conditions specified below, by cancelling the former settlement and deeds. It is required that the said lessee and her descendants should permanently remain in possession by carrying out the conditions given below, and that they shall never act contrary to this pattah.

"1. Srimati Jogmaya Dai, the lessee, shall remain in possession of the aforesaid properties during her lifetime and pay to us, the declarants and our representatives, Rs. 1,234, the annual jumma as per instalments given below, by taking receipts for the same. On the death of the said lessee, her descendants who may, according to the Shastras, become her heirs, shall permanently remain in possession of one-half of the properties mentioned in the pattah and pay the annual jumma of Rs. 617 year after year as per instalments given below to us the declarants and our heirs and representatives, and take receipts for the same. The remaining one-half of the properties mentioned in the pattah shall, from the time of the death of the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai, revert to the Raj, and the descendants of the lessee shall not get possession of the same.

"2. The lessee or her descendants, who may come into possession in the manner specified in the preceding paragraph, shall not have any power to transfer the property mentioned in the pattah by sale, gift, mortgage or permanent mokurari or in any other way, and such alienation shall not be valid, and the transferee shall not have any right to hold possession under such transfer.

"3. The amount of jumma which will have to be paid in the manner specified in paragraph 1, shall never be reduced or increased, and we, the declarants, and our representatives shall never interfere in the possession of the lessee and her heirs, who are or will be entitled under the conditions of this pattah; and with the exception of receiving the fixed jumma we, the declarants, or our representatives shall have no further right at all.

"4. If there be no descendants of the lessees, i.e., children born of her womb or their children, we, the declarants and our representatives, have and shall have power to resume and take possession of the remaining one-half of the said mouzahs which have been permanently settled for maintenance, and the properties mentioned in the pattah shall revert to the Raj. Be it known that this maintenance has been fixed only for the lessee and her al-aolad (descendants, i.e., children born of her womb) and their descendants, and that the husband of the lessee or step-son or step-daughter of the lessee and other persons, who are not included in the category of the descendants of the lessee as stated above, shall not be entitled to get the said mouzah. But those persons are included in the category of al-aolad (descendants) who are not even the descendants in the first decree, i.e., the descendants of children born of womb also are included in this category, and when there are several descendants, such one or more of them who may be the nearest in relation according to the Shastras, anyone among them whom the lessee or the person holding possession may declare to be the rightful heir, shall be entitled to succeed. But the adopted son or kurtaputra is not and shall not be included in the category of descendants."

Raja Lilanund died in 1883. In June 1885 Jogmaya Dai executed a mortgage of the village in suit to Defendant, Dharm Chand, for an advance of Rs. 20,000 and gave him a lease for 10 years so as to secure to him possession. The lease was benami in the name of two of Dharm Chand's servants.

In 1877 the Respondent, Bholanath Jha, a minor grandson, (daughter's son) of Jogmaya was born.

Jogmaya Dai died in April 1889.

In 1890 the Appellant gave directions to his Patwari that he was to collect rents of  $\frac{1}{2}$  the mouzah which on the death of Jogmaya reverted to the Raj of Banali, that is, the Plaintiffs' Raj.

In 1892 notices were served on the mortgagee intimating that Plaintiffs had come to hear of the said mortgage and lease to Dharm Chand, that they were invalid and informing the mortgagee that they had no right to hold the village under such transfers by Jogmaya Dai. Not receiving satisfaction the present suit was at first instituted for a declaration of the Plaintiffs' title to a moiety of the abovenamed village and to recover possession thereof. But before any written statements had been filed, the Plaintiffs applied for leave to amend the plaint, so as to include the whole village, being advised "that in consequence of the death of Mussamat Jogmaya Dai, the Plaintiffs have become entitled to get possession of not only a moiety, but of the whole 16 annas of the mokurari property, because at the time when the said mokurari deed was executed in favour of Jogmaya Dai, Bholanath Jha was not born, and that according to the Hindu Shastras the said mokurari tenure could not continue to exist as valid on the death of the said Jogmaya Dai. The said Srimati Jogmaya had, under the terms of the said mokurari pattah, a life-interest only, and as Bholanath was not then in existence he could not acquire any right thereunder."

The District Judge held that the lady had no power to execute those documents and the Plaintiffs were not bound by them.

The High Court (O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.), on the Defendant Dharm Chand's appeal, referring to the said notice issued to the Patwari, said :—

"It will be seen from this document that the present Plaintiffs then declared that they were entitled to only eight annas of the rent of the village, and that the remaining eight annas belonged to the descendants of the lady who were bound to hold under the conditions of the lease entered into at the time when the family settlement took place, and to pay their rent into the Plaintiffs' cutchery. The Plaintiffs in that perwana to the Patwari pointed out clearly that from the month of Bysack of the current year, that is, from the beginning of the year, the Patwari should only collect eight annas of the rent due to them, and they directed the Patwari to remit that to the cutchery. They also pointed out how the rent was to be entered in the receipts given to all raiyats, so as to show that the other eight annas belonged to the lady's descendants. This clearly shews that from Bysack, 1297, the Plaintiffs treated the old lease given by them to the lady as an existing lease under which they were entitled to have only eight annas of the rents of the village, and the remainder eight annas remained in possession of her descendants on payment of rent. The Plaintiffs have not contended that they have since then received any conveyance or lease of the remaining eight annas from the descendant of the lady then entitled under the lease."

And they conclude their judgment, which is virtually based on that document, as follows :—

"The Judge in the Court below gave the Plaintiffs possession of the whole village with mesne profits.

"It was argued at the Bar for the Appellant that as the Plaintiffs by their own conduct determined on carrying out the lease, and did carry it out so far as they could, Bholanath should receive eight annas of the rents; and the Plaintiffs not having based their claim on anything done since that year, the Judge in the Court below was wrong in giving them possession and wasilat of the whole 16 annas of the village. It was also argued that as Bholanath was admittedly entitled to eight annas share of the rent, the Plaintiffs could only get possession of the remaining eight annas share.

"On the other hand the Respondents replied by stating that the pattah and kabuliyat entered up in terms of the decree between the three relatives, could not, according to the Hindu law, pass the estate.

RAJA PADMANUND SINGH v. HAYES.

"The Respondents did not, nor could they, we think, deny that Bholanath had not, in terms of the agreement, an equity against the Plaintiffs to carry out the arrangement.

"We are of opinion that Bholanath, under the terms of the family settlement and the decree passed thereon, had a right to specific performance of the agreement, and to compel the Plaintiffs to give him a legal title, if they refused. But instead of refusing, the Plaintiffs acquiesced in Bholanath's right, treated him as legal owner and gave him possession, so far as they could, by the intimation they gave to the raiyats and servants in 1297. We think, therefore, that the Plaintiffs cannot succeed in getting a declaration that Bholanath cannot now hold the property as the legal owner or that they can dispossess him from his eight annas share.

"We, therefore, cannot agree with the Judge in the Court below in holding that the Plaintiffs are entitled to possession and wasilat of the whole sixteen annas of the property as against Bholanath and the persons connected with the mortgage transaction. We think, however, that they have a right to a declaration that, as against them, the mortgage made by the lady is not binding; and in modification of the decree of the lower Court, we direct that the Plaintiffs be put in possession of eight annas share of the property, with wasilat, according to the amount fixed by the lower Court. Each party to pay his own costs in both Courts."

In this appeal Mr. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellants contended that such decision was erroneous, that on the death of Jogmaya Dai there was no one capable of taking having regard to the terms of the pattah and kabuliyat. The donee must be a person in existence capable of taking when the gift took effect, that condition was not fulfilled in this case. There was no vested interest conferred on anyone of Jogmaya's descendants until her death. Jogmaya Dai was only given a life interest, and there could be no ratification of what was void and not voidable, Maharani Beni Pershad v. Dudhnath Roy (2).

Mr. Cowell for the Respondents contended that upon a proper construction of those documents, so long as a lineal descendant of Jogmaya Dai was alive, the Appellants have no right to possession of one moiety of the village; she took an absolute estate of inheritance in that moiety defeasible only on the happening of events which did not occur.

He read passages from the Tagore case (3), cited Bhoobun Mohini's case (1) and Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishore (4).

LORD HOBHOUSE to Mr. Cowell.—Is there any reason given by the High Court for disregarding the objection to Bholanath not taking because he was not alive in 1874. I can find none.

RAJA PADMANUND SINGH v. HAYES.

pattah (lease) made by Raja Lilanund Singh, the father of the Appellant Padmanund Singh, and by the latter on the 27th June 1874. After reciting two deeds of gift by which Lilanund Singh gave to his daughter Srimati Jogmaya Dai two mouzahs therein described for her maintenance and that of her descendant with power to alienate the properties, that the properties were ancestral and at the time of the gift his son the first Appellant was a minor, that a suit for setting aside the deeds had been brought on the part of Padmanund Singh on the ground of their being illegal and was pending decision, that with a view to compromise the suit Jogmaya consented to relinquish the right which she had acquired under the deeds and a compromise had been effected through the intervention of the Commissioner of Bhagulpore to the effect that Jogmaya "shall get an allowance of Rs. 6,000 per annum during her lifetime, and her descendants who may under the Hindu law become her heirs shall get one-half thereof in perpetuity and in lieu of the same whatever profits the mouzahs which are held by the said Mussamat Jogmaya Dai under the deeds sought to be set aside may yield annually over and above Rs. 6,000 being fixed at the junma of those mouzahs, the said mouzahs shall be left in the possession of the said Jogmaya Dai and on the death of the said Dai one-half of the said mouzahs shall permanently remain in the possession of her descendants who may be alive at that time and be [her] heirs according to the Shastras on a junma equal to one-half of the said junma. The person holding possession of the property shall never have any right to alienate, i.e., to effect any sale, gift or mortgage or permanent mokurari of the whole or a portion of the said properties." The Raja and his son in effecting the compromise granted the pattah of the two mouzahs to Jogmaya Dai on the conditions specified by cancelling the former deeds. The conditions specified are that Jogmaya Dai should remain in possession of the properties during her lifetime and pay to the lessors Rs. 1,234 the annual junma and on her death her descendants who might, according to the Shastras, become her heirs should permanently remain in possession of one-half of the properties and pay the annual junma of Rs. 617, that the lessee or her descendants should not have any power to transfer the property and if there should be no descendants of the lessee, i.e., children born of her womb or their children the lessors and their representatives should have power to resume and to take possession of the remaining one-half and the properties mentioned in the pattah should revert to the Raj.

On the same 27th June Jogmaya Dai executed a kabuliyat (counterpart) in which the terms of the compromise are stated to be substantially, though not in the same words, the same as in the pattah.

The facts upon which the question in this appeal arises are these: On the 3rd June 1883 Raja Lilanund Singh died. In June 1885 Jogmaya Dai mortgaged one of the mouzahs in the pattah called Duleri Alakjhari to Dharam Chand Lal since deceased, now represented by the Respondents his executors and two other persons whose interests were afterwards acquired by him. She also gave a lease for ten years of the mouzah to Dharam Chand Lal in the names of two of his servants. Jogmaya died on the 9th April 1889 and on the 22nd March 1892 notice was given to the mortgagees and the lessees for 10 years to quit possession of the mouzahs. On the 7th April 1893 a suit was brought by Padmanund Singh and two other sons of Lilanund Singh minors by their guardian against Dharam Chand Lal and the other mortgagees and lessees and also against Bholanund Jha otherwise Bholanath, the grandson of Jogmaya Dai, a minor, in which the plaintiff asked that it might be held that the Plaintiffs were not bound by the mortgage and lease and that they might be put in possession of a moiety of the property without prejudice to their right to resume the other moiety in the event of there being no lineal descendants of Jogmaya Dai. On the 4th August 1893 before the Defendants had filed any written statement of their defence the Plaintiffs having learnt that Bholanath Jha was born after the death of Jogmaya Dai and being advised that as he was not in existence at the time of granting the pattah the disposition of the property so far as it would apply to him was void according to Hindu law, applied to have the plaint amended so as to claim the whole of the mouzah which was allowed. No appearance was put in on behalf of Bholanath Jha.

Upon these facts the District Judge of Purneah made a decree in the Plaintiffs' favour for possession of the whole of the mouzah in dispute with mesne profits for three years. Dharam Chand Lal appealed from it to the High Court which modified it by decreeing that the Defendants should deliver to the Plaintiffs possession of one-half only of the mouzah. The present appeal is from this decree and the question is whether the whole of the mouzah has under the terms of the pattah reverted to the Raj. Mr. Cowell who appeared for the Respondents did not dispute that Bholanath was by Hindu law incapable of taking under the pattah, not being then born, but he contended that the pattah might be construed as giving one-half of the mouzahs to Jogmaya Dai for life and the other half to her for an inheritable estate, referring in support of his contention to Bhoolun Mohini Debia and another v. Hurriah Chunder Chowdry (1). That case is distinguishable from the present as no previous life-estate was given to the person who was held to take an absolute estate and there were no words against alienation. If Jogmaya Dai took an estate of inheritance in that half the restriction in the pattah of the power to alienate would be repugnant or an attempt to take away the power which the law attaches to that estate. Jogmaya Dai could in that case at any time have disposed of that half by deed or by Will. It was plainly not intended that she should have that power. According to the ordinary meaning of the words the gift of the half is a specific one to her descendants to take effect on her death.

In the appeal to the High Court Dharam Chand Lal was the only Appellant and the question between him and the present Appellants (then Respondents) was whether the death of Jogmaya Dai had put an end to the mortgage and accompanying lease and the Appellants had thereby become entitled to the whole of the mouzahs. With regard to the meaning of the pattah the Judges of the High Court only say it was agreed that Jogmaya Dai should remain on the property during her life on the annual jumma of Rs. 1,234, and that on her death her descendants would remain in possession of one-half of the property permanently on an annual jumma of Rs. 617 and the other half should revert to the Raj. They then refer to the mortgage and subsequent proceedings setting out at full length an order of 10th Bysack, 1297 (1890), issued by the Appellants to the Patwari the purport of which is that one-half of the mouzah had on Jogmaya's death become fit to be resumed and her direct heirs, i.e., the children of her womb, ought, according to the pattah, to hold possession of the other half and they say that the Plaintiffs had only revoked that portion of the lease to the lady which dealt with one-half of the property and they treated the then descendant of the lady as the owner of the other half whom they had as far as they could put in possession. The Judges further say that "the Respondents (present Appellants) did not nor could they, we think, deny that Bholanath had not in terms of the agreement an equity against the Plaintiffs to carry out the agreement," and they were of opinion that he had a right to specific performance of the agreement and to compel the Plaintiff to give him a legal title. Their Lordships have some difficulty in following or understanding the observation of the learned Judges. They can only say that they do not agree with it and indeed they think the idea that Bholanath had any such equity is altogether erroneous. There was no ground for modifying the decree of the District Judge and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to affirm it and to reverse the decree of the High Court ordering instead of it that the appeal to it be dismissed with costs. The Respondents will pay the costs of this appeal.

(1) L. R. 5 I. A. 133 (1878).

RAJA PADMANUND SINGH v. HAYES.

SUITS NOS. 416 OF 1888 AND 45 OF 1889.

HARRINGTON, J.	{	SM. NOBIN KALLY DABEE

Arbitration—Award, application to set aside—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 158—Time from when limitation begins to run—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 516.

An application to set aside an award must be made within ten days from the time the award arrives at the Registrar's office for the purpose of being filed, and not from the time when it is filed.

This was an application by the Plaintiff for judgment in terms of the award made by the arbitrators. The Defendant on the other hand applied to have the award set aside. The principal question raised was whether the Defendant's application was within time.

The award was transmitted to the Registrar by the arbitrators on the 22nd

January. On the 30th January the award was filed, and on the 31st the Defendants applied for a copy of the award which they obtained on the 15th February. On the 20th February the Defendant gave notice of objection to the award and on the 22nd he filed his grounds of objection.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Mittra for the Plaintiffs in some of the causes.

Mr. Garth and Mr. Sinha for the Defendants.

Nobin Kally Dabee was not represented by Counsel.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

HARINGTON, J.—This is an application by the Plaintiff for judgment in accordance with the terms of the award made by arbitrators. It is opposed by the Defendant who seeks to have the award set aside. The Plaintiff objects that the Defendant's application to set aside the award is barred by the Limitation Act which provides that an application of this nature shall be made within ten days from the submission of the award to the Court.

The material dates are these :—January 22nd on which the award was transmitted to the Registrar for the purpose of being filed.

January 30th when it was actually filed. January 31st when application was made by the Defendant for a copy of the award. February 15th when the copy was given. February 20th when notice of objection was given by the Defendant. February 22nd when the Defendant filed his objections.

For the purpose of this argument I will assume in favour of the Defendant that his application is to be taken as made on the earliest date he took any steps to dispute the award, that is, the 20th February, 29 days after the award was transmitted to the Registrar and 20 days after the award was filed.

Deducting from this period the 15 days which elapsed between the application for a copy of the award and the delivery of that copy to the Defendant, a period of 14 days is left if the time is to be reckoned from the transmission of the award to the Registrar: 5 days only if time is to be reckoned from the filing of the award.

The question therefore whether the Defendant is in time depends on whether the time is to be reckoned from the transmission to the Registrar, or from the actual filing of the award.

Art. 158 of the Limitation Act of 1877 provides that the 10 days limitation is to run, in cases of applications to set aside an award under the Code of Civil Procedure, from the period when the award is submitted to the Court. Sec. 516 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides :—

“When an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them; and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties.”

It is to be observed that that section says nothing whatever about submitting an award to the Court, and the result of the language of the section is to make the meaning of the Legislature ambiguous; consequently it becomes necessary to refer to the older Acts for the purpose of seeing what the law was when the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was passed. The section, in the earlier Act of 1859 which corresponds to sec. 516 of the present Code, is in these terms :—"When an award in a suit shall be made, either by the arbitrator or arbitrators, or by the umpire, it shall be submitted to the Court under the signature of the person or persons by whom it may be made, together with all the proceedings, depositions, and exhibits in the suit."

SM. NOBIN KALLY DABER P. AMBICA CHURN BANERJEE.

That being the section which provided what the arbitrators were to do on completion of the award, there was passed the Limitation Act of 1871 and by Art. 155 of that Act it was provided that an application to set aside an award, under the Code, was to be made within 10 days from the time when the award was submitted to the Court, and notice of the submission had been given to the persons and in manner prescribed by the High Court.

Under the law as it stood previous to the passing of the Code in 1882 the time from which the 10 days had to be reckoned, depended upon the completion of the award by the arbitrators, their submitting it to the Court and the Court giving notice, and was independent of any act of the parties themselves.

That being the state of things, the present Limitation Act was passed in the same terms as the earlier Act except that all reference to notice being given to the parties is omitted.

Then comes the present sec. 516 of the Code which has altered the language of sec. 320 of the older Act. Was such an alteration intended to alter the law as to the period from which time was to run?

I do not think there was any such intention and in my opinion the time must be reckoned from the arrival of the award in the Registrar's office for the purpose of being filed and not from the time when it is actually placed on the files of the Court.

In other words it must run from the time the arbitrators have completed their duty, and not from the time the parties have paid the fees necessary for placing the award on the files of the Court. I may observe that the notice issued from the Court to the parties states that the award has been submitted to the Court.

In my opinion that notice is correct. The transmission of the award to the Registrar's office for the purpose of being filed is equivalent to the submission to the Court under the earlier Act: the time therefore must run from that period.

The result is, that the Defendant is out of time, and the Plaintiff's objection to the Defendant's application must prevail.

Mr. Mitter.—Then the Court will confirm the award and pass judgment and decree in terms of the award.

THE COURT.—Yes.

Mr. Pugh.—And this application to set aside the award will be dismissed with costs.

THE COURT.—Be it so.

Mr. S. C. Mitter, Mr. N. C. Bose and Mr. O. C. Gangooly, Attorneys for the Defendants.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1740 OF 1898.

SHAMA PROSAD GHOSE

MACLEAN, C. J. Plaintiff, Appellant,
BANERJEE, J.

1901. TAKI MULLIK and ors.,

29, June. Defendants,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 39, 560—Rehearing of appeal, heard ex parte—Limitation—Amendment—Landlord and tenant—Landlord bound to put tenant into possession—Vakalatnama, acceptance of, in writing by pleader not necessary.

An application for rehearing of an appeal presented originally within the period of limitation but returned for amendment and presented after amendment after the period of limitation, cannot be rejected as being out of time.

A landlord is bound to put the tenant into possession of the land let to him and unless and until he does this he is not entitled to the rent.

HURISH CHUNDER KOONDOL v. MOHINEE MOHUN MITTER (1) referred to.

Per BANERJEE, J.—The appointment of a pleader must be in writing and filed in Court, but his acceptance of the vakalatnama need not be in writing.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of August 1898, against the decree of Babu Balloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 16th of May 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Mohini Mohun Dutt, Munsif, 3rd Court of Diamond Harbour, dated the 7th of September 1897.

This appeal arose out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent of a jumma alleged to be 11½ bighas in area and to bear a yearly rental of Rs. 48-14 annas on a registered kabuliyat, the arrears claimed being in respect of the years 1300 to 1303, B. S. There was a prayer for ejectment of the Defendants for non-payment of rent. The defence was that out of 11½ bighas of land 2 bighas were in possession of another person, that out of the remaining 9½ bighas, 4 bighas were not fit for cultivation and that the Plaintiff had contracted to bear the expenses of bringing the land into cultivation but had not performed the contract and could not therefore get the rent of this land.

They also pleaded payment and contested their liability to ejectment. The material portion of the kabuliyat was as follows :—

“We promise by executing this kabuliyat that we will pay the whole amount of the said rent from Kartik to Falgun. Out of 11½ bighas of the said land 7½ bighas have been cleared at your expense and about 4 bighas have been found unfit for our use. That whatever cost will be required for clearing the said 4 bighas we shall receive from you and clear the whole plot within 3 months from this date. If after receiving the expenses from you, we do not bring the whole land under cultivation within 3 years and do not pay rent regularly, you will be able to eject us at once from our jote and enter into khas possession, when we shall raise no objection. If the whole land be brought under cultivation within the six years' time, you have agreed to confirm us at the expiration of the term in our jote by making a second settlement at full rate at a reduction of annas eight per bigha at mathan rate in the vicinity of the said land. After making settlement on the said conditions we will execute kabuliyat in your favour, if we do not do so, you shall be able to let out to other tenants or bring it under your khas possession, when we or our heirs will be debarred from raising any objection."

The first Court found that the 2 bighas of land, as alleged by the Defendants, were in possession of another person but that the Defendant was not liable for the rent of 4 bighas inasmuch as Plaintiff failed to prove his advance of money or the reclamation of the land by him. The first Court therefore gave a decree for rent for  $7\frac{1}{2}$  bighas of land. Against this decision Plaintiff filed an appeal and Defendant filed a cross appeal. Plaintiff's appeal was decided ex parte and a decree was made on the 18th March 1898. An application to set aside the ex parte decree was made by the Defendant on the 23rd April 1898. It was returned for amendment and the order passed was as follows:—

The application is bad in law. It does not bear the signature of the applicant. It is true it has been filed by a pleader but he never accepted a vakalatnama and none is filed in this proceeding.

Ordered:—That the application be returned for amendment and re-presentation within a week with costs Rs. 4.

The application which had been returned for amendment was presented again after amendment long after the period of limitation. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that for the purposes of limitation an amended application could be taken to have been filed on the date of the original application. On rehearing the appeal was dismissed but the cross appeal was allowed. Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Shyama Prosunno Majumdar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a rent-suit. Three points have been raised on the appeal before us. The first point is that the learned Subordinate Judge ought not to have heard the appeal de novo at the instance of the Respondent, against whom an ex parte decree had been already passed: in other words, that he ought not to have allowed the matter to be re-opened. I, however, think, that the Subordinate Judge was right in acting as he did. The point made by the present Appellant is, that the application for a retrial was out of time; and that, being out of time, the Court could not and ought not to have entertained it. But was it out of time? The ex parte decree was made on the 18th of March 1898, and the application to set it aside was made on the 28th of the same month, so that it was clearly within time, if the application were good in itself. The application was not rejected, it was returned for amendment and re-presentation, and we are told that the Court directed it to be served on the other side, and that it was in fact so served. Though irregular in certain details, the Court did not reject it, but directed its amendment. Under these circumstances it would be difficult to say that the application was out of time. The first ground of appeal then fails.

SHAMA PRASAD GHOSE v. TAKI MULLIK.

I now pass to the second point, viz., whether the tenant is bound to pay rent for the two bighas of land of which the landlord never put him into possession, and of which he has never got possession. I think the contention of the Respondent must prevail. The landlord is bound to do something more than merely sign the lease, and then say he is entitled to the rent. He is bound to put the tenant into possession of the land let to him and, unless and until he does this he is not entitled to the rent.

The last point relates to the rent of 4 bighas, the contention of the Appellant being that, under the lease, the tenant is bound to pay the rent for these bighas, whether the landlord had or had not found the money necessary to reclaim them, which he contracted to do. The tenant says he is not bound to pay this rent until the land has been reclaimed and that the reclamation of the land, at the landlord's expense was a condition precedent to the payment of the rent. This question turns upon the construction of the lease, and, I think, the Appellant's view is the sound one. There is a clear contract on the part of the tenants to pay Rs. 48-14-0 annually to the Plaintiff, and to my mind this covenant is not in any way qualified by any after part of the lease.

It is true the landlord was to provide the funds for the reclamation of the 4 bighas, and the tenant was to reclaim them within three years from the date of the lease. But there is nothing to indicate that the tenant was only to pay the rent after the land had been reclaimed. If this is what parties to this class of contract mean, they generally say so. On this part of the case the Appellant must succeed.

The result, then, is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be varied by directing the Respondent to pay the rent due in respect of the 4 bighas; and in other respects the appeal will be dismissed. As the victory is divided each party will pay his own costs of the appeal.

BANERJEE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add, with reference to the first point urged before us on behalf of the Appellant, that I do not think that the application for a rehearing under sec. 560 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was returned for amendment, was bad in law by reason of the pleader by whom it was filed not having accepted the vakalatnama authorising him to act for the Respondent. The law, sec. 39 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no doubt requires that the appointment of a pleader should be in writing and shall be filed in Court, but it does not require that the acceptance of a vakalatnama by a pleader must be in writing. It is true that the practice has been for a pleader to signify his acceptance of a vakalatnama in writing; but the absence of acceptance in writing cannot be said to vitiate the authority to act, if the pleader is authorized by the vakalatnama filed in Court to act for a party. And with reference to the second point, I would add, that the view we take that the mere execution of a kabuliyat is not sufficient to entitle the landlord to demand rent from the tenant, but the landlord must show that he put the tenant in possession, is in accordance with that taken in the case of Hurish Chunder Koondoo v. Mohinee Mohun Mitter (1).

Under sec. 232 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Appellate Court has power to order a new trial of a case in making an order on appeal.

Quere—Whether an Appellate Court has power under sec. 423 (b) to order a new trial.

This was a rule granted on the 29th January 1900, against the order of the Joint Magistrate of Dacca, affirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Dacca.

The facts of the case material to this report were these:—A complaint was lodged by Mr. G. L. Garth before the Magistrate of offences under secs. 499 and 471, I. P. Code, i.e., of defamation and of dishonestly using as genuine a forged document, against the Petitioner Gobinda Pershad Pandey. The alleged forgery consisted in affixing a false signature to a letter on which the charge of defamation proceeded. At the trial the evidence was principally directed to the charge under sec. 471, I. P. Code, but at the close of the trial, the Magistrate convicted the accused of defamation, although there was no charge of that offence before him.

On appeal, the Sessions Judge of Dacca found fault with the proceedings of the Magistrate and after considering the irregularity in the trial from the absence of any charge of defamation, he held that it had seriously prejudiced the accused and had in fact resulted in a failure of justice. He further found that there was no evidence to shew that the complainant had been injuriously affected by such alleged defamation and that the evidence on the record was not sufficient to establish that offence. He thereupon held under sec. 423 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure that he had authority to order a new trial and passed an order accordingly.

Thereupon the Petitioner obtained the present rule, and on his behalf it was contended that the Appellate Court had no general power under sec. 423 (b), Cr.

GOVIND PRASAD PANDAY v. THE EMPRESS.

P. C., to order a new trial, that when that Court found that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the offence, it ought to have acquitted the accused, and lastly that this Court should stay further proceedings in the matter, as no valid charge could be preferred against the accused.

Mr. P. L. Roy, with Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. R. Das, with Babu Ganendra Mohun Das, for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Magistrate had before him a complaint of defamation as well as of dishonestly using a forged document under sec. 471, I. P. C. The alleged forgery consisted in affixing a false signature to a letter on which the charge of defamation proceeded. At the trial, the evidence was no doubt principally directed to the charge under sec. 471, and it appears that, at the close of the trial, the Magistrate suddenly turned round and convicted the accused of defamation, having no charge before him of that offence. On appeal the Sessions Judge very properly found fault with such proceedings. He seems, however, to have followed the Magistrate into an error regarding the evidence necessary to prove the offence of defamation, for he points out that there is no evidence to show that the complainant has been injuriously affected by such alleged defamation. That, however, is not necessary to constitute an offence of defamation, as defined in sec. 499, I. P. C. The law requires merely that there should be an intent, that the person who makes or publishes any imputation should do so intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person. The Sessions Judge, after considering the irregularity in the trial from the absence of any charge, seems to have held that it seriously prejudiced the accused so as to have in fact occasioned a failure of justice and he also seems to have considered that the evidence on the record was not sufficient to establish that offence. He thereupon under sec. 423 (b), Cr. P. C., held that he had authority to order a new trial and he accordingly passed an order to that effect. We are inclined to think that sec. 232, Cr. P. C., applies to this case rather than sec. 423. It may be doubted, but on this point we express no opinion, whether an Appellate Court has under sec. 423 (b) general power to order a new trial. In our opinion, sec. 232 applies completely to the present case and we think that under it the Sessions Judge was competent to direct a new trial. But it remains for us, on this rule, to consider whether, under sec. 232 (2), we should not order further proceedings to be stayed, because we are not shown that any valid charge could be preferred against the accused. We have heard the letter in which the defamation is alleged to be contained and we cannot find that there is anything which can reasonably be held to amount to such an offence. We, therefore, direct that further proceedings be stayed.

Rule made absolute ;

further proceedings stayed.

Per BANERJEE AND PRATT, JJ.—The interest which a mortgagee has in immoveable property is itself immoveable property.

Per RAMPINI, J. (contra).—A mortgagee is only the owner of an interest in immoveable property and such interest is not an immoveable property.

DEBENDRA KUMAR MANDEL v. RUP LALL DASS (10) referred to.

Per BANERJEE, J.—Whether a mortgagee can apply under sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, depends upon the nature, not of the mortgage, but of the execution sale. The mortgagee is entitled to apply if the sale is free from the mortgage, but not if it is subject to the mortgage.

An order under sec. 310A setting aside a sale does not determine any question as to the relative rights of the parties to the property sold. Those rights remain as they were before.

Per AMEER ALI, J.—The words "any person whose immoveable property is sold" in sec. 310A include every person who has an interest in the property in question, whether qualified, partial or absolute.

This case arose out of an application by the Petitioners under sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside a sale of a tenure or holding sold under the Bengal Tenancy Act under the following circumstances. On the 13th June 1899, a holding or jama belonging to one Prosunno Kumar Singh was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it and was purchased by the opposite parties to this rule. On the 10th July, that is, within the time fixed by law, the present Petitioners deposited the amount due under the decree with costs and a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act read with sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, and applied under those sections to have the sale set aside. They alleged that they had a simple mortgage over the holding sold. The lower Court refused the application on the ground that there was no evidence of the consideration for the alleged mortgage having passed and that the mortgage was accordingly a mere benami transaction. The Petitioners thereupon moved the High Court and obtained a rule calling upon the auction-purchasers (the opposite parties) to show cause why the order of the Munsif should not be set aside.

Upon the rule coming on for hearing before Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., their Lordships on the 8th March 1901 referred the matter to the Full Bench with the following order of reference:—

“One of the questions arising in this rule is, whether a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it, is entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure as being a ‘person whose immoveable property has been sold’ within the meaning of that section.

“Upon that question there is, we think, a conflict between the cases of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) and Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmokar (2). In our opinion it makes no difference whether the mortgage is a simple mortgage or is one by conditional sale, the real point for consideration being, whether the mortgagee is a person whose immoveable property has been sold, within the meaning of the section.

“There being this conflict of decisions, the question stated above must be referred for determination to a Full Bench; and as the question arises in a rule the whole rule must be so referred.”

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty for the Petitioners.

I submit that the question referred by the Full Bench does properly arise. The objection to the reference is that upon the findings the applicant is a benamidar but it has been held that the benamidar has a right to make an application under sec. 311. See Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7). Then the question referred by the Full Bench, namely, whether a person who holds a simple mortgage is, within the meaning of sec. 310A, a person whose immoveable property has been sold, arises for determination in this rule. The case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1), when the judgment of the case is examined, shows that a simple mortgagee is competent under sec. 310A to apply and is therefore directly in point and supports my contention, but on the other hand the case of Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmokar (2) is also directly in point and is against my contention. The question is which of these two cases was rightly decided.

In this case a holding upon which the applicant holds a simple mortgage was sold for arrears of rent. The mortgagee applied to set aside the sale under sec. 310A, which in this respect is the same as sec. 311, C. P. C. ; and provides that "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" may apply to set aside the sale. Is the applicant a person whose immoveable property has been sold. I submit he is. Sec. 58, Transfer of Property Act, defines a mortgage.

Therefore the mortgagee whether he holds a simple or other mortgage is a transferee of "some interest in immoveable property." Upon this two questions arise for consideration. First, is the interest in immoveable property which is transferred to the mortgagee in itself an immoveable property ; secondly, was the immoveable property sold by the sale in question.

As to the first question : Is such an interest in immoveable property itself immoveable property ? The Transfer of Property Act does not define what an immoveable property is, but sec. 6 shews indirectly that the word is not confined to the entire interest in some specific immoveable property. Sec. 2, cl. (5) of Act I of 1868, the General Clauses Act which governs the interpretation of sec. 310A includes in the term immoveable property "benefits to arise out of land." After an immoveable property is mortgaged, both the mortgagee and the mortgagor have an interest in it, on the other hand the bundle of rights called ownership belongs to the two. As one increases the other diminishes, sometimes, the mortgagor's interest vanishes altogether in value. The Allahabad High Court has gone so far as to say that the equity of redemption of the mortgagor is not property, see Mata Din

v. Kazim (12). See also Kantiram v. Kutubuddin (13). The decision in Nityananda Patra's case is based upon a differentiation of the rights of a simple mortgagee and a mortgagee with possession.

The definition in sec. 58, Transfer of Property Act, makes no distinction in the interest of a simple mortgagee and other mortgagees and there is none in principle. It has been held so in Rakhal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (3). The unreported judgment in Rule No. 770 of 1900 and the case of Srinivasa v. Ayyathorai (4) are in support of my contention.

Sec. 310A does not limit the right of application to the owner in the popular sense of the word as the judgment in that case indicates. *

As to the second question—whether the interest of the mortgagee has been sold, the purchaser has the right to annul the mortgage ; therefore the interest of the mortgagee has been legally affected thereby and in such a case it has been observed by Sir Comer Petheram in the case of Asmutunnissa v. Ashruff Ali (5) that the person so affected is a person whose immoveable property has been sold. As all the requirements of sec. 310A have admittedly been complied with, I submit the sale should be set aside.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

I submit a simple mortgagee's interest is not immoveable property. He has got a mere right to sell the property for a debt, see Macpherson on Mortgage, p. 270. In the case of Sri Raja Papamma v. Sri Vira Pratapa (6), the Privy Council observed that in a simple mortgage "there is no transfer of ownership." I rely upon the observations of Pigot, J., in the case of Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (11), in which the distinction between immoveable property and an interest in immoveable property has been recognised. Sec. 16, C. P. Code, also observes this distinction. The lien of a simple mortgagee has been held not to be immoveable property within the meaning of sec. 274, C. P. C., see Debendra Kumar Mandel v. Rup Lall Dass (10); see also Kasi Nath v. Sada Siv (14). The mortgagee is not the owner of the property and therefore his immoveable property has not been sold. The purchaser has bought the holding and he has a right to annul incumbrances which he may or may not exercise and until then the mortgagee's interest is not affected. I further submit that the finding by the Munsif is that no consideration from the mortgage was paid and therefore the applicant acquired no interest. In this case the mortgagor made an application opposing the application of the so-called mortgagee. The case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini (1) is altogether different because in that case the benamidar made the application for the real owner. The rule should therefore be discharged with costs.

mittee of the Privy Council in Sri Raja Papamma v. Sri Raja Vira Pratapa (6) refers to the peculiar circumstances before them and does not relate to the question arising for decision here.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENTS were as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—The question submitted to us, which arises upon the present rule is, "whether a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it, is entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, as 'being a person whose immoveable property has been sold' within the meaning of that section." The reference has been made owing to a conflict between the cases of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) and Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmokar (2). It is clear that, in a sale under these circumstances, the mortgagee, unless he can come in under sec. 310A, runs a very serious risk of losing the benefit of his security, as the auction-purchaser is entitled to annul it. Here the mortgage was a simple mortgage, and, under sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, "a mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money." That the mortgagee has or at least may have a very substantial interest in the tenure sold is obvious, for if the tenure were mortgaged up to its full value, the whole interest would virtually be his. A mortgagor, whose tenure has been mortgaged up to the hilt, would have no interest in defending the suit, or resisting the sale, and if the mortgagee cannot intervene, his security would probably be lost. Nor, on the other hand, is the auction-purchaser or the decree-holder in any wise prejudiced by the deposit being made by the mortgagee, for it can make no difference to either of them whether it is made by the mortgagor or by the mortgagee. These considerations lead me to think that the language of the section ought to be liberally construed.

The opposite party is reduced to the position that the words in question refer to the judgment-debtor alone. This can hardly be so, for, if this had been intended, it is difficult to suppose that the Legislature would not have used the expression the judgment-debtor instead of the wider and more general expression which we find in the section. And if persons other than the judgment-debtor are included in the language "any person whose immoveable property has been sold," it is not very reasonable to say that the mortgagee of the tenure sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent does not come within the category. If it apply to persons other than the judgment-debtor, but not to a mortgagee of the tenure, we have not been told to whom the words can apply. A simple mortgagee, as in the case here, has undoubtedly an interest in the tenure sold: to the extent of that interest it may fairly be said within the meaning of the section that it is his immoveable property which has been sold. Do the words of the section compel us to say that it is only the owner of the whole interest in the property sold who can apply under it? I think not. Apart from authority, I should have been prepared to hold that such a mortgagee, as we find in the present case, is entitled in a sale such as the present to apply under sec. 310A.

I will refer briefly to the authorities. In Rakhul Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (3) the mortgagee was held entitled to apply under sec. 311 of the Code, the language of which is identical, on this point, with sec. 310A. There, no doubt, the mortgagee had obtained a decree for foreclosure, but as it had not been made absolute, at the time of the application under sec. 311, I do not think that circumstance can, in principle, differentiate the case from the present. In the case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1), it was expressly decided that the mortgagee could apply, and the same view was held in Rule No. 770 of 1900, decided on the 27th July 1900, but unreported. In the case of Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (4), a similar view was held. On the other hand reliance is placed upon the case referred to in the reference, and reported in 5 C. W. N. 63. This is a clear decision the other way and opposed to the mortgagee being allowed to apply. That is the only decision precisely in point in support of the opposite party's view. The case of Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (5) was not a case under sec. 310A, nor did it deal with the precise point now under discussion. There the applicant ought perhaps to have applied, and could have got the relief she sought, under the claim sections of the Code (sec. 278 et seq.). Here the mortgagee has no remedy save under sec. 310A. Cases have been cited to show that a simple mortgagee is not the owner of the mortgaged property, and that the words in sec. 310A mean and apply to the owner only. Reliance has been placed upon certain observations in the Privy Council case of Sri Raja Papamma Rao v. Sri Vira Pratapa H. V. Rama Chandra Rau (6), especially upon that where their Lordships say 'that in such a mortgage (i.e., a simple mortgage) there is no transfer of ownership' (p. 252), an observation which must be read, I think, in connection with the particular point then under discussion, and in a case to which the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act had no application. It is again unreasonable to suppose that if the Legislature intended to confine the right of application to the owner and to the owner alone, it should not have said so in so many words. On the best consideration I can give to the question, it ought, in my opinion, to be answered in the affirmative. As the whole rule is before us it must be made absolute with costs here, and before the Division Bench—for if the mortgage were benami the benami-dar could apply under the section: see Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7); if it was not benami then the mortgagee could apply. I desire to make it clear that my observations apply only to the case of such a sale as we have here, viz., the sale of a mortgaged tenure under the Rent Law. If it had been merely the sale of the equity of redemption, different considerations would obviously apply. We assess the hearing fee for both Courts at three gold mohurs.

BANERJEE, J.—This case arises out of an application by the Petitioners under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, for setting aside the sale of a tenure or holding under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Petitioners claimed to be simple mortgagees of the property sold. The Court below, finding that the mortgage was a benami transaction, rejected the application; the Petitioners then moved this Court and obtained a rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the lower Court should not be set aside or such other order made as to this Court might seem fit. At the hearing of the rule the learned vakil for the Petitioners contended that even if they were benamidars for the judgment-debtor, their application ought to have been granted, and the Court below in rejecting it had really failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, so as to bring the case under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and in support of this contention Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7) was cited. On the other hand it was argued for the opposite party that the order of the Court below rejecting the application was right, not only for the reasons stated in the order, but also for the further reason that the Petitioners, who were on the face of their application only simple mortgagees of the property sold, were, according to the decision in Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmakar (2) incomp-petent to apply under sec. 310A of the Code. In answer to the latter branch of this argument the Petitioners relied upon the case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dassi (1). There being a conflict between the two cases just referred to, on the question whether a mortgagee of immoveable property can apply under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside a sale of the same, the case has been referred to a Full Bench.

It is, as it must be, conceded that according to the authorities, Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (8) and Bungshidhar Halder v. Kedar Nath Mondal (9), sec. 310A applies to sales under the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am further of opinion, that accepting the finding of the Court below that the mortgage is a benami transaction, the Petitioners, according to the principle of the decision in Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7), the correctness of which I see no reason to doubt, were competent to apply under sec. 310A of the Code. That being so, and there being no dispute as to the sufficiency of the deposit or as to its having been made within the time allowed by law, the case turns upon the determination of the question, whether the Court below was bound to reject the application without enquiry, on the ground that the Petitioners on the face of their application were only simple mortgagees of the property sold, and as such incompetent to apply under sec. 310A.

The answer to that question must depend upon the construction of sec. 310A. That section provides that "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" under Chapter XIX of the Code, may, within a limited time, apply to the Court for setting aside the sale. Is a simple mortgagee of a tenure or holding then a person of whom it can be said that his immoveable property has been sold at a sale of the tenure or holding for arrears of rent? I am of opinion that the question should be answered in the affirmative. For immoveable property as defined in sec. 2, clause (j) of Act I of 1868, the General Clauses Act in force when sec. 310A of the Code was enacted, includes benefits to arise out of land; and a mortgage of any kind including a simple mortgage, is, according to sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. So that the interest of a simple mortgagee in a tenure or holding mortgaged is immoveable property. And as the purchaser of a tenure or holding at a sale for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, by sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, takes it with power to annul incumbrances (except those that are called "protected interests" and with them we have nothing to do now) a mortgagee's interest in such tenure or holding must be deemed in effect as sold at such a sale.

Against the above view it is argued in the first place, that an interest in immoveable property which is all that a simple mortgagee can have in the mortgaged property is not immoveable property. And in the second place it is argued that as the purchaser of a tenure or holding at a sale for arrears of rent, only takes it with power to annul incumbrances, and the law (see secs. 159 and 167 of the Tenancy Act) requires that the power must be exercised, if at all, within a limited time and in a particular manner, the mortgagee's interest cannot be said to have passed to the purchaser by the sale. As to the first argument, it is enough to say that an interest in land like that of a mortgagee comes within the definition of immoveable property referred to above, which includes "benefits to arise out of land." For if it be not within that definition it must be moveable property under sec. 2, cl. 6 of the General Clauses Act, a conclusion which cannot be accepted as correct.

And as to the second argument, I would observe that it is the sale for arrears of rent that passes the mortgagee's interest to the auction-purchaser, though the latter may lose the benefit of that interest if he omits to proceed in a certain way within a certain time, just as he may lose the entire benefit of his purchase if he omits to take possession within a certain time.

The view I take is in accordance with the spirit as well as the letter of the law. A tenure or a holding may be so heavily encumbered, that the mortgagor's interest is almost nothing, while that of the mortgagee absorbs the whole value of it; and in such a case, it is but right and proper that the mortgagee should be allowed to avail himself of a remedial provision like sec. 310A. Indeed if the Legislature had not intended to allow a mortgagee to come in under that section, it is difficult to say why they should have used the general expression 'any person whose immoveable property has been sold' instead of the term judgment-debtor. It is said that the mortgagee has ample provision made for the protection of his interest by sec. 171 of the Tenancy Act, which provides that he may deposit the amount of the decree to prevent a sale of the mortgaged property. I do not think that is so. Sec. 171 enables a mortgagee to prevent a sale by a deposit made before sale; but if a mortgagee who did not make any such deposit, expecting that the sale would fetch adequate price and he would be paid out of the surplus sale-proceeds, finds that by reason of material irregularity in the conduct of the sale or for any other reason the property has sold for an inadequate price and he has sustained material injury, there is no reason why he should be deprived of the remedy provided by sec. 310A.

It remains now to consider the cases chiefly relied upon in the argument before us.

The case of Rakhal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (3) cited by both sides, can hardly be said to determine the question now before us one way or the other. It relates to the construction of a provision of the Code, namely, sec. 311 in which the same words "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" occur, and it is relied upon on behalf of the Petitioners as showing that a mortgagee comes within the meaning of those words, and that the reason for the decision which is stated towards the conclusion of the judgment, will apply as well to a simple mortgagee as to a mortgagee by conditional sale whose case was then before the Court. But it must be conceded that the importance attached to the fact of the mortgage there having been foreclosed would show that the decision leans in favour of the view maintained by the opposite party.

The decision in Asmutunvissa v. Ashrujf Ali (5) cited for the Petitioner, though bearing only indirectly upon the present question, contains an important observation which favours the view I take. Sir Comer Petheram in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench says, after referring to sec. 311 of the Code, "We think that this means that the substantial injury must be the direct result of the irregularity and that this could only be the case when the property of the person applying had not only been put up for sale or knocked down, but had been sold in the sense that the applicant's interest had been legally affected by such sale."

The case of Sri Raja Papumma Rao v. Sri Vira Pratapa (6) is cited by the opposite party as showing that in a simple mortgage there is no transfer of ownership. But the words of their Lordships which are relied upon, must be taken in connection with the question before them, which was whether a decree erroneously giving possession to the Plaintiff in a suit to enforce a simple mortgage, could have the effect of a foreclosure decree; and the case is no authority for the proposition that the interest of a simple mortgagee in the mortgaged property is not immoveable property.

Turning now to the cases which are more directly in point, I find that Hami-dul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) the judgment in which is not given in 2 C. W. N. cclviii, is clearly in favour of the view I take; and so is the unreported judgment in Rule No. 770 of 1900. The case of Srinivasa v. Ayyathorai (4) is also in favour of the same view. As against these cases there is the case of Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmokar (2) which is no doubt directly in point. But for the reasons given above, I would respectfully dissent from the view there taken, that a simple mortgagee cannot apply under sec. 310A.

The answer to the question whether a mortgagee can apply under sec. 310A, depends, in my opinion, not upon the nature of the mortgage, but upon the nature of the execution sale. If the sale is not subject to but is free of the mortgage, the interest of the mortgagee, which is immoveable property as defined in the General Clauses Act, is sold in the sense that it is affected by the sale and passes to the auction-purchaser upon his taking certain steps; and the mortgagee, whether the mortgage is a simple mortgage or one by conditional sale, is, as he ought to be, entitled to come under sec. 310A.

It might be said that if a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act is set aside in the manner we are asked to do, it may give rise to future complications. I do not see that. An order under sec. 310A, setting aside a sale, does not determine any question of the relative rights of parties to the property sold. Those rights remain as they were before the sale.

I would accordingly answer the question referred to us in the affirmative, and hold that a simple mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold for arrears of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, can apply under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure for having the sale set aside; and I would make the rule absolute, set aside the order of the lower Court confirming the sale, and set aside the sale complained of under sec. 310A. The Petitioners are in my opinion entitled to their costs.

AMEER ALI, J.—The question referred for the consideration of the Full Bench is whether a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, is entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure as being a “person whose immoveable property has been sold” within the meaning of that section.

The identical question came before my learned brother Pratt, J., and myself in the case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1), and in coming to the conclusion that a mortgagee was so entitled, we gave our reasons at some length. The report of the case in 2 Calcutta Weekly Notes cclviii is not quite accurate, for there the mortgage is represented to have been by way of a conditional sale, whereas we dealt with the case upon the finding of the Munsif that the transaction upon the basis of which the application was made under sec. 310A was a simple mortgage.

As a different view has since been taken in Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmokur (2) by another Division Bench of this Court, it becomes necessary to examine the grounds upon which we come to our conclusion in Hamidul Huq's case (1).

It appears that on the 13th of June 1899, a holding or jama belonging to one Prosunno Kumar Singh was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, and was purchased by the party showing cause against the rule now before us. On the 10th of July and within the time fixed by law, the applicants alleging themselves to be the mortgagees of the land deposited the amount due under the decree with costs and a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code and applied to have the sale set aside. But the Munsif rejected their application on the ground that the mortgage was a benami transaction. The applicants thereupon moved this Court and obtained a rule calling upon the auction-purchasers to show cause why the order of the Munsif should not be set aside or such other order made as to this Court may seem proper.

The present reference is due to the conflict between the two cases mentioned above. The learned pleader showing cause contends that even assuming the applicants' allegation to be true, as simple mortgagees, they are not entitled to any relief under sec. 310A. Secondly he urges that as benamidars they have no locus standi.

As regards the right of the applicants to claim the benefit of the section under discussion, it seems to me that there is a fallacy underlying the learned pleader's arguments. Although he has not formulated it in precise terms he evidently seems to be under the impression that the right to apply under sec. 310A is confined to persons actually in possession of the property sold.

Now, in judging of the question raised in this somewhat vague form, we must bear in mind that the word "property" is not limited to things existing in substance; incorporeal rights are as much the subject of property as things tangible and corporeal. The Indian Legislature in defining the words "moveable and immoveable property" followed the distinction recognised in the civil law; and has in terms declared that all rights issuing from or connected with or attached to immoveable property fall within the same category.

Again, absolute ownership consists of an aggregate of rights, each capable of being owned and dealt with separately; and the owner is entitled to parcel out his rights in a particular property among different individuals. As owner he has also the power of borrowing upon its security money from another, and giving to him the right of treating the property as his security for the debt.

Sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) defines a mortgage to mean the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

According to Dornet mortgage is "a right which a creditor acquires in immoveables appropriated to him by his debtor although he be not put into possession of them."

Whether it is a right or whether it is an interest which a creditor acquires in the property hypothecated, the legal consequence is the same.

Under sec. 58 mortgagees are classified under three heads. Their remedies for the satisfaction of their debts are different, and a different procedure is provided in each case for the enforcement of the remedy; but so far as the interest or right is concerned they are grouped in one category. And a simple mortgagee is entitled to pursue the property in the hands of all subsequent takers for the satisfaction of his debt. As a logical consequence of the right vested in him by the act of the owner, and the transfer to him of the particular interest, the property in the somewhat loose language of the section, is as much his as that of the owner. It is not suggested that it is only the absolute owner in possession of all the rights in a particular immoveable property, who can claim the benefit of sec. 310A. It has been conceded that a mortgagee in possession under a conditional sale is so entitled; if the idea be that the right to apply is based upon the fact of actual possession, it would follow that a termor, however short his term might be, would be able to come in under the section but not the owner of the reversion, although his interest may be far more valuable and although in fact it is his property that has been sold in execution of the decree. If the argument is well-founded an ijardar or a mokurardar may get the property sold, and the owner cannot invoke the benefit of sec. 310A. A mere statement of the logical consequence following from such a contention, if given effect to, shows its untenability. It seems to me clear, therefore, that the right to apply under that section was never intended to be limited to persons actually in possession of any particular immovable property that has been sold.

Nor is that right restricted to the person having an absolute interest, in other words the judgment-debtor. If that were the intention, the Legislature would have declared so in express terms as it has done in sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. To construe the section as applicable only to the judgment-debtor or absolute owner would exclude from its benefit a mortgagee by conditional sale, a lessee, an executor in possession of the property, &c., but that is obviously absurd. The question then arises, does a simple mortgagee who is unquestionably the transferee of an interest in the immovable property in question, come within the category of persons entitled to apply to have the sale set aside. To this, in my opinion, there can be but one answer. A particular property may be mortgaged up to the hilt, as the expression goes; it may be the interest of the mortgagor to have it sold; it may be of the utmost importance to the mortgagee to save the property, and yet if the contention of the pleader for the opposite party be correct, he cannot save the property by invoking the special relief provided for under sec. 310A.

In my opinion the words "any person whose immovable property is sold" include every person who has an interest in the property in question whether qualified, partial or absolute.

An executor has only a qualified interest; a member of a joint Mitakhshara family, a lessee, a mortgagee, a mokurardar, an owner of a reversion, &c., have partial interests. In my opinion they all come within the intent and meaning of the section.

I have not referred to the cases cited at the Bar as they have been fully discussed by the learned Chief Justice with whose observations I desire to express my entire concurrence.

But it is said that in the particular case before us, the property sold is a holding or jama, and is therefore subject to the provisions of Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and as the sale does not ipso facto avoid the incumbrance held by the applicants, they are not affected by it and consequently have no right to apply under the section. It has also been said that a mortgagee may guard himself against the annulment of his mortgage by means of a registered and notified document under the provisions of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This latter argument is purely hypothetical, and does not arise upon the facts of the case, for it is not suggested that the present mortgage is a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 159 and as it cannot be touched by the purchaser, the incumbrancer is not affected by the sale. As regards the first argument based on sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is to be observed that the purchaser acquires the holding or tenure with the power to cancel incumbrances, it depends upon his option to do so or not, wholly independent of the will of the incumbrancer. He has that power for a year whereas the right to have the sale set aside under sec. 310A comes to an end on the expiration of a month from the date of sale. It is obvious from these considerations that the right of the mortgagee to look to the satisfaction of his debt from the property hypothecated is materially affected by the sale. To say that his right to apply under sec. 310A can only arise when the purchaser seeks to annul the incumbrance would be to declare that he has no right at all. However sec. 310A gives the right to apply to have the sale set aside, to every person whose property is sold. If the application is granted, the sale is set aside in its entirety. The section does not say that a person who has a partial interest in the property may apply to have the sale cancelled so far as his interest is concerned. The fact that a person has under the provisions of sec. 159 of the Tenancy Act protected his interests from annulment by the purchaser has, in my opinion, nothing to do with his right to apply to have the sale set aside. As the holder of a "protected interest" he may not think it worth his while to seek the relief under sec. 310A. But the property which is sold is his quoad the interest he holds and there is no reason that I can see in principle or in law to debar him from invoking the benefit of the section in question. His right comes into existence upon the sale of the property to which his right is attached.

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the question referred to the Full Bench should be answered in the affirmative.

As regards the second question I am of opinion, that if the transaction upon which the applicant bases his right is not real, the property is still in the judgment-debtor and he is in fact the latter's benamidar, and that under the ruling in Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7) he is entitled to maintain this application. I therefore agree in making the rule absolute.

RAMPINI, J.—This is a reference made to a Full Bench in a rule issued to the opposite party to show cause why an order of the Munsif of Serampore, dated 22nd August 1900, refusing to set aside a sale of a jama or holding held in execution of a rent decree on the 13th June 1899 should not be set aside. The application to set aside the sale was made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code, at the instance of two persons who alleged that they had a simple mortgage over the holding sold. The Munsif refused the application on the ground that there was no evidence of the consideration of the alleged mortgage having passed, which led him to the conclusion that the alleged mortgage was a mere benami transaction.

The Bench before whom the rule came for hearing has referred to the Full Bench the question whether a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it is entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code, as being a "person whose immoveable property has been sold" within the meaning of that section. The referring Bench were also of opinion that there was a conflict between the cases of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) and Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Kar-mokar (2). In their opinion it made no difference whether the mortgage is a simple mortgage or one by conditional sale, the real point for consideration being whether the mortgagee is a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of the section.

I am of opinion that the question propounded to us by the referring Bench does not properly arise in this rule in consequence of the Munsif's finding that there was no evidence of the payment of the consideration for the alleged mortgage, on which ground he says it is a benami transaction, but which I think means that in his opinion there was no mortgage at all. The Petitioners are therefore not simple mortgagees. They have no real mortgage over the holding. They can have no right to apply under either sec. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, or sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code. The finding of the Munsif to this effect has, it is to be noted, not been set aside by the referring Bench. The learned pleader who appears in support of the rule relies in answer to this objection on the case of Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7), in which it has been ruled that a benamidar of a person whose immoveable property has been sold has a right to apply to have the sale set aside under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure. I feel grave doubts as to the correctness of this ruling. I do not see how a benamidar of a person whose immoveable property has been sold can fairly be held to represent him, except in circumstances in which the beneficial owner will be bound by his benamidar's proceedings. But it is unnecessary for me to consider this point, for the ruling in Basi Poddar v. Ram Krishna Poddar (7) would seem to have no application to the present case, in which it has not been found that the applicants are the benamidars of the judgment-debtor or represent them in any way, but in which it has been found as a matter of fact, in consequence of the absence of proof of the passing of the alleged consideration, that the alleged mortgage is not a real mortgage, but a sham and fictitious one. I would therefore discharge the rule for this reason.

But however this may be, I would observe in dealing with the merits of the question referred for our decision that it would seem, at first sight that there is no direct conflict between the cases of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) and Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Kar-mokar (2), as the former case, according to the report in the Calcutta Weekly Notes, is a case of a mortgage by conditional sale while the latter is a case in which the applicant was a simple mortgagee. But on referring to the judgment in the case of Hamidul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (1) it appears that the Munsif under whose order the sale took place decided that the mortgage in question was nothing but a simple mortgage and his decision of this point was not set aside or its correctness impugned. Hence, there no doubt is a conflict of decisions between the two cases. It follows that what we have to consider now is the question of the nature of the rights of a mortgagee by simple mortgage, when there is a sale in execution of a rent decree of the tenure or holding over which he has a lien. Our decision on any other question would be an obiter dictum. But the matter is not of much importance as I now am of the same opinion as the referring Bench that there is no difference between the case of a mortgagee by conditional sale and that of a simple mortgagee in respect of their rights under the provisions of sec. 310A. The question for our consideration in this rule accordingly is—Is a mortgagee a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code?

It would seem to me that the answer to this question should be in the negative for the following reasons:—(1) That the interest of a simple mortgagee is not “immoveable property”; (2) that a simple mortgagee is not the “person whose immoveable property is sold” at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, and (3) that at such a sale, the interest of a mortgagee is not sold and does not pass to the purchaser.

On the first point, I would observe that a simple mortgagee is not the owner of immoveable property. He has, according to the definition of a mortgage contained in sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, but “an interest in specific immoveable property.” It has been said that under the definition of “immoveable property” contained in the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) a mortgage, or an interest in immoveable property, is immoveable property. I am unable to see that this is so. In Act I of 1868, immoveable property is defined as including “land, benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth.” It is said that a mortgage is “a benefit to arise out of land.” In my opinion it cannot be properly so described. By the expression “benefits to arise out of land” in sec. 2 (5) of the General Clauses Act are meant profits à prendre, rights of fishery and the like. It is only in my opinion by an undue straining of the meaning properly to be attached to these words, that they can be held to apply to a mortgage, and in Debendra Kumar Mandal v. Rup Lal Dass (10) it has been expressly decided by this Court that a debt secured by a mortgage by a lien upon immoveable property, more especially when the mortgagee is not in possession, is not immoveable property within the meaning of sec. 174 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hence, according to my view a mortgagee is only the owner of an interest in immoveable property, which is a different thing from immoveable property. The difference between an interest in immoveable property and immoveable property would seem to me to have been recognized not only in sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, but by the Courts as is apparent from O’Kinealy, J.’s judgment in the case of Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (11). Secondly, it would appear to me that whether or not the interest of a mortgagee is immoveable property, a mortgagee is not a person whose immoveable property is sold at a sale held in execution of a rent decree. What is sold at such a sale is the tenure or holding on which the arrears accrued. This is too certain a proposition to require any demonstration or argument. The words "the person whose immoveable property has been sold" in sec. 310A, when applied to a sale held in execution of a rent decree, must, therefore, mean the tenure-holder or raiyat whose tenure or holding has been sold. It cannot, in my opinion, mean anything else. That is what is specified in the proclamation of sale issued under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and in the sale certificate issued after the sale. The mortgage lien is not mentioned in either document as about to be sold or as having been sold. The words "whose immoveable property has been sold" cannot, therefore, in my opinion, apply to a mortgagee who has merely a lien over the property sold. And the same conclusion follows from a consideration of a mortgagee's position and rights as regards the tenure or holding. He is not the owner of it. He has no right of ownership in it. [(See Macpherson on Mortgages, p. 270), Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (12) and Papamma Rao v. Rama Chandra Razu (6)]. He cannot deal with it in any way. All that a simple mortgagee can do is to realize his debt by a sale of it. And unless the tenure or holding is a transferable one, he cannot even do this.

Thirdly, the rights of a mortgagee are not sold and do not pass to the purchaser at a sale of a tenure or holding held in execution of a rent decree. A mortgage of a tenure or holding is an "incumbrance," as defined in sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the mortgagee takes the precaution of registering and notifying his incumbrance to the landlord under sec. 176, his mortgage lien not only is not sold at a sale of the tenure or holding held in execution of a rent decree but may never even be affected by such a sale. His mortgage lien may remain intact for ever. If the mortgagee has not taken this precaution, still it would seem to me his rights are not sold and do not pass to the purchaser. They remain unaffected by the sale. But the purchaser can within a year of the date of sale take steps to annul the incumbrance. He may do so or not, as he pleases. If he does not do so, the rights of the mortgagee subsist in him as before. If the purchaser annuls the incumbrance, the mortgagee's rights are avoided, or extinguished. It may be said that in these circumstances the mortgagee's rights may be affected by a sale in execution of a rent decree. This is, however, not the case. They may be affected, not by the sale, but by some act which may or may not be done, subsequently to the sale. Now it has been decided in Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (5) that a person whose rights are not affected by a sale is not a person entitled to apply under sec. 311, C. P. C., to have the sale set aside. But even supposing that the mortgagee's rights may be affected by the sale, which in my opinion it is not correct to say that they are, it cannot be predicated of them that they are sold or pass to the purchaser. What may happen to them is that they may be "annulled."

It may here be pointed out that a mortgagee who has not registered and notified his mortgage lien under sec. 176 can always prevent the possibility of his rights being affected by the sale of the tenure or holding by paying in under sec. 171 the decretal amount before the sale actually takes place, and he has then an additional mortgage over the tenure or holding for the amount paid by him, which bears interest at 12 per cent. per annum which takes priority over every other mortgage and which entitles him to be put in possession of the tenure or holding. A mortgagee has thus provided for him by the law two means of protecting his interests.

It may be said that we are here concerned only with the provisions of sec. 310A as applicable to a sale of a tenure or holding. But the provisions of the Tenancy Act I have adverted to apply to all sales held in execution of decrees for arrears of rent. Such sales are held in accordance with the procedure prescribed by Chap. XIX of the Civil Procedure, of which sec. 310A is one of the sections. But sec. 310A is applicable only after the sale has taken place and in no way prevents the operation of the provisions of Chap. XIV of the Tenancy Act.

Then it has been asked, if the words "a person whose immoveable property has been sold" in sec. 310A do not include a mortgagee, whom, other than the judgment-debtor, do they include? They must include, it is urged, some person other than the judgment-debtor, otherwise the provisions of sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code would have no wider operation than those of sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Even if this were so, this would not, in my opinion, lead to the conclusion that the words referred to must include a mortgagee, for sec. 174 was framed in 1885 and sec. 310A in 1894. When the latter section was added to the Code, it was never contemplated that it would be held applicable to sales under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was not till the decision of the case of Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (8) that they were considered to apply to such sales. But the case of Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (8) and the cases in which it has been followed, show the character of the persons other than the judgment-debtor to whom the provisions of sec. 310A may apply. In Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (8) the person who applied to set aside the sale was an unregistered co-sharer to the extent of 8 annas. In Bungshidhar Hal-dar v. Kedar Nath Mondal (9) the applicant under sec. 310A was a purchaser from the tenant who is described as being a co-sharer in the tenure sold, but whose interest did not amount to an incumbance or to a protected interest which would not be affected by the sale. In Rule No. 1643 of 1895 referred to in the note to Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (8) the applicant was an unregistered transferee of the whole holding, and in Rule No. 2269 of 1895, cited in the same page, the applicant was a person who professed to pay in the decretal amount on behalf of the judgment-debtor, but who appeared to be really a purchaser from him.

Then, it has been urged that to hold that a mortgagee may be included within the words "a person whose immoveable property has been sold" in sec. 310A, even if straining the strict meaning of these words, is merely to extend a privilege, which extension can do no harm to anyone. But I conceive it is my duty to interpret the law and not to extend it, and further, I apprehend that an extension of the provisions of sec. 310A to mortgagees may do harm; the purchaser in this case considers it will do harm to him, otherwise he would not have opposed the rule. It is said, however, that he will be compensated by the allowance of 5 per cent. on the price paid by him prescribed by the provisions of sec. 310A. In the present case the compensation offered to the opposite party is the small sum of Rs. 5 and as the sale took place on the 13th June 1899 and Rs. 100 were paid for the holding, the purchaser will have lost the use of his money for more than 2 years, for which and for the expenses incurred in making the purchase the sum of Rs. 5 may well be an adequate compensation. But the object of a purchaser of a tenure or holding would seem to be either to establish himself as an agriculturist in a village or to acquire some land contiguous to his own, if he has already established himself there. It will be seldom, I think, that 5 per cent. on the purchase-money will console him for the loss of his purchase. Then the extension of the provisions of secs. 174 and 310A must increase the uncertainty attending sales and must diminish the chance of the full value of tenures or holdings being bid for them at sales. This cannot fail to be harmful to judgment-debtors. Finally, it must increase the risks of litigation which to a greater or less extent attach to all Court sales. This is greatly to be deprecated in the case of sales of agricultural holdings, for it tends to throw land out of cultivation. The holding in this case was one of 19 bighas. The dispute as to whether the sale of this land is to be set aside or to stand has continued for two years. We do not know what has become of the land in the meantime. But the uncertainty as to its ultimate ownership that must have prevailed during these two years may well have left it fallow and destroyed the chances of the landlords ever recovering any rent for it. Tens of thousands of holdings are annually sold in this way in the province.

In conclusion, I would say there seems to me to be no authority for the view contended for by the learned pleader who appears in support of the rule. The case of Rakhal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (3) on which he relies is, no doubt, a case in which, though under sec. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, the meaning of the words "a person whose immoveable property has been sold" were considered, and in which it was held that a mortgagee by conditional sale who had obtained a decree for foreclosure had such an interest in the property sold as entitled him to make an application for the setting aside of the sale. The ratio decidendi, however, was that after a foreclosure decree, it would be difficult to hold that the property belonged solely either to the mortgagee or to the mortgagor and that therefore either would be entitled to apply under sec. 311 to have the sale set aside. This would seem to me to be putting an unduly liberal and a not strictly legal interpretation on the terms of sec. 311. For, the foreclosure decree would not affect the rights of the mortgagor and the legal estate would remain in him until the period for redemption had passed without his redeeming the mortgage. Further, the sale in that case was one under the old rent law and the tenure on which the arrears had accrued is said to have passed free of incumbrances. The rights of the mortgagee, therefore, were affected by the sale.

Reference has also been made in the course of the argument before us to Civil Rule No. 770 of 1900, decided on the 27th July 1900, in which a mortgagee was regarded as a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of sec. 310A. I have satisfied myself by a reference to the petition of the Appellant to the Munsif, dated 6th December 1899, that he was a mortgagee by conditional sale. This, however, does not make any difference, and therefore I can only say that I am constrained to dissent from the decision of this rule. Finally, there is the case of Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (4) in which it was decided that a mortgagee who was a party to the suit could apply under sec. 310A to have a sale set aside. But in this case the mortgagee, being a party to the suit, was himself apparently a judgment-debtor under the decree. Then, the sale was not under the Bengal Tenancy Act, a sale under which law does not, in my opinion, in any way affect the rights of mortgagees.

For all these reasons I would discharge this rule.

PRIATT, J.—The question which we are called upon to decide is whether a mortgagee of a holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it, is a person whose immoveable property has been sold within the meaning of sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The first question which arises is whether a mortgagee's interest is or is not immoveable property. A mortgage is defined in sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act as "the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" for the purpose of securing the payment of a loan, etc.

The General Clauses Act says that "immoveable property shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth" and "moveable property shall mean property of every description, except immoveable property." It seems to me impossible to hold that a mortgage can be moveable property; rather I would regard it in the nature of a benefit to arise out of land, for though this expression is usually applied to what is known as "profits à prendre," there is no reason why it should be entirely restricted to them.

(4) I. L. R. 21 Mad. 416 (1897).

Let us next consider what passes at the sale of a holding in execution of a rent decree.

I would exclude from consideration the case of a holding at fixed rates put up to auction under sec. 164 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, subject to registered and notified encumbrances, because in such a case the mortgagee's interest must necessarily remain unaffected by the sale, and the mortgagee could therefore have no right to make a deposit under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the case before us no doubt the holding itself was sold, but the holding comprises two separate rights, viz., that of the mortgagor and that of the mortgagee, the latter being, to use the language of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act "a right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein." The one right is complementary of the other, and the two rights in combination constitute the property that is sold. And here I may observe in passing that as the mortgagor's right is necessarily immoveable property, its complement, or the mortgagee's right cannot in the nature of things be anything else than immoveable property.

As then the mortgagee's interest passes to the purchaser at the auction-sale, and that interest is itself immoveable property, I conclude that the mortgagee is a person entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I have confined my arguments to the case of the sale of a tenant's holding, because that is what seems to have been sold in the particular case under reference. But the same reasoning will apply when a tenure is the subject of sale.

In my opinion the question under consideration is not practically affected by the contingency that the purchaser may fail to annul the encumbrance within the prescribed period of one year. The tenure or holding is sold free of encumbrances, and the purchaser has only to comply with the provisions of sec. 167 in order to reap the full benefits of the transaction. The mortgagee ought not to be denied the right to protect his interest under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, simply on the contingency that the purchaser's future inaction may make the exercise of that right superfluous.

Landlord and Tenant Act (X of 1859), sec. 23—Suit for rent upon a lease for purposes other than agricultural or horticultural—Building and mining purposes and the like.

A suit for recovery of rent upon a lease for mining purposes and for purposes of building, making roads, and so forth, the land not being demised for agricultural or horticultural purposes, is not a suit for rent under Act X of 1859 and a Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to entertain it.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of June 1899, against the decree of F. B. Taylor, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Zillah Chota Nagpore, dated the 7th of April 1898, affirming the decree of Babu Prasunno Koomar Das Gupta, Deputy Collector of Gobindpur, dated the 28th of September 1897.

E. J. ROOKE v. BENGAL COAL CO., LD.

This was a suit under sec. 23 of Act X of 1859 for recovery of arrears of rent said to be due from the Defendant Company for 50 bighas of land held in mouzahs Amenda and Murabag.

The Company entered appearance and filed a written statement denying their liability to pay the rent claimed.

The suit came on for trial before the Deputy Collector of Gobindpur and the first issue framed was whether the Revenue Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. This issue was framed on the assertion of the Defendant Company that as they held the land in question for mining purposes they could not be sued in the Revenue Court. The Deputy Collector held that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit and he therefore dismissed the same. The material portion of his judgment was as follows:—

It is clear from the statement of the Plaintiff's agent recorded on the 5th July and the terms of the pottah (Ex. A) which is a document over 30 years old and the custody of which has been proved, that the lease which the Defendants Company hold is chiefly, if not absolutely, for mining purposes. The Company acquired and exercises surface rights also in the land covered by the lease. But that seems to be only an attendant circumstance and not the original purpose for which the tenure was created. Now the question is whether land used or intended to be used for mining purposes is land coming within the purview of Rent Law. The point appears to have been considered by their Lordships of the Bengal High Court a number of times and their decisions are clearly in the negative. The most recent case which is exactly similar to the one before me to which I have been referred is reported in Raniganj Coal Association v. Jadoo Nath Ghose (1). The terms of the lease discussed in that case are so very similar to those of the lease produced in this case that the latter may be said to be a reproduction. The Plaintiff was unable to refer to any ruling which modified or set aside the principle of law propounded in this case that land used for mining purposes is not land coming within the provisions of Rent Law, and therefore within the cognizance of the Revenue Courts. Then the question to be considered is "does the fact that the lease is for surface rights as well help the Plaintiff in any way?"

This has also to be answered in the negative (vide Weekly Reporter, Vol. XVIII, page 235, and Weekly Reporter, Vol. XI, page 400). The rent being indivisible, whatever may be the other uses to which the land might be put, cannot be the subject of a suit under sec. 23 of Act X of 1859, when we have it that that at least a portion of the rent (in fact the chief portion) is for the exercise of other than agricultural rights.

With these authoritative rulings before me it is impossible for me to proceed further with the case. I find that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit and the result is that it is dismissed.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpore dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Deputy Collector.

The Plaintiff then preferred this second appeal.

The question which was raised in this appeal was whether a suit for recovery of rent upon a lease for mining purposes and for the purposes of building and making roads is cognizable by the Revenue Court as a suit for recovery of rent under Act X of 1859. The lease was as follows:—

This mokurari pottah is executed to the effect following:—

Mouzah Murabagh appertaining to Purgana

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The only question which arises in this appeal is whether the Revenue Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit that was brought for recovery of rent under Act X of 1859.

The lease with which we are concerned was a lease for mining purposes and for purposes of building, making roads, and so forth, the land not being demised for agricultural or horticultural purposes. Sec. 23, cl. 4, Act X of 1859, speaks of "suits for arrears of rent due on account of land either kheraji or lakheraj, or on account of any rights of pasturage, forest rights, fisheries, or the like." The word "land" as used in this section has been construed in various decisions of this Court (see, amongst others, Raniganj Coal Association v. Judoo Nath Ghose (1)) to refer to any land granted for agricultural or horticultural purposes, and not to land granted for purposes such as are mentioned in the lease upon which the suit is founded. In this view of the matter it is obvious that the suit could not be taken cognizance of under Act X of 1859.

The learned vakil for the Appellant has, however, contended that the words "or the like" in the section would include rights such as those that were demised by the lease in question. We are, however, unable to accept that view.

E. J. ROOKE v. BENGAL COAL CO., LD.

Those words must be taken ejusdem generis with the right spoken of in the said section, and it could hardly be contended that the right of taking coal from the land demised, and such other rights demised, was covered by the words "or the like" in the section in question.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION]

REV. NO. 274 OF 1901.

GHOSE, J. TAYLOR, J. 1901. 31, May.	}	In the matter of RAJANI KANTO PAL, Petitioner, v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 353, 225B—Assaulting a public officer in execution of his duties—Resisting or obstructing public officer in discharge of his duties as such—Warrant, execution of, by person not authorized—Warrant of arrest, issue of, in execution of a Civil Court decree—Notification of contents of warrant, if necessary—Lawful arrest.

To make an arrest under a warrant issued in execution of a Civil Court decree valid it may not be necessary to shew the warrant to the person to be arrested, but it is the duty of the bailiff to acquaint the person with the contents of the warrant at the time he arrests him and that he was authorized to arrest him, and if the accused then wants to see the warrant it would be the duty of the bailiff to shew it to him.

When a warrant is not shewn to the person arrested nor are the contents of the warrant notified to him, before or at the time of the arrest, there is no lawful arrest.

This was a rule granted against the order of one of the Presidency Magistrates for the town of Calcutta.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. Henderson, with Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Kally Nath Mitter, for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to shew cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GHOSE, J.—This rule was granted on the application of one Rajani Kanto Pal, who had been convicted by one of the Presidency Magistrates of Calcutta under secs. 353 and 225B, I. P. Code.

It appears that, in execution of a certain decree obtained by one Chadylal Agarwala against the Petitioner Rajani Kanto Pal, a writ of arrest was issued by the High Court against that individual. On the 25th of November last, a bailiff of the Sheriff by name Hurdeo, two peons, and a certain person Umesh Chandra Acharjee who accompanied them for the purpose of identifying the Petitioner, Rajani Kanto Pal, went either to the house of the accused or to a certain shop in which he was then standing. And the case for the prosecution is that the warrant of arrest was put into the hands of the accused by Hurdeo, the bailiff, the accused read it and threw it away, saying that it was Sunday and, therefore, he could not be arrested; and he then tried to escape; the bailiff and the two peons thereupon arrested him but, immediately afterwards, two other persons, namely, Durga Churn Pal, and Aswini Coomar Pal came in with a large number of people, assaulted (and the

IN THE MATTER OF RAJANI KANTO PAL v. THE EMPEROR.

Petitioner joined in the assault) the bailiff and the two peons, and rescued him (the Petitioner).

The Presidency Magistrate has acquitted Durga Churn Pal and Aswini Goomar Pal upon the ground that he was not prepared to accept the evidence on behalf of the prosecution that these two individuals took any part in the row that took place; but he has convicted Rajani Kanto Pal of offences under secs. 353 and 225B, I. P. Code.

One of the grounds set out in the affidavit upon which the Petitioner obtained the rule now before us was that, while the Petitioner was examining certain witnesses in support of his defence, the Magistrate stopped his attorney saying that it was unnecessary to examine any other witness; and he also stopped the address that was being made by the said attorney; that the Magistrate then called upon the attorney for the prosecution to say what he had to say; and that so soon as he finished his address, the Magistrate delivered his order acquitting Durga Churn Pal and Aswini Goomar Pal and convicting Rajani Kanto Pal. This portion of the affidavit has not been contradicted by any counter-statement on the other side. In this circumstance there are but two courses left open to us, either to send back the case for a fresh trial, the Magistrate who held the trial having since retired on pension or to examine the evidence as it is upon the record, and to see whether any of the two offences of which the Petitioner has been convicted has been satisfactorily made out against him.

We have examined the evidence and it seems to us that it is extremely doubtful whether the warrant of arrest was at all shown to the accused before he was arrested, or any attempt was made to arrest him. No doubt, the bailiff Hurdeo and the two peons who accompanied him say in their examination-in-chief that the warrant of arrest was actually placed in the hands of the accused, who read it and then threw it away, saying that it was Sunday and, therefore, he could not be lawfully arrested. But upon the cross-examination of Saligram, one of the two peons, we find that no such thing could have really happened. With reference to this matter he says as follows:—

“I saw the first Defendant at the threshold of the shop. His back was towards the street. He was speaking to 4 or 5 people in the shop. The first Defendant was arrested immediately after our arrival. There was no conversation after he was arrested. The first Defendant ran away into the shop.”

This seems also to be borne out to some extent by the evidence of another witness for the prosecution, Baijnath. He says: “Defendant No. 1 was examining a mechanic. The first Defendant was arrested 2 or 3 minutes after our arrival. When hand was laid on him, the first Defendant was still in the same place.”

The question thereupon arises if the warrant of arrest was not shown to the accused, or if the contents of the warrant were not notified to the accused, could there be a lawful arrest? It may be that the story as to the putting the warrant into the hands of the accused is untrue, but it may also be that the contents of the warrant were notified to the accused before he was arrested. There is however no suggestion on behalf of the prosecution, that this was so; no doubt, there is a witness called by the defence who, it may be said, supports to some extent this theory, namely, that the contents of the warrant were notified to him; but on referring to the evidence of that witness we find that it was not the bailiff nor either of the two peons who accompanied him who is said to have done so. What he says is this that the identifier or rather the person who is said to have accompanied the bailiff to identify the accused, went into the shop while the bailiff and the two peons were in the street, and that man told the accused that a warrant was out against him, and that thereupon the accused said that he could not be arrested on a Sunday. But that is a different story from that of the prosecution, and as I have already said it is no way suggested on behalf of the prosecution that the contents of the warrant were notified to the accused, but that the warrant itself was placed in his hands and he read it. With reference to this matter, we find it stated by one of the witnesses for the defence, who is an attorney of this Court, that some little time after this event had taken place, he had a talk with the bailiff Hurdeo, and the latter told him that he could not show the accused the warrant because no time was given to him to do so. If that statement is correct, it falsifies entirely the story of the prosecution. Then again the Magistrate has held that he is unable to accept the evidence for the prosecution so far as that evidence sought to implicate the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, namely, Durga Churn Pal and Aswini Churnar Pal. If that evidence could not be accepted as true, as shewing that Durga Churn and Aswini took part in rescuing the Petitioner, or assaulting the bailiff and the peons, it seems to me it would be rather risky to accept that portion of the evidence which goes to implicate the Petitioner as the person who on being arrested, after the warrant was shown to him, tried to escape, and while he was being rescued by the other two persons, he assaulted the bailiff and his peons. It may be that in order to make the arrest valid it was not necessary to show the warrant; but it seems to me that it was the duty of the bailiff to acquaint the Petitioner with the contents of the warrant at the time he arrested him, and that he was authorized to arrest him and if the accused then wanted to see the warrant it would be the duty of the bailiff to show it to him. But in the present case, as I have already said, the evidence as to the warrant being placed in the hands of the Petitioner or the contents of the warrant being notified to him by the bailiff who had been authorized by the Sheriff to make the arrest, being very unsatisfactory, it would not be right and proper to convict the Petitioner of either of the two offences of which he has been found guilty. It will be observed upon the evidence of Babu Ganesh Chunder Chunder, then the Deputy Sheriff, so far as one of the peons is concerned namely, Saligram, who, it seems, was rather severely assaulted by somebody or other in the crowd that he was not authorized to execute the warrant; so that we may take i that the only person who was authorized to execute the warrant was Hurdeo, but it is not satisfactorily proved that he showed the warrant to the Petitioner or notified the contents thereof to him, before or at the time of arrest, so that there was no lawful arrest.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to order a new trial. The result is that the conviction and sentence will be set aside.

TAYLOR, J.—I agree in thinking that upon the evidence a valid arrest by the bailiff has not been established and I also agree in the order passed.

Rule made absolute :

This was an appeal against the judgment and decree of Babu Karuna Das Bose, Subordinate Judge, First Court, 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 12th June 1899, dismissing the Plaintiff's suit.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows :—

The Plaintiff instituted this suit as the ijardar under the mutwalli of the Hooghly Imambara for ejectment of the Defendant from certain plots of land measuring about 10 bighas situate in Kidderpore in the suburbs of Calcutta and for possession thereof and for certain other reliefs, on the allegation that the Defendant was a tenant-at-will under the Plaintiff and that the tenancy had been determined by a proper notice to quit. The Defendant, as the representative of the tenant, Nawab Khas Mahal, in his written statement maintained that Nawab Khas Mahal had permanent interests in the lands and denied the right of the Plaintiff to eject him. The history of the various plots comprising the lands in suit is fully detailed in the judgment of the Court. The Plaintiff produced several kabuliyats executed by the tenants whose rights Nawab Khas Mahal had purchased and which showed the terms upon which the tenancies were created. One of such kabuliyats is given below :

To the High in dignity.

MOULVI SYED KERAMUT ALI SAHIB,

Mutwalli of the Imambbara at Hooghly.

This kabuliyat is executed by Meru Mistri to the following effect :—

Within pergunnah kismat Magura, mouzah Sonai, and in the Mahlul of the late Nanda Istriwalla there lies in the share of Golam Hyder, son of the said Nanda Istriwalla, 14½ cottahs of kheraji land bearing a jumma of 1 rupee 11 annas 4 pies and 2 karas, of which the amla and aolad were purchased by me, under an istafa (Deed of Relinquishment), signed by the aforesaid Durji and a petition signed by me on the 21st Bhadra of the current year; and in the Mahlul of the aforesaid Nanda Istriwalla there lies 2½ cottahs of kheraji land, the share of the said Golam Hyder bearing a jumma of 1 annas and 7½ pies the amla and aolad (whereof) was purchased by me under an istafa signed by the said Golam Kader, dated the 27th Srabun 1247, and a petition signed by me and bearing date and year, as above; and in the Mahlul of Seraj Khansamah there lies 1 bigha of kheraj land bearing a jumma of 1 rupee and 1 annas the amla and aolad (whereof) were purchased by me from Sheik Sheraj Khansama under an istafa signed by the said Khansama and dated the 2nd Chaitra 1247, B. S., and a petition signed by me on the same date and year; all these lands make a total of 1 bigha and 17 cottahs of lands; of which I take a lease potta at an annual jumma of Rs. 3-4 three rupees and four annas. I shall pay the rent, year by year according to instalments, into your sircar (office), and shall keep intact the boundaries of the said lands. I shall not be competent to make objection, on the ground of the lands being found less on measurement or of the same being taken up by roads or on any other ground whatever. If on any measurement made by the sircar, the lands be found to be in excess, I shall pay proportionate rent for the same. If in future, the rate is enhanced in this mahal, I shall pay separate rent for the same. And I shall not be competent to erect new structures (emarat) on the lands in question without your permission. To this effect after obtaining a potta for the period of your possession I execute this kabuliyat.

The Plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the Court below which held that the Defendant had a permanent right in the lands. From this decision the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

• The Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) with him Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee and Babu Charu Chunder Ghose for the Appellant.—This is a suit for ejectment of the Defendant from a piece of land, measuring 9 bighas 19½ cottahs, situate in Garden Reach in the suburbs of Calcutta. This land forms part of an area of 13 bighas formerly occupied by Nawab Khas Mahal whose representative the Defendant is. The land in suit consists of five holdings and, save with respect to one holding consisting of a comparatively small area, the origin of the tenancy with respect to these holdings is known inasmuch we have the kabuliyats or the pottas. We say that the land was not let out on a permanent lease and that in a case of this kind, where the origin of the tenancy is known, the inferences that would otherwise arise from long possession are entirely negatived and that there has been no acquiescence or standing by on the part of the landlord. It is true that there are several buildings on the land, but as is evident from the kabuliyats which have been produced those buildings were erected in defiance of the express injunctions of the landlord. On the question of acquiescence, see Beni Ram v. Kundan Lall (6), Ramsden v. Dyson (10), Jugmohun v. Pallonjee (5), De Bussche v. Alt (11), Wilmott v. Barber (12), La Banque v. La Banque (13), Kunhammed v. Narayan (14).

The lands in the present suit have always been let out in ijara, and that is a circumstance which has to be taken into consideration. See the case of Krishna Kishore v. Mir Mahomed (4). We tendered in the lower Court the several ijara kabuliyats showing that the mahal has, except on a few isolated occasions, been always let out in ijara, but the lower Court would not admit them in evidence. I submit they are admissible in evidence.

The lands in the present suit consist of five holdings and ever since the purchase of the holdings by the Nawab Khas Mehal, she has paid rents for the lands in the names of the old tenants and there has never been any mutation of names. It is also noticeable that in the kabuliyats the words সন বসন occur and these words have been held to constitute a tenancy which is certain for the period of one year and which will continue beyond that period until it is properly put an end to by either party. See Ramkoomar v. Brojohurree (15). In this case the tenancy has been properly determined by a six months' notice to quit. This case is on all fours with the case of Ismail Khan v. Joygoon (1).

Mr. Pugh (with him Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Jogesh Chunder Dey and Bhogoban Chunder Mookerjee) for the Respondent.—The Appellant is trying to evict the Defendant from lands which have been the subject of numerous transfers extending over a very long period. The holdings have all along been treated as hereditary and permanent. If the conduct of the parties be examined, you cannot resist the conclusion that till now no body has thought of evicting the tenants from these lands. In this case, therefore, it is especially necessary to scrutinise the documentary evidence carefully. We have documents going back very near to the time of the Permanent Settlement. There have been numerous transfers and successions—son succeeding father and so on.

[GUPTA, J.—How does the transferability affect the permanency of the lease? There may be transfers of yearly leases.] I say that transfers are evidence of permanency. Each case must be judged by its own facts and the case of Ismail Khan v. Joygoon (1) is no authority in favour of the other side. I rely on Dhunput Sing v. Gooman Sing (16), Ram Chunder

v. Jogesh (17), Caspersz v. Kedar (2), Durga v. Rakhal (3).

I am able to show a long chain of title, payments of rents for a very long period at unvarying amounts, and recognition of transfers by the landlord. In a case of this nature the presumption is very strong that the holdings are permanent. See the cases Juhooree Lall v. Dear (18), Lekhray v. Kunhya (19), Gopal v. Teluck (20), Suttosurrun v. Mohesh Chunder (21), Ram Ranjan v. Ram Nurain (22). Further, I say that the Plaintiff is not entitled, to maintain the action. He is a lessee from the mutwalli of the Hooghly Imambara. The mutwalli cannot grant a lease of the present character under the Mahomedan law. The property being wagf, I question the right of the landlord to grant the ijara lease to the Plaintiff on the strength of which he is suing. The landlord in the present case is a mutwalli and under the Mahomedan law he cannot grant any lease for more than three years. The Plaintiff's lease is for a period of ten years with option of renewal for a further period of twenty years. See Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Mahomedan Law, p. 290; Ballie, p. 596; Ameer Ali, Vol. I, p. 379; Shama Charn Roy v. Abdul (23).

The Advocate-General in reply.

I say that the property is not wagf. It is only an accident that the manager of the mahal is a mutwalli. The mahal is always spoken as kharij tomlin, i.e., outside the endowment. It is no part of the wagf property. The Plaintiff's lease is perfectly valid. The cases cited by the other side have no application as the origin of the tenancy in those cases was not known. On the question whether the land could not be identified as there was a confusion of boundaries by the tenant, see the notes to Wake v. Conyers (24), Khemamayi v. Shushee (8), Dugappa v. Vidhia (9). The Appellant is entitled to succeed in the present action.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RAMPINI, J.—This is a first appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs passed in a suit for ejectment brought by the Plaintiff, Ismail Khan, against the Administrator-General of Bengal. The Plaintiff is a lessee under the mutwalli of the Hooghly Imambara. The Defendant is sued as the representative of the estate of Nawab Khas Mahal, a Begum of the ex-King of Oudh, who died in 1894. The land from which the Plaintiff seeks to eject the Defendant comprises an area of 9 bighas 19½ cottahs. It forms part of an area of 13 bighas formerly occupied by the Nawab Khas Mahal. It admittedly appertains to estate No. 92 of the Hooghly Imambara. It is, however, situated at Garden Reach in the suburbs of Calcutta and within municipal limits. There is a two-storied building on the land and some smaller buildings used as out-offices, etc.

ISMAIL KHAN MAHOMED v. L. P. D. BROUGHTON.

The Plaintiff seeks to eject the Defendant on the ground that the land was let merely on temporary leases; while the suit is resisted on the ground that the land was let on permanent leases, that it has been in the possession of the Defendant and the predecessors of Khas Mahal for a very long period of time, that the Defendant has with the acquiescence of the Plaintiff's lessor laid out large sums of money in the erection of permanent buildings on the land and that accordingly the Plaintiff is not entitled to evict the Defendant.

The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the Defendant and has dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff now appeals, and traverses all the findings of the Subordinate Judge both of fact and of law. On his behalf it has been urged (1) that the land was never let on permanent but on temporary leases; (2) that the Defendant and his predecessors have not been in possession of the land for a long period of time; and (3) that there has been no standing by or acquiescence on the part of the mutwalli of the Hooghly Imambara to the erection of permanent buildings on the land.

The first two contentions relate to questions of fact. The last raises a mixed question of law and fact, which can only be decided after the facts of the case have been ascertained. We will therefore first consider the first two questions together and then discuss the third.

Now, as to the facts of the case, it is admitted that the Defendant does not hold the land under any lease. The Begum Khas Mahal has purchased on different dates the rights of the former tenants of the land, who held it not as one plot, but as 5 small plots, and ever since her purchases of the former tenants' rights, she has paid rent for the land in their names and has never been recognised by the Plaintiff or his lessor as the tenant of the land.

The history of the five plots of land purchased by the Nawab Khas Mahal is very complicated. We must go into the details of each plot separately.

The first plot is a plot of 13 cottahs 10 chittaks of land, called, by the learned counsel for the Appellant, Sarnamayi's plot; for this plot, a dowl potta Ex. A52, dated 10th December 1862, has been produced by the Defendant, which seems a perfectly genuine document. It is signed by the mutwalli, and recites that on a consideration of the petition of Sarnamayi and an istafa (a notice of relinquishment) from Madan Mochi and others (heirs of Ram Lochan Mochi) a potta is granted to Sarnamayi of 13½ cottahs of land at a rental of Rs. 1-3-9 "limited to the term of the mutwalli's incumbency." It is to be noted that the istafa referred to in this potta has not been produced. This potta is followed up by Exhs. A12 and A13, the latter of which is a deed of sale by Sarnamayi in favour of Nawab Khas Mahal, of the 13½ cottahs of land, and the former an istafa by Sarnamayi in favour of Khas Mahal for the same land, and dated the 30th April 1865. The Plaintiff objects to all the deeds produced by the Defendant as not coming from proper custody, and it must be said that there is no very definite evidence showing how each particular deed came into the possession of the present Defendant. Further, the istafa of the 30th April 1865, is especially objected to on the ground that it is addressed to the mutwalli and must, if genuine, have been retained by him. If delivered to him, as it should have been, it is unexplained how it is now produced by the Defendant. There appears to us to be great force in this latter argument, and we think it cannot be gainsaid that if this istafa is properly produced from the custody of the Defendant, then there is nothing to show that it was ever delivered to, or seen by the Plaintiff's lessor, the mutwalli, and so cannot bind him. The question is of much importance, because the rent of Rs. 1-3-9 is described in the istafa as the annual mokurari rent of the land, and if it could be shown that the mutwalli had ever received it, it might be held to be evidence of knowledge on his part of the claim of the Defendant that the land was held on a mokurari tenure. In the deed of sale of the 25th April 1865 the land is described as being possessed under hereditary potta. But this is certainly a deed that does not bind the mutwalli; as he is not responsible for any recital made in a deed to which he is not a party. If the title of the Defendant to plot No. 1 rested on the 3 documents alone, it is clear the case of the Defendant must fail, for the dowl potta A52 certainly does not convey a permanent interest in the land, but only a temporary one, limited to the time of the executant's incumbency and that only was granted in favour of Sarnamayi, who is no longer in occupation. The mention in this potta of an istafa by Madan Mohan Mochi and the istafa A12 produced by the Defendant show that the land cannot be transferable without the consent of the landlord, the mutwalli. It may be added that in the 4 rent receipts for this plot produced by the Defendant the name of the tenant is entered as Sarnamayi. This shows that Exhs. A12 and A13 can never have been shown to, or, at all events, never acted on by the landlord.

ISMAIL KHAN MAHOMED v. L. P. D. BROUGHTON.

The Defendant, however, attempts to carry the history of this plot No. 1 much further back, and for this purpose has produced some documents purporting to be of much earlier date. The first of these is a potta, marked F5, for 14 cottahs of land in favour of one Safi Mistri at a rental of Rs. 1-4-0 per annum. This purports to bear date the 11th Ashwin 1115. This is said to be an error for 1195 which would correspond with the year 1788. No reliance can, however, in our opinion, be placed on this document, as it appears to us not to be genuine. It is apparently recently written on old paper. Moreover, it purports to be a copy certified to be correct by some unknown person named Hossein sheristadar, and the boundaries given in it are so vague that it cannot be connected with certainty with Sarnamayi's plot, now in the Defendant's possession. Then this potta, or rather copy of a potta, is followed up by A45, a deed of sale, dated 20th Baisakh 1220 (or 1813), purporting to be executed by Safi Mistri in favour of Hafizulla; A46, an istafa of the same date by Safi Mistri in favour of Hafizulla; a potta, Ex. F., dated 21st Baisakh 1220, in favour of Hafizulla; A44, a deed of sale, dated 1235 or 1828, by the heirs of Hafizulla in favour of Ram Lochan, Golak Das and Ram Kishore Mochi of 13 cottahs out of the 14 cottahs purchased by Hafizulla; A47, apparently a similar deed of sale bearing the same date and of the same land in favour of Mohesh Chandra Chowdhuri; Ex. F3, a dowl potta for 13 cottahs of land at a rent of Rs. 1-2-10, in favour of Ram Lochan Das; A53, a conveyance, dated 4th Assar 1257 (or 1850) by Golak Das and Nilmoney Das Mochi in favour of Ram Lochan Mochi transferring to him their shares in the 13 cottahs of land; A43, an istafa of the same date; A54, an ekrar of the same year by Nilmoney Das in favour of Ram Lochan Das, relating to the occupation of a house on the land; A51, a mortgage, dated 1265 or 1858, by Nobin Das Mochi in favour of Nazim Koyal of 13 cottahs of land; A48, a deed of sale, dated 19th Bhadra 1266 or 1859, by Madan Mohan Mochi, Nabin Chandra Mochi and Sreemutti Khema Sundari Dassi in favour of Sarnamayi of the 13 cottahs of land with the one-storied building standing on it; and A49, an istafa of the same year relinquishing the land in favour of Sarnamayi. The deed of sale, A48, is no doubt a perfectly genuine deed, and the istafa A49 may be so also; but if so, as it is produced by the Defendant, it can never have been shown to the landlord. The documents A51 A53, A54 may be genuine, but they in no way bind the Plaintiff or his lessor. A43 may also be genuine, but if so, it was never shown to the landlord, and never acted on, inasmuch as, first, it is now produced by the Defendant, and, secondly, it appears from A49, that the mutation prayed for by A43 never took place. But the others of these earlier documents we have no hesitation in rejecting as spurious. They are of the same description as Ex. F5, on which, as we have already explained, we can place no reliance. The document A47 is now nothing but a few shreds of paper perfectly undecipherable, and further it does not appear why there should be two deeds of sale of the same date for the same land.

The history of the next plot, designated by the learned counsel for the Appellant as Hassell's plot, is even more complicated. It is a plot of 5 bighas 13 cottahs, the rent of which is said to be Rs. 10-9-6. The Plaintiff produces a kabuliyat for this plot, Ex. 21, dated 5th August 1846, executed by Mr. N. P. Hassell in favour of the mutwalli of the Hooghly Imambara. It recites that the executant takes settlement of 5 bighas 13 cottahs of an annual jumma of Rs. 10-9-6. According to the kabuliyat this land was formerly held by Motiram Dhobi, who sold it to Mr. James Green who sold it to Mr. Hassell with "fixtures and structures" (amla o aolat) as per deed of relinquishment dated 2nd December 1845. The Defendant produces the corresponding potta A6, bearing the same date, but the deed of relinquishment referred to in the kabuliyat is not forthcoming, which is significant because, in this instance, mutation of names did take place, and Hassell's name was entered on the landlord's register. The potta A6 is in similar terms to the potta A52 for plot No. 1. It limits the rights of the lessee to the time of the grantor's incumbency. The rent is to be paid year by year. Then there is a conveyance A2 by Hassell to Messrs. George and John Allardice, coach builders in Calcutta, dated 14th February 1852, which purports to convey an estate in fee simple in 6 bighas 16 cottahs, that is the 5 bighas 13 cottahs bought fr

ISMAIL KHAN MAHOMED v. I. P. D. BROUGHTON.

Green plus 1 bigha 3 cottahs of lukheraj land which latter plot is no part of the subject-matter of this suit. The Allardices sold to Nawab Khas Mahal on the 19th April 1860 by a deed, Ex. 24, executed in Scotland and purporting to convey the 6 bighas 16 cottahs in perpetuity. But Nawab Khas Mahal never got her name registered as tenant. The 4 rent receipts produced with regard to this plot are all in the name of the old tenant Hassell. The potta A6 for this plot clearly conveys only a limited interest in the land, and there is nothing to show cognizance on the part of landlord of the terms of Hassell's conveyance to the Allardices or of the Allardices' conveyance to Khas Mahal. For this plot too, the Defendant produces earlier documents. The plot of 5 bighas 13 cottahs is said to be made up of 4 plots.

Thus :—

Motiram Dhobi's land	0	12	0
Dharmdas's land	0	6	0
Nachim Mandal's land	1	0	0
Sarup Khansamah's land	3	15	0

In support of the Defendant's claim to long possession of this plot are produced A33, a deed of sale of 12 cottahs, dated 1793; Ex. F1, a lease, dated 1227 (or 1820), in favour of Motiram Dhobi of 12 cottahs of land; A29, a kobala of the same year conveying these 12 cottahs to Motiram Dhobi; A23, a kobala dated the 10th July 1838 of the same 12 cottahs of land to Mr. James Green; A24, a notice of relinquishment of the same date by Motiram Dhobi in favour of Mr. Green; and A26, a conveyance of 5 bighas 1 cottah plus 12 cottahs of land, dated 2nd December 1845, in favour of Mr.

Hassell. Then there are two deeds of sale by Sheikh Ashraf in favour of Nilmoney Pal, dated 25th Bhadra 1203 or 17th September 1796, the former of 1 bigha 3 cottahs of land (which does not appear to have any connection with the land in dispute) and of 6 cottahs of land which may be the 3rd part of this plot No. 2. Then there is A28, by which Nilmoney Pal conveys 1 bigha 3 cottahs of land to Keshub Chandra Poddar and A27 by which he conveys 6 cottahs to the same transferee. Then we have a dowl potta F2, dated the 3rd March 1837, granting to Mr. Green a lease of 6 cottahs which were formerly in the holding of Keshub Chandra Poddar.

The next document A36 is a deed of sale by Sarup Khansamah to Hafizulla of 3 bighas 1 cottahs of land which is followed by A18, a deed of sale dated 23rd Baisakh 1236 or 6th May 1829 of 1 bigha 15 cottahs of land by the heirs of Hafizulla in favour of Mr. Green. Finally, we have a dowl potta F4 purporting to be a lease, dated 26th Baisakh 1236, by the gomasta of the zemindar in favour of Mr. Green of 3 bighas 15 cottahs of land formerly held by Hafizulla and of one bigha of land, formerly the holding of Nachim Mandal at a total rental of Rs. 8-8-0.

Now of these deeds, Exhs. 21, 24, A6 A2 and A18 are doubtless perfectly genuine deeds, but they are either in favour of the Plaintiff's case or they prove nothing against him. The remaining deeds produced in connection with this plot are private deeds, which in no way bind the landlord and many of which are either of doubtful authenticity or are palpable forgeries. In the former may be placed F4 and in the latter, the so-called pottas F1, F2 and the deeds A33, A34 and A35. In particular, the last-mentioned document is most clearly spurious. It is newly written on old paper. The ink has sunk into the artificially softened paper and in particular in writing the word "mouzah" on it, the ink has spread over the paper.

The next two plots Nos. 3 and 4 are called Meru Mistri's two plots, the former of 1 bigha 17 cottahs held at a rental of Rs. 3-4 and the latter of 2 bighas 9 cottahs and 10 chittaks, the rent of which was Rs. 2 15-2. Meru Mistri's potta for the 3rd plot is G1, dated 15th September 1842. It limits the rights of the tenant to the time of the mutwalli's incumbency and prohibits his erecting any new buildings on the land. Ex. 22 is the corresponding kabuliyat executed by Meru Mistri, in which Meru Mistri expressly admits that the lease is only for the period of the grantor's possession and agrees to pay enhanced rent, if the rate is enhanced in the mahal. The Defendant produces A3 and A4, two deeds of the 19th July 1840 and 8th July 1840 relating to 14½ cottahs of land then acquired by Meru Mistri; A8, a mortgage deed dated 1864 of 17½ cottahs of land; Ex. A25, a deed of sale by Sheraj Khan-samah in favour of Meru Mistri for 1 bigha of land which is dated 2nd Chait 1247 or 14th March 1841; A37, a deed for the same quantity of land executed by Meru Mistri in favour of Subjan Bibi, and dated 11th Aughran 1262 or 1855; and A38, a similar deed dated 25th Srahan 1265 or 9th August 1858 in favour of Messrs. G. and J. Allardice. Ex. 24 (the deed executed in Scotland) shows the purchase by Khas Mahal on the 19th April 1860 of 1 bigha from the Allardices at a rental of Rs. 1-4 while A15, dated the 7th June 1867, shows the purchase by Khas Mahal of the 15 cottahs 14 chittaks out of the remaining 17 cottahs of the plot from the heirs of Meru Mistri. A14 is an istafa by the heirs of Meru Mistri, for this 15 cottahs 14 chittaks of land which however seems never to have been acted on. There seems to be no ground for impugning the genuineness of any of these deeds. The potta G1 does not show the grant of any permanent interest. It is true that in a Persian endorsement, containing a précis of the contents of the deed written at the top of it, Golam Haider's 14½ cottahs of land are described as his paternal mowasi jumma, and Ghulam Kadir's 2½ cottahs are described as his paternal mowasi jumma, but these words do not occur in the operative part of the lease, which is in Bengali, nor yet in the corresponding kabuliyat, Ex. 22. But if these words be held to prove that 17½ cottahs of the 3rd plot were originally let on a hereditary lease, this lease and kabuliyat show that these 17½ cottahs were relinquished in favour of the landlord and a fresh lease for 1 bigha 17 cottahs was granted to Meru Mistri on perfectly different terms. In the other deeds there is nothing to bind the Plaintiff's lessor. Ex. G, dated the 23rd May 1840, is Meru Mistri's potta for the 4th plot of two bighas 9½ cottahs of adlat land, (i.e., trees and homestead land) formerly in the occupation of one Bajit Doctor. A7 is a deed of sale, dated 4th May 1839, for 3 bighas 9½ cottahs of Bajit Doctor's land executed by Green to Sherajuddin.

ISMAIL KHAN MAHOMED v. L. P. D. BROUGHTON.

but this does not show how this land came to Meru Mistri. A1 is a deed of sale, dated 6th January 1861, for 1 bigha 6 cottahs of this land executed by Meru Mistri in favour of Subjan. A10 is a mortgage deed, dated 7th February 1863, of 1 bigha 6 cottahs of land executed by Subjan Bibi in favour of one Alam Khan, and A16 is a registered deed of sale, dated 15th Kartic 1273 or 31st October, 1866, by Subjan Bibi in favour of Khas Mahal for 1 bigha 6 cottahs of land which it is said had been found on measurement to be only 1 bigha and 1 cottah. This is all of this plot that Khas Mahal seems to have become the owner of. The 5th plot is called Juraon Mistri's plot. It is 11½ cottahs in area, the rent being 6 annas. There is no potta or kabuliyat for this plot. But there are 4 receipts for rent produced which show that rent is still paid in the name of Juraon Mistri. The Defendant with regard to this plot produces A41, a deed of sale, dated 3rd Jeyth 1266 (or May 1859), for 11½ cottahs executed by Haroo Ostagar (apparently an heir or successor of Juraon Mistri in the land) in favour of Messrs. Eastman & Co., A50; an istafa of the same date in favour of Eastman & Co., which seems never to have been acted on, for no mutation of names took place, and Allardice's deed (Allardice being a partner in the firm of Eastman & Co.) in favour of Khas Mahal shows a transfer of 1 bigha 11 cottahs 8 chittaks of Haroo Ostagar's land in favour of Khas Mahal.

These appear to be all the deeds produced in this case, except A40, which is a miras potta, dated the 19th Ashwin 1265 (or 1858), granting lease of 3 bighas 5 cottahs of land for building purposes executed by A. Gharmal, the general agent to the zemindar of Kidderpore in favour of Messrs. G. and J. Allardice. But this deed of sale does not relate to any of the 5 plots in dispute in this case.

The result of our examination of these documents is that in none of the deeds or potas which we find genuine do there occur any words importing a hereditary or permanent interest in the land; even in the deeds we have been obliged to reject as spurious, there are no such words. It has been argued in favour of the genuineness of these latter deeds, that if they were forgeries they would have contained such words conveying a permanent interest. But to this it may be replied that the documents appear to have been framed very ingeniously, more with the view of proving long possession from which the Courts have hitherto been ready to presume a permanent grant, and, secondly, they may have been copied from genuine deeds which contained no such words and it may have been thought that the insertion of an unusual clause conveying a permanent right would have excited suspicion.

The genuine deeds in this case show, first, that the mutwalli in granting leases always limited the tenant's rights to the term of his own incumbency; secondly, that when any change of tenant took place which he chose to recognise, he took care to grant a new lease to the new tenant and not merely one confirmatory of the old; thirdly, that the occupation of the Defendant's predecessors in the land does not go further back than about 1840—there is certainly no satisfactory evidence of possession by the Defendant's predecessors for 110 years, as the Subordinate Judge finds to have been the case—and, fourthly, that the Begum Khas Mahal, whom the present Defendant represents, was never recognised as a tenant by the landlord and has always paid rent in the names of the old tenants.

The Plaintiff would therefore seem to be entitled to eject the Defendant. In fact this case seems to be in all fours with the case of Ismail Khan v. Joygoon Bibee (1) in which the same Plaintiff obtained a decree for ejectment in very similar circumstances.

The Defendant, however, relies on the cases of Caspersz v. Kedar Nath Sarbadhikari (2), and Durga Mohan Das v. Rakhal Chunder Roy (3). The former of these cases was a perfectly different case from the present one. In the first place it was a second appeal, in which the learned Judges were bound by the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below. In the second place, it was a case in which the origin of the tenancy was unknown and in which, therefore, the Court was justified in the circumstances of the case in presuming a permanent grant. The present case is a first appeal in which it is our duty to deal with the evidence and in which the origin of the tenancy of each plot, except plot No. 5, is proved by the documents. Even with regard to plot No. 5, the Defendant has produced deeds which do not take its origin further back than 1838. The latter case relied on is also a second appeal in which the cause of action arose in the town of Barisal. The origin of the tenancy was unknown.

The case was remanded as the Subordinate Judge was thought not to have sufficiently considered the case whether the long possession and the instances of transfer and succession did not warrant a presumption in favour of the permanency of the tenure. This is no guide to the decision of this case in which the original tenancy in regard to 4 plots at least is known, and in which in regard to the 5th plot neither long possession nor numerous instances of transfer and succession have been proved.

The Defendant further argues that the land was granted to his predecessors not for building but for agricultural purposes, on which argument his counsel seems to base a claim, though he has not put it forward in so many words, to a right of occupancy in the land. But the only two deeds in which words implying that the leases were for agricultural purposes appear, viz., F5 and A35 have been found by us to be spurious documents. Furthermore, the other deeds in the case show the various plots to be plots of homestead land and they are all situated within suburban municipal limits where the provisions of the rent law have no application. The use of printed forms of receipt under the Bengal Tenancy Act in granting rent receipts proves nothing.

Having now dealt with the facts of the case, we will consider the further question whether there has been any acquiescence or standing by on the part of the landlord which can preclude the Plaintiff from obtaining a decree for ejectment. In this connection it is necessary to note the following facts: (1) that there is no direct evidence of knowledge on the part of the mutwalli or of his ijaradars of the buildings erected by the Khas Mahal; (2) that the mutwalli resides at Hooghly about 30 miles distant from, and on the other side of the river to, the land in dispute; (3) that the land has been for a series of years granted in ijara. It was at first leased in ijara for 3 years, then for 3 again, then for 5 years, then 20 years and now for 30 years. The Plaintiff has produced these ijara leases. The Subordinate Judge has refused to receive them. But we think the Plaintiff is as much entitled to their admission in evidence as the Defendant to the admission of the documents, he alleges he found in the Begum Khas Mahal's boxes. We admit them accordingly. Fourthly, there is nothing to show that any of the buildings now on the land were erected by any of the former tenants. There was evidently a one-storied house on Sarnamay's plot. That seems to have disappeared. As to Meru Mistri's plot No. 4, he was expressly prohibited from making any new additions to the old buildings. Notwithstanding this, the two-storied building now on the land has been erected by the Nawab Khas Mahal in defiance of this prohibition of the landlord. Finally as to the facts, we would point out that in our opinion the value of the buildings now on the land has been grossly exaggerated. The Defendant's witness, Mr. Cotton, has valued it including the land at Rs. 60,000, but on cross-examination it was made apparent that this was but the vaguest guess on the witness's part, based on no materials and one which the witness could not substantiate by figures. The Subordinate Judge describes the building as a 'palatial' one. This, in our opinion, is a most hyperbolical description of it, which would seem to be only an ordinary two-storied house in a, by no means, good state of repair.

In these circumstances, having regard to the evidence in the case, we consider, there has been no standing by or acquiescence on the part of the Plaintiff's lessor which can estop the Plaintiff from ejecting the Defendant. The Plaintiff's lessor gave no permission to build this house; on the contrary he expressly prohibited its construction. He is not shown to have been aware of its erection. From the distance of his residence and the fact of the land being given in ijara [see Krishna Kishore Neogi v. Mir Mahomed Ali (4)] no presumption of his knowledge of, or acquiescence in, the construction of building can arise. And even if there was knowledge of and non-interference with the erection of the building on the part of the Plaintiff's lessor, this would not in equity amount to an estoppel. [Jugmohan Das v. Pallonjee (5).] The most recent exposition of the law on this subject is contained in the Privy Council case of Lala Beni Ram v. Kundan Lall (6) in which it has been said:—"In order to raise the equitable estoppel which was enforced against the Appellants by both the Appellate Courts below it was incumbent upon the Respondents to show that the conduct of the owner, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that they had, by plain implication contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessees originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation." It is sufficient to say that the Respondent has been able to show in this case nothing which would justify the drawing of any such inference.

In the conclusion of his address, the learned counsel for the Respondent raised the startling argument that the land in dispute was wagf land, which could not be leased for more than 3 years, and that therefore the Plaintiff is not entitled to sue. If the learned counsel had wished to rely on such a plea as this, it would have been proper we think for him to have raised it in the beginning of his address to us rather than in its very end. A complete answer to this plea has, however, been given by the learned counsel for the Appellant who has pointed out (1) that such a plea was never raised in the lower Court and that there is no issue in the suit which covers it; (2) that the land in dispute is not wagf property. It is towliut kharij property of the same description as the property in dispute in Ismail Khan v. Joyjoon Bibee (1). In none of the documents filed in the case is the land described as wagf land. On the contrary in the rent receipts it is described as part of the "estate of the late Munnoo Jan Khanum." This lady was the sister of the founder of the endowment of the Hooghly Imambara, and her property is managed by the mutwalli of the Imambara along with the wagf property (though no part of it) under para. 4 of Government letter of the 24th February 1876, which has been filed in this case.

We accordingly decree this appeal with costs in all Courts.

On behalf of the Respondent no claim to compensation for the value of the buildings has been made, and we think, looking at the rule laid down in Sheikh Hossein v. Govardhone Das, Parman Das (7) and Jugmohun Das v. Pallonjee (5), as well as to the fact that the principal building now on the land was erected in spite of the landlord's express prohibition, he is not entitled to any compensation. The Defendant may, however, remove the buildings on the land before the decree for ejectment is executed.

As Nawab Khas Mahal obliterated the boundaries of the various plots of land she purchased, the Defendant is bound to make good to the Plaintiff the quantity of the land to which the latter is entitled if he cannot point them out. BENI RAM v. KUNDAN LALL (2) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of January 1899, against the decree of T. W. Richardson, Esq., Additional Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 30th September 1899, affirming a decree of Babu Sasi Bhusan Chaudhuri, Munsif of Alipur, dated the 22nd March 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff, the Receiver to the Bhukailash estate, to eject the Defendants from certain premises in Kidderpur measuring 1 bigha of land and having a pucca building upon it, on the ground that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the Sarbadhikaris), who held the premises were merely tenants-at-will not having a transferable interest; and that Defendant No. 3 (Madhab Karmokar) obtained no rights under his purchase and was a trespasser who was not entitled to remain on the land. The Sarbadhikari Defendants did not appear and the suit was contested by Defendant No. 3, Madhab Karmokar, and on his behalf it was contended that the notice was invalid, that the tenancy of the Sarbadhikaris was a permanent one by express as well as by implied grant; and that the Plaintiff was estopped from asking for khas possession.

A. CASPERSZ v. KEDAR NATH SARBADHIKARI.

The Sarbadhikari Defendants held the tenure as successors and heirs of Beni Madhub and Modhu Sudan Sarbadhikari, who, in their turn, inherited it from Jaggan Nath Sarbadhikari. For two generations the Sarbadhikaris had occupied the land as tenants of the estate paying a rent which was increased at irregular intervals. The Sarbadhikaris and their co-shareers had sold their rights to Defendant No. 3 at various dates and the latter had been in possession of the entire tenure since 1295, B. S.

To prove the origin and nature of the tenancy a potta was produced by the Defendant No. 3, but it was held to be not genuine but it appeared that a pucca house had been built upon the land by the tenant and that the building had been added to from time to time and that it had been standing on the land for a very considerable time.

The second issue framed which is material to this report was as follows:—

“Whether the Adhikaris held the tenure as a permanent one either by express or implied grant; if so, is the suit maintainable?”

The Munsif held that the tenancy was not a permanent one but that the conduct of the parties was such as to debar the landlord from evicting the Sarbadhikaris; that the landlord took Bharatia kabuliyat from them but allowed them to erect pucca structures on the land, which had been, even after the expiry of the term of the last kabuliyat, allowed to stand; and the Munsif, on these findings, dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the Additional District Judge of Alipur held that in the absence of all documentary evidence, the long possession of the vendor Defendants, the Sarbadhikaris, and their ancestors, and the fact that the landlord permitted a pucca house to be built upon the land by the tenant which house had been standing for a considerable time, raised the presumption that the original grant was some kind of permanent building-grant; that the Defendant No. 3 could not be evicted from the land and that the suit had been rightly dismissed.

The present appeal was then preferred by the Plaintiff and the same questions as were raised in the Courts below were argued before the Court, and the further question was raised that as the Defendants in the first instance based their case upon a fraudulent potta, it was not open to them to set up the alternative case upon which they relied, viz., of long possession and acquiescence and conduct to prove that the tenancy was of a permanent character.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a suit for ejectment. The defence is that the Defendants are not liable to be ejected, as their tenure of the land in question is of a permanent nature. The matter comes before us on second appeal, and we are, therefore, bound by the findings of fact of the Court below.

In support of their case the Defendants first set up a potta which purported to show that the tenure was of a permanent nature. That document has been found by both the Courts below not to be genuine. But then the Defendants say that, even if the potta be not genuine, they have been for a very long time in possession of the land in dispute, that it has been from time to time transferred by succession and purchase from one tenant to another, that pucca buildings have many years ago been erected upon it by successive tenants, and that that has been done with the permission and knowledge of the land lord, and that, upon these facts, the Court would be justified in inferring or presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature. To which the Appellant replies that as the Defendants in the first instance base their case upon a fraudulent potta, it is not open to them to set up the alternative case upon which they now rely. I do not think this contention can properly prevail. When parties to a litigation set up a false document, as here, that circumstance no doubt induces the Court to view the evidence which they tender upon some other part of the case, with great care and possibly with some suspicion, but it does not prevent the parties from setting up such alternative case, nor prevent the Court from duly weighing and considering the evidence adduced in support of it. In this connection I may refer to the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ranee Surnomoyee v. Maharajah Suttees Chunder Roy Bahadoor (1). The passage I refer to is at page 149 and runs thus—"When false witnesses or forged documents are produced in support of a case, the fact naturally creates suspicion as to the case itself; and if the evidence on which their Lordships act depended in any degree for its credibility or weight on such witnesses, or document, they would have paused as to their conclusion. The fact is not so, however, in the present case; their Lordships believe they have to deal with a just cause, foolishly and wickedly attempted to be supported by false evidence." That disposes of the first point.

The second point is that, having regard to the language of para. 15 of the defence, this alternative case has not been sufficiently or properly pleaded. This, to my mind, savours of too much refinement, for it is reasonably clear that the Defendants intended to raise this case, and it is equally clear from the second issue in the first Court, which runs as follows:—"Whether the Adhikaris held the tenure as a permanent one either by express or implied grant; if so, is the suit maintainable?" that the Plaintiff was aware that this case was raised, and was in no wise misled by the pleading. Moreover, evidence was gone into on the question without objection, and the Appellants have not even raised this point as one of their grounds of appeal, and so it cannot be discussed without our permission. To my mind it is a mere after-thought, and there is nothing in it.

I now pass to the substantial question in the case, and, that is whether upon the facts found by the Court below, the Court was justified in presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature. The Judge sums up the matter as follows:—"In the absence of all documentary evidence, I must hold that the long possession of the vendor Defendants and their ancestors, and the fact that the landlord permitted a pucca house to be built upon the land by the tenant, which house has stood for a very considerable time, raises the presumption that the original grant was some kind of permanent building-grant." I must also refer to one or two other passages in his judgment. He says "there can be no doubt on the evidence that the house on the land in dispute has been built by successive tenants," and a little earlier in relation to the question of transfer he says: "At any rate the landlord acquiesced, and it is admitted that, for at least two generations, the Sarbadhikaris have occupied the land as tenants of the estate paying a rent which was increased at irregular intervals from Rs. 5 in 1239 to Rs. 18-10 in 1291." I may point out in passing that acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found: and upon it the judgments of the Appellate Court are not final [see Beni Ram v. Kundan Lall (2)]. However, it has not been suggested that the inference quâ the question of acquiescence, was not in the present case well founded.

Upon these findings of fact it is urged that the Court below was not justified in presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature: Now in substance what facts are found? We have the fact of the long possession by the Defendants and their ancestors, the fact of the landlord having permitted them to build a pucca house upon it, that the house has been there for a very considerable time, that it has been built (this probably means added to) by successive tenants and that the tenure has from time to time been transferred by succession and purchase, in which the landlord is found to have acquiesced, or of which he could not have been ignorant as he accepted rent from the transferees. In my opinion these facts are sufficient to warrant the Court in presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature, and the authorities appear to me to support this view. I will first refer to the case of Baloo Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (3) and the passage which I propose to read is at page 466. "And upon the proof here given of long and uninterrupted enjoyment, accompanied by the recognition of its hereditary and transferable character it is almost impossible to suppose that a suit by the zemindar in the Civil Court to disturb the possession of the Respondent, could not be successfully resisted."

I now pass to the case of Gungadhar Shikdar v. Azimuddin Shah Biswas (4). This case in its circumstances is not dissimilar from the present, it is not suggested that the lands in the present case were let out for agricultural purposes, and the Court said—"In this case we think there was quite sufficient ground to justify the Court below in presuming a grant of a permanent nature in favour of the Defendant's ancestors. It is conceded that the land in question was never let for agricultural purposes. It was apparently let upwards of 60 years ago for building purposes, because it is found that after the grant (whatever it was), these buildings, which are of a substantial character, were erected some 60 years ago by the Defendant's ancestors, and that they and their ancestors have lived there ever since. Under these circumstances, we think that the Courts below were at liberty to presume, if they thought fit, that the land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant itself was of a permanent character." In the present case we have the element of pucca buildings built a very long time ago by the ancestors and predecessors in title of the Defendants and apparently added to by the successive tenants.

The case last cited virtually followed the case of Prosunno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagunnath Bysack and others (5), where this passage occurs:—"No doubt if land is let for building pucca houses upon it or if the tenant with the knowledge of the landlord does in fact lay out large sums upon it in buildings or other substantial improvements, that fact, coupled with a long continued enjoyment of the property by the tenant or his predecessors in title might justify any Court in presuming a permanent grant specially if the origin of the tenancy could not be ascertained." Here I pause to observe that the origin of the tenancy has not been ascertained in the present case. If there were any document a potta for instance, which showed the origin and nature of the tenancy, very different considerations would arise. "But the mere circumstance of a tenant occupying buildings upon property would not justify such presumption, unless it could be shown that they were erected by him or his predecessors, because a landlord might let property of that kind in the same way as agricultural land, at will, or from year to year."

There is only one other case, a recent case, that of Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Joygoon Bibee (6), which I need refer to in this connection. That was a regular appeal, and the Court could go and did go into the evidence. There I find this statement of the law:—"When the origin of a tenancy and the circumstances attending its creation are not known, evidence of the mode of dealing with the land demised and of the acts and conduct of the parties generally, constitutes the best and indeed the only evidence to prove the nature of the tenancy. If that had been the case, the evidence of the mode of dealing with the property such as we have here, might, perhaps, have been sufficient to raise the presumption of a permanent tenancy. But where as in this case, we know when and under what circumstances the tenancy was created, evidence such as has been adduced is not sufficient for that purpose. Indeed, the circumstances attending the creation of the tenancy positively militate against any inference that it was intended to be permanent." These authorities appear to me to establish that upon the facts found the Court below was justified in presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature. I need not refer to the well-known case of Ramsden v. Dyson (7) and to the Privy Council case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lall (8), which have been cited by the

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION

MIS. NOS. 52 AND 53 OF 1901

GHOSE, J.	}	GYA SINGH and others,
TAYLOR, J.		Petitioners.
1901.		v.
24, July.		MOHAMED SOHMAN,
		Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs 526, 164, 342—Transfer of pending cases—Magistrate taking part during investigation by Police—Examination of accused by Magistrate preliminary to trial by way of cross-examination.

When a Magistrate was present at a search made by the Police during investigation and in all probability he came to know of some facts in connection with the case, it is expedient that the case should be tried by some other Magistrate.

During Police investigation the examination of an accused by a Magistrate by way of cross-examination is improper.

(TAYLOR, J.)—In the course of Police investigation a Magistrate is entitled to record under sec. 164, C. Cr. P., any voluntary statement made, by an accused person, but he is not entitled to examine him in respect of the facts of the case.

Sec. 342 of the Code only empowers a Court to examine an accused to explain evidence already recorded.

This was a rule issued on the 6th of June 1901, to show cause why the proceedings which are pending against the Petitioner before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh for an offence under sec. 353, I. P. C., should not be transferred to the file of another Magistrate.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

One Enayet Hossein of the place owed the Petitioner, Gya Singh, Rs. 125 and the said Enayet and his uncle Kanhai Khangra being cooks in the employ of the local Sub-Inspector.

On the 22nd of May 1901 Kanhai Khangra lodged an information to the thana that Gya Singh and one Moha Singh had taken Enayet and his mother to his house and kept them seated in the verandah in order to realize the money due from them and had stolen one thala, one lota and one gurguri worth about 5 or 6 rupees in all from Enayet's house.

The Sub-Inspector of Police arrived soon after and wanted to search the house; upon Gya Singh asking the reason why he was arrested he was caught by the Sub-Inspector himself by the hand whereupon he shouted out and some men shoved and jostled the Sub-Inspector and Gya Singh escaped. The Sub-Inspector being further threatened he ordered his men to inform the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police who were putting up in the Dak-bungalow at Mokameh.

On information being given to them the District Magistrate and District Superintendent of Police and the Sub-Divisional Officer of Barh, Mr. J. G. Monahan, arrived at the place and they continued searching the house but not a single article reported to have been stolen was found.

Gya Singh v. MOHAMED SOLIMAN.

Mohabir Singh, a brother of Gya Singh, was then sent for and arrested by the District Superintendent in the presence of the Sub-Divisional Officer and District Magistrate and first of all taken to the thanah and thence to the Dak-bungalow where the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Superintendent of Police were putting up. In the presence of the Police Superintendent, Mohabir Singh made a statement before Mr. J. G. Monahan, the Sub-Divisional Officer, which was recorded under sec. 164, Code of Criminal Procedure, and the usual certificate was given by the said officer.

Thereupon two criminal cases were instituted upon police-reports against the Petitioners, before the Sub-Divisional officer, viz., one for theft and wrongful confinement, rioting and house-trespass under secs. 380, 348, 147, 451, I. P. C., in which Kanhai Khangra was the complainant and the other for rioting and assault under secs. 147 and 353, I. P. C., in which the Sub-Inspector was the complainant.

Mr. Henderson and Babu Khetter Mohun Sen for the Petitioners.

No one appeared to shew cause.

The JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT were as follows:—

GHOSE, J.—We have considered the explanations submitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in connection with these rules, and it seems to us that it would be expedient for the ends of justice to transfer the cases that are now pending in his file to the file of any other Magistrate in the District whom the District Magistrate may appoint in that behalf.

It is not necessary that we should examine all the matters referred to in the affidavit of the Petitioner, and those in the explanation submitted by the Magistrate. It is sufficient to say that it does appear that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took some part, or, at any rate, was present, on the occasion when the Police made the search, and in this connection he probably became aware of some of the facts in connection with the case. Then it appears that the Police brought up before him one of the accused for the purpose of his examination being recorded and such examination was recorded. We have examined the said examination, and it seems to us that it was an improper examination. The accused was examined on various matters (and the examination rather took the shape of cross-examination) which should certainly not have been done; and we think that in trying the case, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate could hardly disabuse his mind of the impression that was formed at the time of the examination, which, as we have already said, was improper.

In this view of the matter we think, without casting the slightest reflection upon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate concerned, that it is expedient that the case should be transferred from his file to the file of some other Magistrate in the District, whom the District Magistrate may appoint in that behalf.

TAYLOR, J.—I concur, and would further point out to the Assistant Magistrate that under sec. 164, C. Cr. P., in the course of a Police investigation, he is entitled to record any voluntary statement made by the accused person, but he is not entitled to examine the accused person in respect of the facts of the case.

That power is only given him by sec. 342, C. Cr. P., under which he may examine him in respect of evidence recorded against him for the purpose of explaining such evidence.

Rule made absolute.

SMURTHWAITE v. HANNAY (1) referred to.

ABDUR RAHMAN v. THE EMPRESS (2) disapproved.

This was an appeal against a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Madras under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865, which in modification of the verdict of the jury in a case tried at the First Criminal Sessions for the Town of Madras in 1900, and of the sentence pronounced in pursuance of such verdict by the presiding Judge, sentenced this Appellant to a term of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000 and in default of payment of the fine to a further term of nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

The Appellant, N. A. Subramania Iyer, was Superintendent of the Military Accounts Department of Madras. John Lewis Philp D'Santos was Supervisor of the same Department subordinate to him.

On the 8th day of November 1899 the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras framed ten charges against the Appellant and the said D'Santos for offences under secs. 109, 161 and 384, of the Indian Penal Code, and committed them for trial on the said charges to the High Court of Madras.

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The case came on for hearing at the First Criminal Sessions for the year 1900 when the Appellant and the said D'Santos were jointly charged under the said sections upon an indictment which contained seven counts.

The first count stated as follows:—

"That they, the said N. A. Subramania Iyer and the said John L. P. D'Santos, being public servants, to wit, respectively Deputy Examiner, Superintendent and Supervisor of the Accounts Branch of the Military Accounts Department, in or about the month of March 1896 did conspire and combine together, and thereafter until the month of November 1898 did continue so to conspire and combine, for the purpose of extorting money and obtaining illegal gratifications from clerks in the Accounts Branch of the Military Accounts Department for himself the said N. A. Subramania Iyer, in pursuance of and according to which said conspiracy and combination the said N. A. Subramania Iyer did obtain for himself through the said John L. P. D'Santos divers sums of money, to wit, from one Kalliana Chetty during the years '96, '97 and '98 sums amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 680; from one C. Balasundra Moodelliar the sum of Rs. 100 on or about August 27th, 1896, the sum of Rs. 50 on or about March 1st, 1897, and the sum of Rs. 100 on or about May 10th, 1897; from one K. Sreenivasa Charry the sum of Rs. 100 on or about October 2nd, 1898; and from one C. Vedachella Chetty the sum of Rs. 5 in August 1898, the sum of Rs. 5 in September 1898, the sum of Rs. 3 in October 1898, and the sum of Rs. 3 in November 1898, and that they have thereby committed an offence punishable under secs. 109 and 384 and secs. 109 and 161 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the High Court of Judicature at Madras aforesaid."

The second, fourth and sixth counts charged the Appellant with having, on or about the 27th August 1896, the 1st March 1897, and the 10th May 1897, respectively, dishonestly induced one C. Balasundra Moodelliar to pay to himself through the said J. L. P. D'Santos the sums of Rs. 100, Rs. 50 and Rs. 100, the first and second of such acts being charged as an offence punishable under sec. 161 or 384 of the Indian Penal Code while the third is charged as an offence under secs. 109 and 161. The third, fifth and seventh counts charged D'Santos with having abetted the Appellant in the commission of the offences set out in counts two, four and six respectively, and as being thereby punishable under secs. 109 and 161 or 384.

On the 14th February 1900 the case came on for trial before Mr. Justice Boddam, when the Appellant's counsel took two objections to the indictment, first, that the first count was bad in itself under sec. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, secondly, that under the same section the union of the first count with the second, fourth and sixth made the whole indictment bad for misjoinder.

These objections were overruled by Mr. Justice Boddam who recorded the following reasons:—

"I see no objection to the first count. It charges one offence, viz., the offence of a continuing conspiracy which has been carried out in the manner therein shown and thereby shown to be a continuing conspiracy and is punishable as abetment under sec. 109."

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

"I see no objection to the first count being combined with the rest of the indictment under sec. 230."

On behalf of the Crown an application was made that a conditional pardon might be tendered to the second accused. The learned Judge declined to consider the application until the second accused had pleaded to the charges preferred against him. He then pleaded guilty to the 1st, 3rd, 5th and 7th counts, and his plea was recorded.

Before the pardon was tendered the Appellant's counsel objected that such a tender would be ultra vires, firstly, because the offences in question were not exclusively triable by the High Court, and, secondly, because pardon could not be tendered to D'Santos as he had already pleaded guilty. The objection was overruled. The learned Judge then tendered to the second accused a pardon under sec. 338 of the Criminal Procedure Code, following the words of sec. 337, and he was then removed from the dock. The whole of this proceeding took place in accordance with a previous arrangement arrived at between D'Santos and the Government Solicitor, and the plea of guilty, however apparently voluntary, was in fact made in the hope of purchasing a pardon.

The jury was then empannelled and the trial proceeded upon the entire indictment, and evidence was given upon all the criminal acts charged in the first and subsequent counts. When the evidence of D'Santos was tendered, the Appellant's counsel objected to his being sworn on the ground of the invalidity of his pardon. The objection was overruled.

The only evidence which is material in the present appeal is that bearing on the sixth count.

Balasundara Moodelliar, after speaking to the previous bribes which he said he had paid D'Santos at his request for the purpose of being paid to the Appellant, says that on the 30th April 1897 he received from D'Santos a letter marked B. "Before receiving this letter I had a conversation with D'Santos. He asked me to give Rs. 100 to the Iyer for having given me permanent promotion. I said I would speak to my father." From his father he procured two notes each for Rs. 50 which are identified as Nos.  $T_{73}$  32418 and  $T_{73}$  43491. These Balasundara gave on the 10th May to D'Santos in a cover. This cover, he says, D'Santos took into the Appellant's room and subsequently returned leaving the cover empty on Balasundara's desk. As he sat he heard the Appellant call Sivachandra Row and ask him to change some currency notes; Sivachandra was a clerk in the office; Balasundara says that there was no attempt at secrecy in getting the notes changed by Sivachandra, and that beside Sivachandra he had frequently seen peons and muchees take notes to change. It is proved that on the 10th May Sivachandra changed these two notes for a single note of Rs. 100, and that on the 26th May he purchased on behalf of the Appellant Government paper for Rs. 800, this note of Rs. 100 being part of the price paid. Sivachandra is not called for the prosecution. He is produced as a witness for the and swears that he received the two Rs. 50 notes from Balasundara and changed them into one for Rs. 100. That on the 25th May he received Rs. 100 from the Appellant to purchase Government securities and put them into his box; that the purchase was made on the 26th and that he paid in his own Rs. 100 note taking in its place small notes, part of those supplied by the Appellant.

D'Santos in his evidence threw the whole blame as to the demand for and the receipt of the bribes upon the Appellant. He admitted that about February a pardon was suggested in reference to which he says he went to the Government Solicitor, Mr. Barelay, and made a written statement. "It struck me I was likely to be convicted on the prosecution evidence. I was anxious to escape being convicted. I did not intend to stand my trial. Whether I am pardoned or not I am speaking the truth from strong moral grounds."

At the close of the evidence the jury found the Appellant guilty on the first, second and sixth counts, being advised by the Judge not to find a verdict of guilty on the fourth. By six to three they found that D'Santos had not spoken truth throughout. The Judge then ordered him to be placed in the dock, and sentenced the Appellant to three years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 8,000, and in default of payment to a further years' rigorous imprisonment. D'Santos was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Subsequently to this conviction and sentence the Officiating Advocate-General gave a certificate under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent for the High Court of Judicature at Madras, the material clauses of which were as follows:—

"(a) That in my judgment the learned Judge who presided at the First Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Judicature at Madras for 1900 erred in law in deciding that it was competent to him to tender a pardon to D'Santos notwithstanding that none of the offences in respect of which the said N. A. Subramania Iyer was being tried was within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, exclusively triable by the High Court and that therefore the learned Judge erred in law in admitting the evidence given by D'Santos as a witness for the Crown after pardon had been tendered to him and in placing the same before the jury.

"(b) That in my judgment the said learned Judge erred in law in not striking out the first count from the indictment but trying and convicting the said N. A. Subramania Iyer on it and in allowing evidence to be adduced by the Crown in respect of the first count as regards matters of alleged extortions of money and illegal gratifications therein specified other than those forming the subject-matter of the second, fourth and sixth counts and placing the same before the jury.

"(c) That in my judgment the learned Judge erred in law in trying the said N. A. Subramania Iyer on the first, second, fourth and sixth counts at one trial."

Upon this certificate the case was heard twice before the full Court of six Judges; first upon the question of law and next upon the facts.

On the questions of law all the Judges

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

held that the offer of a pardon to D'Santos was illegal, but all with the exception of Davies, J., held that his evidence was still admissible.

As to the first count while the Chief Justice, Shephard and Boddam, JJ., held that it was good, Benson, Moore and Davies, JJ., held that it was bad.

All the Judges, except Boddam, J., held that whether it was good or bad its union with the remaining counts made the whole indictment bad for misjoinder. But all the Judges, except Davies, J., who gave a qualified opinion, thought that it was open to them to strike out the first count and deal with the evidence applicable to the remaining counts.

Upon the final hearing upon the facts all the Judges were of opinion that the Appellant should be acquitted on the second count. They also agreed in thinking that D'Santos was utterly untruthful and that no reliance whatever could be placed upon his evidence. As to the sixth count which alone remained all the Judges except Davies, J., were of opinion that after excluding the evidence of D'Santos and disbelieving as they did the evidence of Sivachandra, there was enough left to support the conviction of the Appellant on the sixth count. Davies, J., thought that the charge being laid as one of bribery, the evidence of Balasundara was the evidence of an accomplice, which according to the invariable practice of the Courts of India required corroboration. As to Sivachandra he said, "now whether this story be true or false it is no corroboration of Balasundara's story and brings nothing home to the first accused. I therefore find that there is no legal evidence upon which the sixth count can be supported. Supposing again that I am wrong in appreciating the evidence, surely it was a case in which the jury might have doubts and might have given the accused the benefit of the doubt." Then he relied on the judgment of the Lord Chancellor in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (3) as showing that where the accused was entitled to the finding of a jury, it was not open to the Court upon different evidence from that which had been before the jury to pronounce that he was guilty.

The result was that in modification of the original sentence the Court sentenced the Appellant to a term of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000, and in default of payment of the fine to a further term of nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant contended that the Court was wrong in holding that while the tender of pardon to D'Santos was illegal, his evidence given to earn a pardon was admissible; D'Santos was not a convicted person, he was an accused person under trial awaiting judgment. The tender of pardon was illegal. He referred to Reg. v. Hanmanta (4) and Empress of India v. Asghar Ali (5); Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 337, 338, 342 and 343; Evidence Act, sec. 24; Oaths Act, 1873, sec. 5. A trial does not necessarily come to an end with a plea of guilty, *Queen v. witness and an oath could not be lawfully administered to him.

Excepting the offence of conspiracy punishable under sec. 121A of the Indian Penal Code (waging war against the Queen) there was no offence of conspiracy as such under the Penal law of India. It is only otherwise indictable when it amounts to abetment; secs. 107, 108 and 109 were read; each offence abetted makes a separate offence of abetment and more than one such offence can be tried together only under the provisions of secs. 233 and 234, Criminal Procedure Code. Upon the charge of bribery he submitted that there was no evidence on which a conviction could take place excluding the evidence of D'Santos who had been unanimously disbelieved, sec. 167, Evidence Act. The High Court had no jurisdiction to substitute for the verdict of the jury their own verdict founded on evidence being the residue of the evidence before the jury. Their power was limited under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent. The High Court had no jurisdiction to amend the indictment by striking out the first count. He contrasted sec. 2 of XI and XII Vict., c. 87 (1848), which was followed in the New South Wales Criminal Amendment Act, 1883, and was the basis of the ruling in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (3) with secs. 25, 26, 27, 28 and 38 of the Letters Patent.

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Mr. Phillips rested his argument on sec. 335, Criminal Procedure Code; the whole series of acts were connected together so as to form one transaction. He commented on some of the decisions referred to by Mr. Mayne. He referred to sec. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, and urged that the order of the High Court had not occasioned any failure of justice, Abdur Rahman v. The Empress (2). Improper admission of evidence was not of itself ground for reversal of any decision under terms of sec. 167, Evidence Act, see Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (11).

The accused person mentioned in the sections of the Code to which Mr. Mayne drew attention meant the person who was to be tried.

The High Court has power to review the case, see sec. 26, Charter Act, and finally determine points of law and to alter the sentence, and pass such judgment and sentence as shall seem right.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Can the High Court make the trial right by altering the record?

Mr. Phillips.—There must be a point of law, and that point must have been decided, then the Court may correct the decision and deal with the sentence.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR at the close of the arguments said:—Their Lordships would take time to consider their judgment.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the Appellant was tried on an indictment in which he was charged with no less than forty-one acts, these acts extending over a period of two years. This was plainly in contravention of the Code of Criminal Procedure, sec. 234, which provided that a person may only be tried for three offences of the same kind if committed within a period of twelve months. The reason of such a provision which is analogous to our own provisions in respect of embezzlement is obviously in order that the jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of hearing together of such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to Judges and accused. It is likely to cause confusion and to interfere with the definite proof of a distinct offence which it is the object of all criminal procedure to obtain. The policy of such a provision is manifest and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is of the essence of criminal procedure.

Their Lordships think that the course pursued and which was plainly illegal cannot be amended by arranging afterwards what might or might not have been properly submitted to the jury.

Upon the assumption that the trial was illegally conducted it is idle to suggest that there is enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported if the accused had been properly tried. The mischief sought to be avoided by the statute has been done. The effect of the multitude of charges before the jury has not been averted by dissecting the verdict afterwards and appropriating the finding of guilty only to such parts of the written accusation as ought to have been submitted to the jury.

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It would in the first place leave to the Court the functions of the jury and the accused would never have really been tried at all upon the charge arranged afterwards by the Court.

Their Lordships cannot regard this as cured by sec. 537.

Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment. The illustration of the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant.

The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence, but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission, or irregularity.

Some pertinent observations are made upon the subject by Lord Herschell and Lord Russell of Killowen in Smurthwaite v. Hannay (1). Where in a civil case several causes of action were joined Lord Herschell says that "if unwarranted by any enactment or rule it is much more than an irregularity," and Lord Russell of Killowen in the same case says, "such a joinder of Plaintiffs is more than an irregularity; it is the constitution of a suit in a way not authorised by law and the rules applicable to procedure."

With all respect to Sir Francis Maclean and the other Judges who agreed with him in the case of Abdur Rahman v. The Empress (2), he appears to have fallen into a very manifest logical error in arguing that because all irregularities are illegal as he says in a sense and this trial was illegal that therefore all things that may in his view be called illegal are therefore by that one adjective applied to them become equal in importance and are susceptible of being treated alike. But this trial was prohibited in the mode in which it was conducted, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the conviction should be set aside. Their Lordships will make no order as to costs.

THE COLLECTOR OF DACCA v. JAGAT CHANDRA GOSWAMI.

preceptor—Succession—Custom, ancient and definite—Dyabhaga, Ch. XI, sec. 6, para. 35—Vyavastha Darpana, Ch. V, sec. 1, para. 144—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 42.

On the death of a Bairagi or an ascetic his preceptor's preceptor applied for letters of administration claiming that according to the custom prevailing in the sect of which he and the deceased disciple were, respectively, members, he, as the preceptor of the dead man's preceptor was entitled to his property :

Held—The custom set up was proved.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of September 1899, against the decree of S. J. Douglas, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 15th of May 1899.

Jagat Chandra Goswami, the Petitioner (Respondent), applied for letters of administration in the lower Court. He alleged that he was the preceptor's preceptor of the deceased who was a Bairagi (an ascetic) and as such entitled to receive letters of administration. It was further stated in his petition that the deceased died leaving a Bairagini named Radhamani Baishnabi, one Lalita Dasi who alleged herself to be the sister, and Kokaram and Kanai Changa who alleged themselves to be the nephews (sister's sons) of the said deceased. The Petitioner claimed that according to law and custom prevailing in the country, the said persons had no right to the property left by the said deceased.

The Collector of Dacca on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council opposed the application and put in an objection stating that he did not admit the claim of the applicant as being the heir of the deceased, and that the deceased had died without leaving an heir, and his estate escheated to Government.

The amount of assets likely to come to the Petitioner's hands was alleged by the Petitioner to be Rs. 279-13.

The lower Court found upon the evidence that such custom as set up had been made out and allowed the petition.

The Collector of Dacca preferred this appeal.

Babus Ram Churn Mitter and Srish Chandra Chowdhury for the Appellant.

Babu Baikuntha Nath Das for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is an application for letters of administration to the estate, which is very small, of one Gopal Das Bairagi, who died in the month of Magh 1303. He was a Bairagi, that is, an ascetic, and the Petitioner is his preceptor's preceptor, and as such claims to be entitled to such letters of administration. "His application is resisted by the Secretary of State who alleges that the deceased died without leaving any heir and that his estate has escheated to Government.

The base of the Petitioner is that, according to the custom which prevails in the sect of which he and the deceased disciple were, respectively, members, he, as the preceptor of the dead man's preceptor, is entitled to his property to which the Secretary of State replies that no such custom has been satisfactorily proved in this case.

In the observations I am about to make, I am dealing only with the concrete case now before us, namely, that of a dead disciple who was initiated by a disciple who was the disciple of and was initiated by the preceptor who is now seeking letters of administration.

The question we have, in effect, to decide is whether the applicant has made out that under such circumstances he is entitled to letters of administration to the property of his disciple's disciple. The Court below has found in favour of the applicant, finding the existence of the custom set up and hence the present appeal.

Before I deal with the evidence I may, in passing, refer to Chap. XI, sec. 6, paragraph 35 of the Dyagbhaga, which lays down the general rule in matters of this class: "the goods of a hermit, of an ascetic, and of a professed student, let the spiritual brother, the virtuous pupil and the holy preceptor take. On failure of these, the associate in holiness or person belonging to the same order, shall inherit. Thus Yajnyavalkya says 'the heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic and of a professed student are, in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and associate in holiness.'" And, upon the question of custom I may perhaps refer to Chap. V, sec. 1, paragraph 144 of the Vyavastha Darpana, where it is laid down, and the authorities for the proposition are given by the learned author, that "If a custom or usage has obtained in a country, district, village, nation, tribe, class or family and has been invariably observed from time immemorial or for many generations, it supersedes the general maxims or rules of the law." The question really is whether the applicant has made out the existence of this custom which the Appellant, the Secretary of State, says must be ancient, definite and reasonable.

Upon this question there is a good deal of oral evidence, and a fair amount of documentary evidence. The oral evidence which has been laid before us is the evidence of the applicant himself and of the three witnesses he has called, and they give important and direct evidence upon the point, and there is no evidence the other way. To cite the language of the witness Radha Ballabh Goswami: He says, "Amongst us who are gurus, we obtain the properties left by our disciples or disciple's disciple on their death," and he gave various instances in support of this assertion, and some of the other witnesses give similar instances. Upon that evidence it is difficult to say that the custom is unreasonable nor, notwithstanding what the applicant said, "on my death my sons and grandsons will get and on failure of them the thakoor"—upon which the Appellant placed much reliance—can it reasonably be said, looking at his evidence as a whole, that it was indefinite.

But the documentary evidence is important. As to the antiquity of the custom the applicant says it has been in vogue for a long time and relies upon an attested copy of a parawana, dated the 16th September 1792, purporting to have been issued by a certain Mr. Douglas though who this Mr. Douglas was does not appear. This purports to be a very old document: if genuine it certainly supports the applicant's case for it refers distinctly to the property of a disciple of a disciple (anusishya) and would be relevant under sec. 42 of the Indian Evidence Act. Looking at the source from which the applicant obtained this document, viz., from his father, some 20 years ago, and to the fact that there is no evidence to suggest that it has been fabricated I think we may fairly agree with the Court below and hold that it is genuine. In this view the custom would appear to be ancient.

There are, however, other documents which support the applicant's case. I refer first to the attested copy of a rubokari of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 29th February 1848. There appears to have been a contest as to who was entitled to the property of a disciple of this sect on his death, and in the result it was determined that the preceptor's preceptor of the disciple was entitled to the property. The Government, however, was not a party to that proceeding.

Then it appears from an attested copy of a judgment of this Court, dated the 15th May 1865, that this Court held that the head of the sect is entitled to the property of the disciple of his immediate disciple. There is a distinction between that case and the present, for, there it was held that the head of the sect was entitled to the property: here it is contended that the preceptor of the disciple's disciple is entitled.

However, it appears from an attested copy of the decree of the Court of the Munsif of Naraingunge, dated the 1st August 1870, to which Government was a party, that a claim, similar to the present, was held good as against the Government. That decree was appealed against but the appeal was dismissed with costs, and Government did not think it worth while apparently to bring the case up to this Court.

Again it appears from an attested copy of a judgment of the 31st July 1883, to be found at page 23 of the Paper-book, that the same conclusion was arrived at. I am not referring to these judgments as constituting res judicata, but as evidence in the matter under sec. 42 of the Evidence Act. Upon these materials we may fairly say that the applicant has proved his case. The appeal then must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

BANERJEE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The applicant claims the property of the deceased as his preceptor's preceptor. A claim like that can only rest upon custom. The rule of Hindu law with reference to the property of an ascetic such as the deceased was, contemplates the succession only of the preceptor himself (see Dyabhaga, Chap. XI, sec. 6, para. 35). The custom which is set up is a custom applicable to the sect to which the parties belong. And the only question is whether that custom has been proved. It is unnecessary for me to go into the matter at any length, as I agree entirely in all that has been said in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. I only wish to add a few words with reference to two of the objections that have been urged against the validity of the custom by the learned junior Government pleader, namely, that the custom is indefinite, and that it is unreasonable.

As regards the first objection, there is nothing indefinite in the custom as set up in the petition of the applicant. There what he says is that the Petitioner is the preceptor's preceptor of the deceased and as such is entitled to receive letters of administration to the estate left by him. That is a very definite statement of the right by custom set up. The indefiniteness which is imputed to the custom is one that may attach to it, if we take a certain statement of the applicant in his deposition literally, that statement being, that on the death of the applicant, his sons and grandsons will be entitled to the property of his disciples' disciples. But I do not think that that statement should be taken literally. It is susceptible of this interpretation, namely, that after the applicant, his sons and grandsons in their turn will be entitled to the property of their disciples' disciples in their own right as preceptor's preceptor and not merely by reason of their being sons and grandsons of the applicant; and if the statement is taken in that sense, there is nothing indefinite in the custom set up.

As to the second objection I have noticed above, that the custom is unreasonable, I need only say this: that though by this custom the right of the preceptor to inherit the property of his disciple is ignored and the preceptor's preceptor acquires a right to inherit such property, that of itself does not make the custom so unreasonable that we should refuse to recognize it. It may well be, (and some of the facts appearing from certain of the documents go to show that this is so) that by reason of the superior sanctity attaching to the family to which the applicant belongs, the right to succeed has been conceded to the members of that family in preference to the rights of the immediate preceptors of deceased disciples.

BIRAJ MOHINI DASÍ v. SRIMATÍ CHINTA MONI DASÍ.

September 1897, for the partition of certain properties of which the Plaintiff was entitled to one-half and the Defendant Biraj Mohini Dasi and her two minor children, who were also Defendants, are entitled to the other half. After certain intermediate proceedings the case came before the Subordinate Judge of 24-Per-gunnahs, on the 18th of February 1898, and it appears from the entries in the order-sheet that the suit was compromised on that day, and the compromise was sanctioned by the Court on behalf of the minors, and a decree was made in the terms of that compromise.

On the 15th of April 1898 the final decree was made in the suit. On the 18th of May 1898 the present Appellants, the Defendants in the suit, applied for a review of the above orders of the 18th February 1898 and the 15th April 1898, but that application was dismissed on the 18th of June 1898. The Appellants have now appealed against both the preliminary and the final decree, and under a recent ruling of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Khadem Hossein v. Emdad Hossein (1) they claim to be entitled to challenge the preliminary decree of the 18th of February 1898. If the preliminary decree had not been a consent decree based upon a compromise and sanctioned by the Court, this contention would have been well-founded, but, as it was a consent decree, the Appellants cannot challenge it now upon the present appeal. They cannot, upon the present appeal, go into the question of whether or not the consent decree is or is not binding upon the parties; that is a new and entirely distinct case raising new and distinct issues of fact, and may be of law, and which must be determined in a fresh and distinct proceeding. The Appellants must get rid of that consent decree: they must have it set aside, if a proper case for setting it aside be made out: they cannot effect this object by appealing against it. Apart from principle this would appear to be clear upon authority; for, in the case of Ashutosh Chandra v. Tara Prosunno Roy (2), it was laid down that for the purpose of setting aside a decree passed in pursuance of a compromise there are two modes of procedure available by suit, or by review of judgment. It is not for us to say which course the parties should take. We cannot upon this appeal go into the question of whether or not the compromise decree was valid and binding as against the present Appellant.

In this view it becomes unnecessary to go into the question of what are the powers of a vakil in relation to compromising suits of whether the compromise here was duly sanctioned by the Court. These are questions which must remain to be determined when they are properly brought before the Court. No other grounds of appeal have been suggested to us; consequently the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, five gold mohars.

BANERJEE, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that this appeal must be dismissed.

The learned vakil for the Defendants Appellants contends that although sec. 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes a decree on a compromise final, yet they are entitled to appeal against the decree in this case so far as the appeal seeks to show that there was no valid compromise to support the decree ; and he relies upon the case of Brojo Durlab Singh v. Roma Nath Ghose (3) as supporting his contention.

(1) 5 C. W. N. 617 (1901).

(2) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 612 (1884).

BIRAJ MOHINI DAS v. SRIMATI CHINTA MONI DAS.

It may be conceded that an appeal for that limited purpose may lie, as a matter of law, against a decree passed on a compromise, and having regard to the nature of the grounds urged in this case, I must hold that these are grounds which cannot be entertained by way of an appeal from a consent decree, whatever other remedy the Appellant may have for substantiating those grounds and obtaining relief against that decree.

The two grounds urged are, first, that the decree upon the alleged compromise is bad, because the pleader who entered into the compromise on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants, had no authority to enter into it ; and, second, that the Court, in sanctioning the compromise, so far as the minor Defendants were concerned, did not take into consideration the question of whether the compromise was for the benefit of the minors. The very first contention raised by the Appellants would go to show that an appeal is not the proper mode of having the question determined, for, in an appeal, the Court must deal with the case upon the materials which are on the record. It was urged for the Appellants that if they were willing to accept the risk of having the questions raised by them dealt with upon the materials on the record, without seeking for any opportunity of putting forward further materials before the Court, there was no reason why they should be precluded from doing so. But this argument overlooks the other side of the question. The partial materials upon which the Court, in dealing with the appeal, must deal with the question, may be sufficient for the Appellants' purpose ; but they may not be sufficient for the Respondent's purpose, and the Respondent may well say, if the question that is now sought to be raised as to the authority of the pleader were raised in a proper proceeding, he would be prepared to show, by evidence, which he cannot do upon this appeal, that the compromise that was entered into was a perfectly legal one, and that there was no defect in the authority of the pleader to enter into it. The issue that is now sought to be raised is an altogether new issue which never arose in the case, and was never discussed in the Court below ; and it would be unfair to the Court below as much as to the Respondent to allow the question to be discussed now. It is in this view of the case that I think the question raised in this appeal ought not to be allowed to be raised and dealt with by way of appeal. In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether a pleader in this country has authority to compromise a case on behalf of his client. I would make only one observation with reference to that question. I fail to see any good reason for the distinction that is sometimes drawn in dealing with the question between the status of a pleader in this country and that of legal practitioners in other countries. The question ought to be dealt with on general principles, irrespective of any peculiarities in the status of the legal practitioners in this country.

Upon the question as to whether the proper procedure for having a decree upon compromise set aside is to file an application for review or to bring a new suit, there has been some diversity of opinion disclosed in the reported cases. See the case of Ashutosh Chandra v. Tara Prosunno Roy (2); see also the case of Sarat Chunder Ghose v. Kartick Chunder Mitter (4) in which apparently without objection a suit was considered to be the proper mode of proceeding.

Appellants,

1901.

Landlord and tenant—Enhancement of rent, suit for rent and for—Maintainability of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 45—Onus—Raiyat at fixed rate.

A suit for both enhancement and arrears of rent at an enhanced rate is maintainable. The causes of action although separate, may be combined under sec. 45, C. P. C.

In a suit for enhancement of rent the onus is upon the Defendant to prove that he is a raiyat at fixed rate.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1899, against the decree of Babu Atal Behary Ghose, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Saran, dated the 7th of June 1899, affirming the decree of Mr. Ibrahim Ahmed, 3rd Munsif of Chupra, dated the 16th of July 1898.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

• • Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Jnanendra Nath Bose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Saran, dated the 7th of June 1899.

The facts of the case are these. The Plaintiff sued for enhancement of rent and also for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate.

The Munsif decreed the enhancement of rent prayed for, but dismissed the suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate. Apparently he believed in the Defendants' plea of payment. He said that the Defendants had proved that they had deposited rent at the old rate for the years in suit prior to the filing of the suit and he dismissed the Plaintiff's claim for the years 1303 and 1304.

The Subordinate Judge remanded the case for re-enquiry by the Commissioner as to whether the *raiya*t examined by him had rights of occupancy or not and whether they were of the same class of tenants as the Defendants. The Commissioner made a further report and the Munsif on consideration of that report decided that the *raiya*t examined by the Commissioner were occupancy *raiya*t.

(2) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 612 (1884).

(4) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 810 (1883).

GUDAR TEWARY v. BRIJ NANDAN PERSHAD.

The case then went again before the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the appeal.

The Defendants now appeal to this Court and three pleas have been raised by the learned pleader who appears on their behalf, first, that the Plaintiff's suit for both enhancement and arrears of rent at an enhanced rate is not maintainable; secondly, that the Commissioner rejected certain evidence which the Defendants wished to adduce after remand to show that they were *raiya*s holding at fixed rates, and, thirdly, that the onus of proving that the Defendants are *raiya*s holding at fixed rates has been misplaced on them.

We think that there is no force in any of these contentions.

There is no illegality in the suit being brought for enhancement as well as for arrears of rent. No doubt these causes of action are separate and distinct but they may be combined under sec. 45, C. P. C. As a matter of fact, however, the Plaintiff's suit for arrears of rent, either at an enhanced rate or at the old rate has been dismissed and his suit is now only for enhancement, and therefore the Defendants have in no way been prejudiced by the way in which the Plaintiff has brought his case.

Then, with regard to the second and third pleas, it appears to us that the Appellants are not entitled to take them, because neither of them was taken in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. And as for the second plea, namely, that the Commissioner has shut out evidence which the Defendants wished to adduce before him after remand, it appears to us that he could not have taken that evidence in consideration of the terms of the order of remand. He was told to take evidence as to the status of the *raiya*s who held land in the neighbourhood and who say that the rates payable by them are higher than the rates payable by the Defendants. What the Defendants wished to adduce before him was evidence to show that they were *raiya*s, holding at fixed rates and that was not evidence which the Commissioner was entitled to receive.

Then, it appears to us that the onus of proving that the Defendants are *raiya*s, holding at fixed rates, has been placed rightly on the Defendants. It is found, as a matter of fact, that the Defendants are *raiya*s with rights of occupancy; and if they claim a higher status they should prove it.

There is therefore no defect in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

beyond the terms of reference—Ultra vires award.

The powers of a Court of Wards are those of a guardian supplemented by certain additional powers given by the statute, and it has no power to make a voluntary alienation of the Ward's real estate in perpetuity.

Sec. 172 of Act XVII of 1876 does not justify such an alienation where it is not for the benefit of the Ward's property or to his advantage.

An award that goes beyond the terms of reference to the arbitrators is to that extent ultra vires.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated 19th May 1898, reversing certain decrees of the Civil Judge of Lucknow.

The suits raised the question of the title of the Respondents to the villages of Kasmora and Pura Mirza. The facts are these:—Rajah Riasat Ali was talukdar of Utraula in Oudh. He died in 1865 leaving him surviving a widow Dan Bibi. The Appellant is the posthumous son by that lady and was born in October 1865. On the Raja's death Dan Bibi got possession, but on 23rd August 1865 her title was challenged in a suit for possession of the estate instituted by one Mussammat Madaro as guardian of her sons, the Respondents, claiming title for them as the legitimate sons of the deceased Raja. She herself was a prostitute, but she alleged the Raja had married her. During the course of the litigation a reference was made on the 27th October 1865 to arbitrators to decide the following issue, viz.:—"Whether the son, born of Dan Bibi, can be the sole heir to the entire property left under the custom of the country, or Farhat Ali Khan and Sakhawat Ali Khan, the two sons born of Madaro Bibi, can also be successors to the property? If they can, what is the portion to which they and Madaro Bibi would be entitled to?"

An award was made bearing date the 18th November 1865; and the arbitrators decided against the claims of Madaro Bibi and her sons to any "share in the inheritance." They then decided that Madaro Bibi was entitled to articles given her by the deceased Raja, and recommended maintenance for Madaro Bibi and her sons in the following terms:—"It is proper that Bibi Madaro should receive Rs. 60 per month in cash for maintenance and support during her life, on the proviso of keeping herself in the house with honour and good conduct. That the monthly stipend just proposed for the maintenance and support of children should continue for six years, after which time when the children become capable of receiving education in a Government School, the Government would then propose what they should get for their support.

"That when both these children are grown up and attain the age of discretion, they shall have villages separated for them, according to their stipend after deduction therefrom of the Government revenue.

"That the monthly stipend will be given as follows:—

Rs. 10 per month to Bibi Madaro.

Rs. 30 per month to Farhat Ali Khan.

Rs. 20 per month to Sakhawat Ali Khan."

RAJA MOHAMMED MUNTAZ ALI KHAN v. SAKHAWAT ALI KHAN.

Two of the arbitrators appeared on the 7th December 1865 before the Deputy Commissioner, in whose Court the case was pending, and he seems to have returned the award, for on the document is endorsed a further award made on the 17th December 1865, but signed by only two of the arbitrators. Up to the 21st December 1865 it had not been filed in Court, yet on that date the Deputy Commissioner proceeded to dispose of the case, and passed a decree in the following terms:—"I dismiss the claim for the estate, but decree maintenance to Plaintiff and the two sons Farhat Ali and Sakhawat Ali, on the terms of the award, viz.:—Plaintiff, Rs. 10; Farhat Ali, Rs. 30; and Sakhawat Ali, Rs. 20; total Rs. 60."

This decree was confirmed on appeal by the Commissioner of Fyzabad, on the 11th August 1866; and also by the Judicial Commissioner on the 2nd January 1867.

Payments by way of maintenance were made to the Respondents, but not the exact amounts decreed; and in consequence, in the year 1883, they claimed from the Deputy Commissioner, the estate still being under the management of the Court of Wards, a sum of Rs. 3,271 as arrears due to them. On the 25th May 1883 the Deputy Commissioner asked for orders, and wrote as follows:—"Their claim appears to me to be perfectly correct; and with your sanction I propose to make the payments at an early date. I also propose in accordance with the decree of 1866 (19th March) to put an end to the cash allowances for the future, and assign to them a village apiece for their maintenance. I would choose for the elder Farhat Ali, a village which would give him an allowance of Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 per annum, and for the younger Sakhawat Ali, a village producing Rs. 350 or Rs. 400."

The Chief Commissioner sanctioned the proposals, and stated in his order of the 7th July 1883 that the Respondents, "be given, in lieu of the present monthly allowance, two villages, yielding a profit of Rs. 600 and Rs. 400 per annum respectively, after the payment of the Government jama."

On receipt of this order, the manager of the estate was required to report, and he, on the 19th August 1883, suggested the villages of Kasmora and Pura Mirza as suitable for the purpose. And on the same date the Deputy Commissioner directed the immediate delivery of possession to the Respondents, and the execution of "conveyance deeds," granting them a heritable interest.

No conveyances were ever executed, but the Respondents were at once given possession of the villages in suit, and had continuously received the profits, which are in excess of the amount sanctioned by Government.

On coming of age, the Appellant being informed of the nature of the Respondents' possession, refused to recognise it; but was ready and willing to allow them a cash maintenance of Rs. 30 and Rs. 20 per month as decreed to them. On their refusal to surrender possession, he instituted the present suits to obtain possession of those villages.

The Judicial Commissioner found as follows:—

The Defendants had certainly a claim to maintenance when the villages were made over to them, and it was for the benefit of the minor that such claims should be settled. Sec. 172, Act XVII of 1876, provided that the Court of Wards shall have power to give such leases or farms of the whole or parts of the immoveable property, under its charge, and to mortgage or sell any part of such property, and to do all such other acts as it may judge to be most for the benefit of the property and the advantage of the disqualified proprietors. If the Court of Wards, therefore, honestly thought it was for the advantage of the estate that the Defendants' claims should be settled by making over the villages to them, the Deputy Commissioner acted within his authority when he did so. Had there been no award or decree,—as the estate is one of considerable importance and the Defendants, as brothers of the talukdar, had a claim on him for maintenance,—I do not think it could be held that the grant of the villages to them, in lieu of their claims, was not proper, or that it was not for the advantage of the estate and its owner that a reasonable and suitable provision should be made for them in accordance with the custom of the family. Courts in fixing maintenance should have regard to the status in life of the Ward and the amount of his income (Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors, page 223), and the same considerations should guide the Court of Wards in settling claims to maintenance. There is nothing to indicate that the Deputy Commissioner, in making over the villages to the Defendants, had their interests in view, and not those of the Plaintiff. He did so presumably, because he thought the income of the villages was a proper amount to be given for the support of the Defendants, having regard to the rank and circumstances of the parties."

On this appeal Mr. Degruyther for Appellant submitted that the limits of Respondents' rights were to receive Rs. 30 and Rs. 20 respectively per month for life only. That the practical effect of the Deputy Commissioner's order was to make a gift of the Appellant's property to the Respondents to which they had no right. That the Court of the Judicial Commissioner had erroneously considered that they had a right to maintenance.

The questions were :—Can a guardian deal with property to the disadvantage of the Ward and did the Court of Wards stand in a better position.

He submitted it did not, when such power is not given by statute.

He referred to Act XVII of 1876, secs. 161, 167, 170 and 172. He submitted that the Deputy Commissioner had not exercised a conscious judgment which he was bound to do, the minor's interest and the benefit of his property was never present to his mind. He had really given away the minor's property.

Further the Court of Wards was really the Chief Commissioner as the Deputy Commissioner was under his control and the order of the Deputy Commissioner was in violation or went beyond the sanction given by the Chief Commissioner.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR FORD NORTH.—The Appellant in these consolidated appeals is the talukdar of Utraula, or Bilaspur, a posthumous son of the Raja Riasat Ali Khan, who died in the year 1865. Before the Appellant was born Musammat Madaro, as guardian of her two sons, the Respondents, took proceedings on their behalf to recover the estates of the late Raja, alleging that her sons were his legitimate children. After the Appellant appeared upon the scene an agreement was drawn up, with the consent of the Court, by which it was left to arbitrators to decide an issue whether the Appellant could be the sole heir to the late Raja's entire property under the custom of the country; or whether the Respondents could also be successors to it; and, if so, what was the portion to which they and their mother would be entitled.

The arbitrators made an award dated the 17th December 1865, whereby they found that the Appellant and his mother Dan Bibi were according to the custom of the country proprietors and heirs of the entire estate and property of the late Raja, and the Respondents and their mother Bibi Madaro could not share in the inheritance; that the Respondents' mother should receive Rs. 60 per month for maintenance, to be allocated thus:—

Rs. 10 per month to Bibi Madaro,

Rs. 30 per month to Farhat Ali Khan,
and

Rs. 20 per month to Sakhawat Ali Khan and that such payment should continue for six years, after which time the Government should propose what they should have for their support. And the arbitrators also awarded that when both the Respondents were grown up and attained the age of discretion they should have villages separated for them according to their stipend, after deduction therefrom of the Government revenue,

On 21st December 1865 the action came on again before Major Ross, the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda; and he, stating that the award appeared to him fair and equitable, dismissed the claim for the estate, but decreed maintenance to Bibi Madaro and the Respondents on the terms of the award, viz., Bibi Madaro Rs. 10, Farhat Ali Rs. 30, and Sakhawat Ali Rs. 20, total Rs. 60. This order was affirmed by the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division on the 11th of August 1866; and by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on the 2nd of January 1867.

It will be observed that the award went beyond the reference, so far as relates to the allotment of two villages to the Respondents. That portion of the award was not dealt with by the order of the 21st of December 1865; and the Commissioner on the appeal pointed out that the lower Court had rejected so much of the award as related to matters not referred to arbitration. This, however, cannot apply to the allowance of Rs. 60 per month for maintenance, which was expressly decreed by the order of the 21st of December 1865.

By reason of the infancy of the Appellant his estates were from the first under the management of the Court of Wards; and on the 25th of May 1883, while he was still a minor, but after the death of the Bibi Madaro, and the attainment of 21 by both the Respondents, the then Deputy Commissioner at Gonda, Mr. White, wrote to the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division pointing out that certain arrears of maintenance were due to the Respondents. He also proposed to put an end to the cash allowances they had theretofore received, and to assign to them each a village for maintenance; choosing for the elder, Farhat Ali, one which would give him Rs. 500 or 600 per annum, and for the younger, Sakhawat Ali, a village producing Rs. 350 or 400 per annum. The writer stated that this would be in accordance with the decree of Mr. Reid, the Commissioner, dated the 19th March 1866, an extract from which he professed to give. There is not, however, any trace of such decision to be found; and the passage quoted is from the award itself. Mr. Reid was the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division who on the 11th of August 1866 affirmed the decision of Major Ross of the 21st of December 1865; and a reference to his reasons and his formal judgment (both set out in the Record) show that the allotment of villages to the Respondents was not referred to.

By a Government order, dated the 7th of July 1883, the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner was given to the proposal that the Respondents should be paid the arrears of maintenance due to them, and that they should be given in lieu of the present monthly allowance two villages yielding a profit of Rs. 600 and 400 per annum respectively after the payment of the Government jama.

Further proceedings ensued before the Deputy Commissioner which resulted in the village Kasmora, the income of which was about Rs. 640, being allotted to Farhat Ali Khan; and the village Pura Mirza, the income of which was about Rs. 400, to Sakhawat Ali Khan. The Appellant's liability for the duty due to the Government in respect of those villages was, however, kept alive. By an order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated the 27th of November 1883, conveyances were directed which were to contain provisions that the Respondents were always to remain well-wishers and obedient to the head of the family; and so long as they did not fail in their duty the property would remain, generation after generation, in their possession and occupation. The same order provided for payment of the arrears of maintenance, and immediate delivery of possession of the villages. This was done, and the Respondents have ever since been in receipt of the income therefrom; and from a kabuliyat, dated 18th June 1887, it appears that Farhat Ali Khan succeeded in leasing the mouzah Kasmora for five years at Rs. 800 a year, and the income has since further increased. The conveyances directed have not yet been executed; but this cannot prejudice the rights of the parties.

In October 1886 the Appellant attained 21, and in 1889 he commenced an action against each of the Respondents to recover possession of the village allotted to him. The two actions were tried together by consent, and the appeals have been consolidated; so the existence of separate actions need not again be referred to. The principal question in the Courts below was, and the only question here is, whether the allotment of the two villages to the Respondents was within the powers of the Deputy Commissioner of the Court of Wards, and is binding upon the Appellant. The Civil Judge at Lucknow on the 18th of July 1895 decided in his favour, viz, that he was entitled to recover possession, and to mesne profits; but this decree was on the 19th of May 1898 reversed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, where the Appellant's claim was dismissed.

The Court of Wards has of course all the ordinary powers of a guardian over a Ward's property, supplemented by certain additional powers given by statute. By sec. 161 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, it is provided that the Deputy Commissioners shall, subject to the control of the Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner, have the powers of a Court of Wards within their respective districts, for the superintendence of the persons and property of all persons who may become entitled as proprietors or under-proprietors, and who are disqualified for the management of their own estates; within which class minors are, by sec. 162, expressly included. Sec. 166 provides that the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards shall refer to the care and education, and management of the property, of persons subject thereto; and sec. 172 provides that "The Court of Wards shall have power to give such leases or farms of the whole or parts of the immoveable property under its charge, and to mortgage or sell any part of such property, and to do all such other acts as it may judge to be most for the benefit of the property, and the advantage of the disqualified proprietors."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the allotment of the two villages to the Respondents cannot be supported. It is not authorised by any of the orders of Court made in the years 1865, 1866, and 1867; and the finding of the award on the subject was not within the reference to arbitration, and was not adopted by the Court. It is not within the power of a guardian to make a voluntary alienation in perpetuity of his Ward's real estate, and it is open to the Ward on attaining 21 to challenge the validity of such a transaction. The letter of the 25th of May 1883, upon which the order of the 7th of July was based, contains a very misleading and incorrect account of what had taken place; and even that letter only proposed to provide the Respondents with "subsistence" or "maintenance;" not to hand over to them part of the Appellant's real estate, that should remain theirs from generation to generation. Nor can the assignment of the villages to the Respondents be justified under sec. 172 of the Act. Clearly it cannot, unless it comes within the final words, that the Court may do all such acts as it may judge to be most for the benefit of the property, and the advantage of the infant. It was not for the advantage of the Appellant, or the benefit of his property, that two considerable portions of his estate should be disposed of without consideration. And there is not any trace throughout the proceedings of any thought having been taken as to what was beneficial to him or his estate. The Respondent, Farhat Ali, gave evidence that he and his brother were going to sue for maintenance on the basis of the award of December 1865, and that the Deputy Commissioner replied that it was no use suing, as he would give them villages in lieu of maintenance according to that award. So that this ultra vires award was apparently the sole ground for the appropriation of these villages, if that evidence can be trusted.

RAJA MOHAMMED MUMTAZ ALI KHAN v. SAKHAWAT ALI KHAN.

No question was raised here or in the Courts below as to any right of the Respondents to maintenance out of the Talukdari estate independently of their claims to the absolute ownership of the two villages, and their Lordships abstain from expressing any opinion upon it. If any such right exists, effect can be given to it by way of set-off against the liability in the execution proceedings in respect of mesne profits, and, as regards maintenance after the delivery of possession, by a suit.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment of the 19th of May 1898 should be reversed, and that of the 18th of July 1895 should be restored, and that the Respondents should be ordered to pay the costs of the appeal to the Judicial Commissioner. The Respondents must also pay the costs of this appeal.

Where a mortgagee by conditional sale of a share of a zemindari has foreclosed, the period of limitation in a suit for pre-emption by a co-sharer, begins to run from the expiry of the year of grace after which the mortgagee's right of possession becomes mature.

ALI ABBAS v. KALKA PRASAD (2) approved.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court confirming a decree of the Sub-Judge of Gorakhpur.

The Appellant's suit was to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of certain shares in villages named in the plaint.

Of the Defendants-Respondents Bhagwati Pershad alone put in a written defence in which he pleaded, inter alia,

(1) I. L. R. 1 All. 811 (1876).

(2) I. L. R. 14 All. 405 (1892).

that the suit was barred by the statute of limitations.

Both Courts gave effect to such defence.

The Appellant contended that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The facts are, the Defendant Mansur Ali and his brother Zahur Ali owned  $\frac{2}{3}$  of three villages Pathringwa, Sen, duria and Pipra, in equal shares and the whole of a village named Parsa.

On 14th March 1868 Zahur Ali mortgaged by conditional sale his share in the four villages to one Surja Pershad now represented by the Respondent Bhagwati Pershad, the mortgagor remaining in possession.

The mortgage was foreclosed and the period of grace of one year expired on 20th January 1881, (Regulation 17 of 1806).

Zahur Ali died in 1876, and after his death his brother Mansur Ali brought a suit in 1881 for redemption of the mortgaged property. That suit was eventually dismissed by an order of Her Majesty in Council on 13th July 1886, on the ground that the mortgagor had not done what was necessary by the terms of that regulation to entitle him to redeem.

Afterwards the Respondent, Bhagwati Parshad, brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property and mesne profits.

That suit was decreed finally by the High Court on 6th July 1893. Thereupon Bhagwati Pershad, Respondent, was put in formal possession of the shares of 4 villages, and on 27th November 1893 executed a dakhilnamah in the usual manner.

The present Appellant hearing of those proceedings commenced the present suit on 4th July 1894, praying for a decree awarding possession of the property in suit on the basis of pre-emption, the condition of the wajib-ul-urz, the custom of the village, and the right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law, by setting aside all the proceedings and the foreclosure decree on payment of Rs. 65,000, the consideration money, or such sum as the Court thought proper.

The Sub-Judge following the decision in the case of Ali Abbas v. Kalka Prasad (2) held that the suit was time-barred as it was instituted long after 6 years from the date of the expiration of the year of grace in the foreclosure proceedings.

The High Court, on appeal remanded the cause for trial of issue "Does the property in suit admit of physical possession?"

The Sub-Judge found that it did not.

The Division Bench thereupon referred the matter to a Full Bench.

The Full Bench pointed out that the judgment in the case of Ali Abbas v. Kalka Prasad (2) had been misunderstood by the Sub-Judge. They dissented from the decision in Nath Prasad v. Ram Paltan Ram (3). They could not see how a sale was any the less an absolute sale because it was not to take immediate effect and operation, and in their opinion the other conditions being present necessary to make Art. 10 applicable, that article could apply to a sale which in its inception was a mortgage by conditional sale but which either by the operation of Regulation 17 of 1806 or by the operation of Act IV of 1882 had become in effect an absolute sale with the right of redemption gone.

The judgment concluded as follows: -

"In the present case if the whole of the property sold was capable of physical possession being taken by the mortgagee-vendee, we should hold that Art. 10 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877 applied. The question really turns, as we have said, on what is the meaning of 'physical possession,' as that term is used in Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act XV of 1877. It must mean something different from 'actual possession,' and it must mean something different from ordinary possession. In cl. (1) of sec. (1) of Act XIV of 1859, which was the clause prescribing the limitation in suits for pre-emption, the term used was 'possession' and limitation ran from the time of possession being obtained by the vendee. In Gur-dhan v. Heera Singh (4) a Full Bench of the Sadr Dewani held that the possession of Act No. XIV of 1859 must be an actual and not a constructive possession. In 1868 the question came again before a Full Bench, then of this Court, and in Ganeshee Lal v. Toola Ram (5) the Full Bench decided that the possession of Act XIV of 1859 included constructive as well as actual possession. It is probable that that decision led to the alteration of the wording of the article relating to Limitation in pre-emption suits in the next succeeding Limitation Act. In Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act No. IX of 1871 it was prescribed that limitation should run from the date when actual possession was taken under the sale. Then came a Full Bench of this Court in 1876, Jageshar Singh v. Jawahar Singh and others (1), in which a majority of the Full Bench held that the actual possession of Act No. IX of 1871 was the same thing as the possession of Act No. XIV of 1859 and included constructive possession. The then Chief Justice of this Court, Sir Robert Stuart, in our opinion, was right in differing from the rest of the Full Bench. He held that the purchaser does not take actual possession of the properties sold to him until he takes physical and tangible possession. The next matter to which we have to refer is that when Act XV of 1877 was passed the legislature, still determined, in our opinion, to exclude constructive possession from the possession from which limitation should run under Art. 10, used the term 'physical possession,' and they added a different terminus of limitation in respect of property which did not admit of physical possession. As we have said, two of the villages here were of pure zemindari tenure, that is, they were villages in which the zemindars got no shares allotted to them by metes and bounds, but held fractional shares in respect of which fractional shares they received a proportionate amount of the profits of the village. It is said that the mortgagor used to receive direct from the tenants of the zemindari body his proportion of the rents payable by them. That, in our opinion, does not alter the case. In Unkar Das v. Narain (6) it was held that a share in an undivided zemindari mahal was not susceptible of physical possession in the sense of Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act No. XV of 1877. We adhere to that decision. The Legislature meant some limitation of the term 'possession' by the use of the term 'physical.' In our opinion, for instance, the owner of a house who has let the house to a tenant cannot be said to be in physical possession of that house so long as the tenancy subsists and his tenant remains in exclusive possession of the demised premises. In such a case the owner has parted with the physical possession to his tenant for the period of his tenancy and the tenant alone is the person who has physical possession. It appears to us that it would be straining the English language and going contrary to the obvious intention of the Legislature to hold otherwise. In this particular case Art. 10 cannot apply, because the whole of the property sold is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of that article, and no instrument of sale has been registered. The result is that Art. 10 not applying, Art. 120 must apply in this case. As Art. 120 applies we have got to see when the right to sue accrued to the pre-emptor. That point is concluded by the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ali Abbas v. Kalka Prasad (2) which, in our opinion, was rightly decided, but which must always be regarded as deciding merely the point referred to the Full Bench, and not the question of limitation. This suit was barred by limitation when brought, and we dismiss this appeal with costs which will include fees on the higher scale."

(2) I. L. R. 14 All. 405 (1892).

Mr. Ross for the Appellant in contending that the above decision is erroneous urged that the suit is not barred by limitation because Art. 10 and not Art. 120 applied to this suit, and if Art. 10 did not, Art. 144 is the proper article to apply. And further that even if Art. 120 should be the governing article, the right to sue did not accrue and time did not begin to run until the final decree for possession was passed in favour of the mortgagee.

Mr. Ross referred to some of the decisions noticed in the Courts below. He further referred to Starling's Indian Limitation Act, pp. 109 to 111; Directions to revenue officers, N. W. P., Ed. 1858, p. 50; and Forbes v. Ameeroonissa (7).

No one appeared for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ROBERTSON.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the suit, brought to declare a right of pre-emption against the heir of a mortgagee by conditional sale, who has foreclosed, is time-barred, six years having elapsed from the expiry of the year of grace after foreclosure; and the main controversy comes to be whether the Art. 120 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877 applies to the case. Admittedly it does apply, unless either Art. 10 or Art. 144 applies; and the real question is whether the Appellant is right in affirming that the case falls under Art. 10. There is however a subordinate question as to the period from which the six years run, assuming Art. 120 to apply.

BATUL BEGUM v. MANSUR ALI KHAN.

The Appellant is the wife of the nominal Respondent Mansur Ali Khan and she derives from him by gift a 6 pie share of his original interest in the villages now in dispute, the remainder of his interest being still vested in him. This Mansur Ali Khan and his brother Zahur Ali Khan at the date of the mortgage owned two-thirds of each of the villages of Pathringwa, Senduria and Pipra Kalan, each brother holding shares of 5 annas 4 pies; and the two owned the whole of the village of Parsa, each brother holding an 8 annas share. The brothers were Muhammadans. Two of the villages were of pure zemindari tenure, the others were imperfect pattidari.

On 14th March 1868 Zahur Ali Khan, in consideration of money lent, executed a deed of conditional sale to Saju Parshad now deceased (whose heir is the Respondent Bhagwati Parshad), of the whole of his shares in the four villages. It is unnecessary to set out this sale deed, as nothing turns on its particular terms. No change of possession took place on the execution of the mortgage. Zahur Ali Khan died in January 1876. In 1880 the mortgagee having also died, the Respondent Bhagwati Parshad, his heir, foreclosed (by proceedings taken under Regulation XVII of 1806), and the money was not paid within the year of grace, which expired on 20th January 1881. Some litigation ensued which is immaterial to the present question and the rehearsal of which would only obscure the narrative. In 1890, Bhagwati sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur that he might "be put in proprietary possession" of a 5-anna 4 pie share in each of Senduria, Pathringwa and Pipra Kalan and an 8-anna share of mouzah Parsa "by ejecting and dispossessing the Defendants or any of them who may be found in possession thereof and by declaring their right of ownership to be extinct," and he obtained a decree which on appeal was affirmed by the High Court on 6th July 1893. The terms of the decree were inter alia, "it is decreed and ordered that the claim of the Plaintiff for possession of the shares of the villages mentioned in the relief" "be decreed." On 27th November 1893, Bhagwati executed a dakhilnama, declaring that under the order of the Judge "Munshi Jamiat Rai, the Amin of the Court, has given formal possession to me the decree-holder through my Karinda (agent) over the shares of the villages detailed below," and the names of the villages and number of the shares are duly set out. Mutation of names was also obtained in respect to the shares. Bhagwati then attempted to take physical possession of the estate but he was successfully resisted by Mansur Ali Khan. Bhagwati therefore never had possession at all, unless the possession of Mansur Ali Khan or the possession of the tenants, or his own "formal possession" will suffice; and it has not been suggested that his legal rights entitled him to anything more, in the way of possession, than he actually obtained unless and until he had enforced a partition, which in fact never took place.

On 4th July 1894 the Appellant filed her plaint. She narrated the conditional sale, the foreclosure, the decree of possession, and the "delivery of possession." She described herself as a near co-sharer of the vendor (in the conditional sale), and asserted that under the condition of the wajib-ul-urz the usage and right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law she possesses a preferential right of purchase. Her prayer, so far as material, was that a decree awarding possession over the mortgaged shares of the villages might be passed in her favour on the basis of pre-emption, the condition of wajib-ul-urz, the custom of the village, and the right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law, by setting aside all the proceedings and the foreclosure decree on payment of Rs. 35,000, the consideration money, or of any other sum which might be determined by the Court. A written statement was filed by the Respondent, Bhāgwati, in which various grounds of defence were stated:—inter alia, limitation was pleaded, the validity of the gift to the Appellant which constitutes her title to claim pre-emption was challenged, and her alleged right of pre-emption was denied. Issues were settled on 19th September 1894, but of those the only one which has been tried and decided, and requires present notice, is that of limitation. For the purposes of the present question, therefore, the Appellant is to be assumed to have had a right of pre-emption, and the question is whether she had lost it by limitation before her plaint was filed.

BATUL BEGUM v. MANSUR ALI KHAN.

On 28th November 1894 the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation with costs. He held that the title of the conditional vendee became absolute on the expiration of the year of grace, and that the six years' period of limitation prescribed by Art. 120, Sch. II of the Limitation Act begins to run against the pre-emptor from the expiration of the year of grace.

The Appellant appealed to the High Court, who on 12th November 1896 remanded the case for the trial of the following issue: "Does the property in suit admit of physical possession?" Evidence was taken and the Subordinate Judge on 11th January 1897 held that the property in suit does not admit of physical possession. On appeal the High Court, on 16th February 1898, dismissed the appeal with costs; and it is against that judgment that the present appeal has been taken.

The view of both Courts is that the Appellant's claim falls under the 120th Article of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, 1877, which is the final and residuary article including all suits not specially provided for, and fixing for all such suits the limitation of six years. It is for the Appellant to show which other article fits her claim; she points first to the 10th Article;—to this article most of the discussion has been directed, and this occasioned the remand. The 10th Article purports to apply to suits "to enforce a claim of pre-emption whether the right is founded on law or general usage or on special contract." One year is the period of limitation; and the time from which this period begins is "When the purchaser takes, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the whole of the property sold, or, where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession when the instrument of sale has been registered." The interest of the Appellant to maintain the application of the 10th Article is that, if the subject is susceptible of possession, then possession has yet to be taken, for none has as yet been had.

BATUL BEGUM v. MANSUR ALI KHAN.

The "property sold," "the subject of the sale," was in this case the 5-anna 4 pie share of each of the three villages and the 8-anna share of the fourth. Various questions of more or less subtlety suggest themselves as to the relation of the holder of such a right to the possession of the estate. All those questions are however superseded by the extreme absoluteness of the language of the tenth article of the Limitation Act. What has to be considered is, as the High Court accurately formulated the question, does the property admit of physical possession? The word physical is of itself a strong word, highly restrictive of the kind of possession indicated; and when it is found, as is pointed out by the High Court, that the Legislature has in successive enactments about the limitation of such suits gone on strengthening the language used,—first in 1859 prescribing "possession," then in 1871 requiring "actual possession" and finally in 1877 substituting the word "physical" for "actual," it is seen that that word has been very deliberately chosen and for a restrictive purpose. Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court are right in the conclusion they have stated. Their Lordships consider that the expression used by Stuart, C. J., in Jageshar Singh v. Jawahar Singh (1) in regard to the words "actual possession" is applicable with still more certainty to the words "physical possession" and that what is meant is a "personal and immediate" possession.

This being the sound construction of the tenth article of the second schedule to the Act of 1877, the facts completely fail the Appellant, for the mortgagee's heir had no semblance of physical possession in the true and natural sense of the term. All that he had directly was the "formal possession" constituted by the dakhilnama, which was ceremonial, and on paper. The physical possession of the villages was with others and Bhagwati not having enforced a partition could not get physical possession of any definite portion of those lands and had no right to oust the existing occupiers. Accordingly their Lordships consider that the case does not come within the tenth article in so far as possession is concerned. This being so, the alternative stated in the third column relating to registration arises, but the Appellant did not argue upon it and no suggestion has been made that it affects the argument. The tenth article accordingly disappears from the case.

The alternative suggestion that Art. 114 applies cannot be supported. It applies to suits "for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided for," and the 12 years of limitation are to begin "When the possession of the Defendant becomes adverse to the Plaintiff." Now it is perfectly clear that claims of pre-emption are specially considered in Art. 10, and although this particular claim of pre-emption does not (for the reasons already stated) fall within it, that does not affect the construction of Art. 144, as illustrated by Art. 10. A claim to enforce a right of pre-emption is, as Art. 10 shows, a claim impeaching another's right; and its primary object is to set aside the competing right. The circumstance that this claim has inverted the proper order and, instead of first asking the setting aside and then asking possession as the consequence has asked for possession "by setting aside" cannot alter the nature of the action.

If neither Art. 10 nor Art. 141 applies, then admittedly the 120th Article does; and the only remaining question is at what date does the period of six years begin; or, to apply the words of the Act, when did the right to sue accrue to the Appellant? It seems to their Lordships to be clear that the expiry of the year of grace is the time at which the pre-emptor's right arises. The mortgagee's right of property had then become mature and the mere fact that he had not enforced that right by a suit for possession does not affect the question. Their Lordships are satisfied of the soundness of the decision of the High Court of the North-West Provinces in Ali Abbas v. Kalka Prasad (2).

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is a consolidated appeal from the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, setting aside three decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Unao.

The appeal comes before their Lordships under somewhat singular circumstances.

One Babu Ram Sahai, a wealthy talukdar owning non-talukdari as well as talukdari property, died on the 5th of July 1890. He left a widow, Krishna Dei, who is now dead, and two sisters-in-law, Ram Dei and the Appellant Sukh Dei, widows of two deceased brothers.

On his death his widow Krishna Dei took possession of his entire estate.

In the course of mutation proceedings consequent on the death of Ram Sahai Krishna Dei filed a petition alleging that her husband had left a Will dated the 4th of June 1890 and registered on the 27th of that month under which she was solely entitled to all her husband's estate. Afterwards through her vakil she stated that her husband had on the 26th of July 1876 made a Will in her favour and that she as owner and possessor of the said property under that Will claimed to have the property entered in her name. An order in accordance with her claim was made by the Deputy Commissioner on the 25th of October 1890.

Thereupon three persons who claimed to be the reversionary heirs of Ram Sahai and who were or are represented by the three Respondents brought three suits to establish their title against Krishna Dei, Ram Dei and the Appellant Sukh Dei alleging that Ram Sahai had died intestate.

Krishna Dei in her written statement denied that Ram Sahai died intestate. She set up both Wills but she rested her title on the alleged Will of 1876 and declared that the Will of 1890 was a "useless" document "inoperative, null and void." The written statement of Ram Dei in effect supported the statement of Krishna Dei. The Appellant Sukh Dei filed no written statement. Against her the suits proceeded ex parte.

The Plaintiffs in their replication impeached the alleged Will of 1876 as a forgery. They claimed judgment against Krishna Dei and Ram Dei as to the alleged Will of 1890 on their own admissions in the pleadings. As against the Appellant Sukh Dei in regard to the alleged will of the 4th of June 1890 they asserted that they would prove "the spurious character of the said document and the circumstances attending its preparation and registration . . . if necessary."

In the result the Subordinate Judge found that the alleged Will of 1876 was a forgery. But as regards the alleged Will of 1890 which was said to have been lost he came to a different conclusion. He held that that Will was established not upon the ground that the Defendants or any of them had proved its due execution for no proof of that sort was tendered at the trial but upon the ground that the Plaintiffs had declared that they would prove it to be spurious if necessary and that they had produced no evidence on the point. While they were "prepared to call it a forged document" they "did not dare" he said "to prove" that "assertion." The "pretermission" of the Plaintiffs was he held "an evident ground for the document in question being genuine."

On appeal to the Judicial Commissioner the Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the alleged Will of 1876 was not a genuine Will but differed from him as regards the alleged Will of 1890. The Court held that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in placing upon the Plaintiffs the onus of proving the Will of the 4th of June 1890 to be a forgery, and held further that no attempt had been made to prove the genuineness of the said alleged Will and that the same was a forgery.

From the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the Appellant Sukh Dei alone has appealed.

In the opinion of their Lordships the conclusion of the Court below that the alleged Will of the 4th of June 1890 was not proved is perfectly correct and it was not necessary for the Court to go so far as to declare that the document was a forgery. The story of the registration of the alleged Will and its subsequent loss is most suspicious as the Subordinate Judge himself held but it would have been quite enough for the Court of Appeal to say that the alleged Will was not proved. The burden of proof of course lies upon the person who sets up a Will not upon the person who is prepared to impeach it. Now Krishna Dei and Ram Dei threw over the alleged Will of 1890 in favour of the alleged Will of 1876 which has been pronounced by both Courts to be a forgery. The Appellant, Sukh Dei, took no part in the trial and of course offered no evidence in support of the alleged Will of 1890.

On the appeal to their Lordships the learned counsel for the Appellant said everything that could be said in support of the appeal, but there were no materials on which even a plausible argument could be based. The deceased it seems some four years before his death had a conversation with the Assistant Commissioner of the district, from which it might be inferred that he contemplated making a Will some day or other, and then when the Subordinate Judge, for his own satisfaction, enquired into the alleged loss of the alleged Will, some persons came forward and said that they had seen the Will somewhere, and it was argued by the learned counsel for the Appellant that the Plaintiffs might have cross-examined these witnesses. So they might, with the leave of the Subordinate Judge. But they were not bound to do so. Nor would they have been well advised to have taken such a course. They were perfectly justified in waiting until evidence in support of the Will was produced at the trial.

In their Lordships' opinion it is idle to discuss such flimsy evidence as that upon which the appeal was based. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal must be dismissed.

The Appellants must pay one set of costs of the consolidated appeal, to be apportioned between the Respondents in the discretion of the Registrar in the event of their not agreeing.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant in this case, Kedar Nath Chatterjee, has been convicted of the offence of using as genuine a forged document knowing it to be forged under sec. 471, read with sec. 467 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that one Ram Chandra Mukerji executed in favour of Mahesh Chandra Banerjee a mortgage bond on the 9th of Falgoun 1290. A suit was brought upon this document by Kedar Nath Chatterjee against the heir of Ram Chandra Mukerjee (he being then dead) upon the ground that he was the beneficial holder of the bond, Mahesh Chandra Banerjee being only his benamidar. It was, however, found in the course of the trial of that case, that the bond produced was not the true document executed by Ram Chandra, but rather a forgery, and accordingly the suit was dismissed. The Appellant was thereupon indicted for the offence of using as genuine a forged document, knowing it to be forged.

That Ram Chandra Mukerjee executed on the 9th Falgoun 1290, a mortgage bond for Rs. 199 is conceded on all hands; but the question that has been raised is this, whether the document that was produced by or on behalf of Kedar Nath Chatterjee in the suit instituted by him for the enforcement of the said bond is the true document. The document that is produced purports to be an exact fac simile of the original mortgage bond, with all the endorsements of registration on the back thereof, as also the seal of the Registrar. But there is internal evidence afforded by the document itself or rather by the endorsements appearing on the back of it that it could not be the true document which was executed by Ram Chandra Mukerjee, and subsequently registered before the Sub-Registrar of Deeds. And there is besides the evidence of the registration head clerk, in whose handwriting some of the endorsements purport to have been made, as also other evidence for the prosecution, which unmistakably proved that the document in question is a forgery. There can also be no doubt that the prisoner used the document in the suit that he brought against the heir of Ram Chandra Mukerjee.

It appears, however, that it was the case for the prosecution that the original document executed by Ram Chandra Mukerjee was paid up and discharged, and the document then torn up into two pieces, and that the Appellant Kedar Nath Chatterjee having managed through some of his people to get hold of this torn document, prepared the document in question by forging the writings and the endorsements thereupon.

The learned Judge, however, was unable to hold upon the evidence, such as it was, adduced on behalf of the prosecution, that the case set up by them that the original document was paid up and discharged, was satisfactorily proved; and upon this, it has been contended before us by the learned counsel for the Appellant that it must be taken that the money covered by the mortgage bond was due to Kedar Nath Chatterjee, and, therefore, the document produced by him, though it might be a forgery, could not be regarded as a "false document" within the meaning of sec. 464, I. P. C., which lays down what a false document is, and that therefore the Appellant could not be held guilty of fraudulently or dishonestly uttering a forged document.

That section says:—

"A person is said to make a false document who dishonestly or fraudulently makes, signs, seals, or executes a document or part of a document, or makes any mark denoting the execution of a document, with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made, signed, sealed, or executed by or by authority of a person, by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed, or executed or at a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed, or executed" and so on. This refers us to the definition of a forged document as contained in sec. 463, which says "whoever makes any false document with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person, as to support any claim or title, or cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract, or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed commits forgery." And we find that the words "dishonestly" and "fraudulently" are defined in secs. 24 and 25, I. P. C.; sec. 24 says "whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing dishonestly." Sec. 25 lays down:—"A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise."

The argument that has been advanced to us proceeds upon the assumption that in any given case where the person procuring a forged document does not intend to attain wrongful gain to him or cause wrongful loss to another, the document could not be regarded as a false document within the meaning of sec. 464. But the argument loses sight of the distinction which is patent in secs. 464 and 463, read with the definitions to which we have just adverted, between "dishonestly" and fraudulently." The matter was fully discussed and considered in the case of Queen-Empress v. Abbas Ali (1) and it was held that deprivation, actual or intended is not a necessary ingredient of the intent to defraud referentially imported into sec. 464, and by a similar train of reasoning we are led to the like conclusion as to the true construction of sec. 471. And in this connection, we may also refer to the case of Lalit Mohan Sirkar v. Queen-Empress (2), where a Divisional Court, following two cases,—one in the Madras and the other in the Bombay High Court, clearly pointed out the distinction between “dishonestly” and “fraudulently” occurring in sec. 464, Indian Penal Code, as also to the case of Dhunum Kasee (3), where a person, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of a property, used a forged document for the purpose of supporting his title, though there was no necessity for the use of it, it was held that such user was clearly fraudulent within the meaning of sec. 25 of the Penal Code.

KEDAR NATH CHATTERJEE v. THE KING-EMPRESS.

It seems to us that though the act of the Appellant in producing a forged bond in the suit that he brought is not proved to be dishonest within the meaning of sec. 24 of the Penal Code, yet it was fraudulent, because it was with the intent to commit a fraud upon the Court, viz., to make that Court believe that he was entitled to recover money upon the basis of the particular document then produced. The word “fraudulent” denotes an intention to deceive, and the intention of Kedar Nath Chatterjee was clearly to deceive the Court into holding that he was entitled to enforce the bond in question.

The learned counsel for the Appellant, however, has relied upon the case of Queen-Empress v. Sheo Doyal (4) which, no doubt, may be regarded as supporting his contention, but with all deference to the learned Judge who decided it, we are unable to follow it.

Upon these grounds, we are of opinion that the argument advanced before us cannot be sustained.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

BENI SINGH v. UMRAO MAHTO.

A Magistrate has not the power, after recording the proceeding, as he is required to do under the first paragraph of the section, to add, in the course of the investigation, any new party as concerned in the dispute.

PROTAB NARAYAN SING v. RAJENDRO NARAYAN SING (1), JANOKI NATH ROY v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS (2), LALDHARI SINGH v. SUKHEDEO NARAIN SINGH (3) followed.

A Magistrate cannot treat a subsequent proceeding as a continuation of an earlier one and he cannot refer back to the possession held by one or other of the parties upon the date of the earlier proceeding in determining which of them should be declared to be in possession on the date of the subsequent proceeding.

This was a rule issued on the 6th of August 1900, against the order of the District Magistrate of Patna, dated the 3rd of July 1900.

The facts of the case appear fully from the judgment.

The Advocate-General, Mr. P. L. Roy, Mr. Donogh and Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Surendra Nath Roy for the Petitioners.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Jackson, Mr. K. N. Sen Gupta, and Babu Mohabir Sahay for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT WAS AS FOLLOWS:—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Patna to show cause why an order passed by him in a proceeding

(1) 1 C. W. N. 3 : s. c. I. L. R. 24 Cal. 55 (1896).

(2) 3 C. W. N. 329 (1899).

(3) 4 C. W. N. 618 : s. c. I. L. R. 27 Cal. 822 (1900).

under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the 3rd July last, should not be set aside. *

It appears that in February 1899, three proceedings were instituted under sec. 145 by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh, one relating to 211 bighas of land, another to 106 bighas of land, and the third to 46 bighas of land, all situate in a certain village owned by Prem Singh and Kali Singh as zemindars. An application was made to this Court under its revisional powers to set aside these proceedings and a rule was granted, but the Divisional Court which had to deal with it, discharged the rule, making, however, certain observations for the guidance, as we take it, of the Magistrate. The proceedings then went back to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and Mr. Forester, who was formerly the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and who had in the meantime been appointed to the post of District Magistrate of Patna, called up the proceedings to his own file.

The District Magistrate, having regard to certain considerations mentioned in his final order, was of opinion that a separate proceeding with respect to a portion of the land which was the subject of the first of the three proceedings to which we have already referred, should be instituted; and he accordingly drew up a fresh proceeding on the 4th May 1900, by way of a continuation of the earlier proceeding which had been instituted in February 1899. He was of opinion that Prem Singh and Kali Singh, who were not originally parties to the proceeding instituted in February 1899, as also certain thikadars should be added as parties, and he accordingly made an order, and then instituted the proceeding of May last to which we have just referred. This proceeding ran thus:—

“Whereas it appears from the police-report, dated the 28th March 1900, that a dispute still exists regarding the possession of land in mouzah Nawarup, Lalla Pari, outpost Larmera, thana Mokamah, and in respect of which a criminal case (Baljit Dahi v. Raj Kumar Singh and others, sec. 143, I. P. C.) is now pending in this Court, and whereas there was a similar dispute relating to the same land in February 1899, concerning which a sec. 145, Cr. P. C., proceeding was instituted and proceeded with, and this proceeding is a continuation of that proceeding, and whereas for the better decision of the dispute it is resolved to deal with one of the disputed plots first, and plot No. 54, as shown in the map made by the Sub-Deputy Collector of Barh, dated the 30th May 1899, has been selected for decision of the question of possession; it is hereby ordered under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., that the parties named below do appear on the 14th May and put in written statements of their respective claims, together with their documentary evidence, as regards the actual possession of the said subject of dispute. Names of parties on separate sheet.”

It is unnecessary here to state that Prem Singh and Kali Singh, the landlords, were among others, named as parties upon whom the order was to be served (as they were afterwards served) calling upon them to appear and file written statements on the day appointed. The Magistrate then, upon evidence being taken in the matter of the actual possession of the land in respect of which the proceeding was instituted, held that such possession was with one of the second party, viz, Omrao Mahto, who claimed to be the tenant of the land, and declared that he was in possession thereof; so that in result, the order that has been passed by the District Magistrate is an order which binds, not only the persons who were parties to the original proceeding, but also Prem Singh and Kali Singh, who were not parties to the proceeding, but who were afterwards added by order of the District Magistrate as parties thereto.

The first ground that has been taken by the learned Advocate-General and which was the real ground upon which the rule was granted by this Court, is that it was not competent to the District Magistrate under sec. 145 of the Code, to add Prem Singh and Kali Singh to the proceeding of May last, when they were not parties to the initial proceedings. Sec. 145 of the Code runs thus:—

“Whenever a District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is satisfied from a police-report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any tangible immoveable property, or the boundaries thereof, within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he shall make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court, in person or by pleader, within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.”

BENI SINGH v. UMRAO MAHTO.

Then in cl. (4) it is provided—

“The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statement so put in, hear the parties, receive the evidence produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary, and, if possible, decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order beforementioned in such possession of the said subject.”

And in cl. (5) the section says:—

“Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend, or any other person interested, from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed, and in such case the Magistrate shall cancel his said order, and all further proceedings thereon shall be stayed, but subject to such cancellation, the order of the Magistrate under sub-sec. (2) shall be final.”

It will be observed that it is the duty of the Magistrate to find out in the first instance which parties are concerned in the dispute that has arisen, and to serve his order upon such parties, and, when the matter comes before him for trial, he should determine which of such parties, namely, the parties, as mentioned in the first paragraph of sec. 145, is in actual possession, and though he is entitled to allow a third party to come in in the course of the proceedings, it is only for the purpose of showing that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace really existed or exists. It is not clear that the Legislature contemplated that such third party should be made a party to the proceedings.

It seems, however, upon a consideration of sec. 145, that the Magistrate has not the power, after recording the proceeding as he is required to do under the first paragraph of sec. 145, to add, in the course of the investigation, any new party, as concerned in the dispute, and this we find to have been definitely held in the case of Protal Narayan Singh v. Rajendro Narayan Singh (1) and also in two other cases to which our attention has been called by the learned Advocate-General, one of them being Janoki Nath Roy v. The Queen-Empress (2) and the other Laldhari Singh v. Sukhdeo Narain Singh (3). If then the Magistrate had no power to add Prem Singh and Kali Singh as parties to this proceeding on the 4th May last, as he did, it seems to be obvious that he acted without jurisdiction in making them such parties and in declaring as against them that Omrao Mahto, one of the second party Defendants, should be maintained in possession of the land in dispute. The learned Magistrate no doubt treats the proceeding that was instituted on the 4th May last as a continuation of the earlier proceeding of February 1899; but we think, in the circumstances, that he could not do so. He might no doubt institute a fresh proceeding upon fresh materials that were then laid before him, but in doing so he could not treat such proceeding as a continuation of the earlier proceeding, and he could not refer back, as he has done in the present case, to the possession held by one or other of the parties upon the date of the said earlier proceeding of February 1899, in determining which of them should be declared to be in possession on the date of the subsequent proceeding of May last. The Magistrate himself saw the difficulty that existed in the way of adding Prem Singh and Kali Singh as parties to the proceeding, but he evidently thought that the High Court in their order, to which we have already referred, made suggestions which favoured the idea of their being made such parties. We are, however, unable to take the same view as the Magistrate has taken. We do not think that the High Court intended that any person not originally a party to the proceeding should be added as a party to it.

We think that on this ground, and this ground alone, the rule should be made absolute. We accordingly set aside the order of the Magistrate. If the Magistrate thinks that there is any likelihood of a breach of the peace, he may take such steps as he may be advised to prevent such breach of the peace, under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Rule made absolute.

REPORTS (See Index.)

On, the re-opening of the High Court to-day the constitution of the Benches will be as follows:—

PRIVY COUNCIL DEPARTMENT AND APPEALS FROM THE ORIGINAL SIDE.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Hill.

PRESIDENCY GROUP.—Mr. Justice Banerjee and Mr. Justice Brett.

RAJSHAHYE AND PATNA GROUPS.—Mr. Justice Rampini and Mr. Justice Sale.

BURDWAN GROUP.—Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Pratt.

CRIMINAL BUSINESS.—Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Stevens.

ORIGINAL SIDE.—Mr. Justice Stanley and Mr. Justice Harington will sit singly on the Original Side.

OPPORTUNITY HAS BEEN TAKEN OF THE LONG VACATION to effect various alterations in the Court premises. The big court-room to the extreme east, where one of the Judges on the Original Side ordinarily sit and where Criminal Sessions are held, has undergone considerable alteration. The arches on the east and north, between the corridor and court-room have been closed by glass-doors artistically designed to go with the gothic architecture of the court. The Judges' platform has been somewhat curtailed, but the steps leading to it have been considerably improved. The place reserved for the jurors has also been raised in height and a more substantial barrier has been put between the prisoner and the public. On the whole the changes have given a cosier look to the court-rooms, especially in view of the approaching cold weather; but it is not until all the varying seasons of the year have been tried that a proper opinion can be pronounced as to the general merits of the alterations. But there can be little doubt that for accoustic purposes the changes will be welcomed by both the Bench and the Bar. The Court of the Chief Justice at the other extreme end of the court-house has also undergone similar alterations with only this difference that the green screens have been replaced by more comfortable looking red curtains. The comforts of the Bar have not been over-looked and the Jury-room has been placed at their disposal for improving the accommodation of the Bar Library and another room has been fitted up for the gentlemen of the jury.

WE DEEPLY REGRET, TO HAVE TO RECORD IN OUR first issue the death of Professor Max Müller. Directly, he may not have contributed much to the legal literature, but the publication of the Sacred Books of the East under his able editorship has prominently brought before the civilized world the legal learning of the Hindus, which was confined before his time to only a privileged class in India and a few erudite scholars in Europe. He was not only a great Sanscrit scholar, but what was more, he was, perhaps, the only foreigner who had thoroughly entered into the spirit of the literature which he had made his life-long study. It will be impossible to name another foreign scholar of Sanscrit whose name would inspire in India so much genuine respect and reverence and whose memory would be more lovingly cherished.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL IN THE appeal of Hodges and anr. v. The Delhi and London Bank, Ltd., which we publish in our reports this week, is very important and should be carefully noted by the profession and the general public. It decides for the first time, so far as we are aware, that under the Contract Act in this country a surety may by agreement disentitle himself from seeking the protection of the well-known rule of English law, which has been embodied in sec. 135 of the Indian Contract Act and under which a surety is discharged if the principal debtor is given time by the creditor without the knowledge or consent of the surety. We propose to discuss in one of our earliest issues the principle and the qualifications that attach to the law in England and how far they have been adopted by the Courts in this country.

WE DRAW SPECIAL ATTENTION TO THE PRIVY Council decision in Matikarjuna v. Narhari, reported by us in this issue. This extends the principle first enunciated by the Board in the case of Jagadamba Chowdhurani v. Dakhina Mohun (L. R. 13 I. A. 84) to all cases where limitation is sought to be avoided on similar pleadings. In the Calcutta High Court and also in Bombay, until lately, the view prevailed that when the setting aside of an adoption (4 C. W. N. 405) or of a sale was indirectly involved in a suit for possession or for redemption (11 Bom. 279) the period of limitation prescribed for the latter is to prevail. But in a recent Full Bench case (24 Bom. 160) Jenkins, C. J., and Tyabji, J., went against this view, and it is a fortunate coincidence that their Lordships of the Privy Council have on appeal from an earlier Full Bench of the same Court, reported at p. 10 of our present issue, have pronounced in favour of the later view, which removes all possibility of future conflict. After this the Calcutta cases supporting the contrary view must be considered as overruled and the learned judges whose opinion prevailed in the recent Bombay Full Bench case (24 Bom. 160) must be congratulated on having anticipated the Judicial Committee.

WE INVITE ATTENTION ALSO TO THE CASE OF Rai Jatindra Nath Choudhuri v. Amrita Lal Bagchi, reported in this number. Two very important points on the Hindu law of adoption arose in this case. First, whether a Hindu widow on adopting a second son on the death of a son begotten or adopted, divested herself of the state which she inherited as a mother. Secondly, from what period does the second adopted son take the estate. There was, before this case no direct authority bearing on the questions, these questions not having been raised directly in any of the reported decisions. Nor is there any express text bearing on the question. The commentators on Hindu law are not agreed on this point in their opinions. Mr. Mayne would seem to be opposed to the view taken in the present case, viz., that the widow does divest herself of the estate : while Babu Golap Chandra Sarker, although expressing a contrary opinion still considers it but equitable that the widow should thus divest herself in favour of the second adopted son and, as has been pointed out in the able judgment of Banerjee, J., maintains that unless this be the effect of the adoption, the adopted son would be deprived even of maintenance out of the estate of the adopter. West and Büchler favour the view taken in the judgment under notice. It has moreover the support of the opinion expressed on two occasions by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well known cases of Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhury (10 Moo. I. A. 279) and in Vellanki v. Venkata Rama, (4 I. A. 1). Mr. Justice Banerjee's judgment is a closely reasoned one and contains an examination of all the earlier cases bearing on the point and will surely have the effect of removing the difficulties hitherto felt by commentators in pronouncing any definite opinion on the question.

WE MUCH REGRET TO ANNOUNCE THE DEATH OF BABU Hem Chandra Bose, Interpreter on the Original Side. Although young at his work he had earned the esteem of the profession by his rare quality of never allowing the merits of a case or the credibility of witnesses to interfere with his fair and faithful rendering of their statements from the box. Another very remarkable fact that had won for him the golden opinion of the profession and the gratitude of suitors was that he never charged any expedition fee for translation work entrusted to him. His death is a distinct loss to the Court.

HINDU JURISPRUDENCE

AND ITS

● ETHICAL EVOLUTION.

"Hindu Law," says John D. Mayne, "has the oldest pedigree of any known system of Jurisprudence." While, for instance, the XII Tables of Rome appeared in B. C. 450, and the Attic codes of Draco and Solon, about B. C. 625 and 550 respectively, there is evidence that the earlier codes or sources of Hindu law and even the Code of Manu are of much earlier origin. So slowly however does the East change that to this day the law may be said to flourish in all its primitive vigour, and shew but little signs of decrepitude. This is due to several causes:—

Firstly and mainly, to the religious sanction with which it is clothed : for all ancient systems of law are "attributed to some divine being from whose statutes and ordinances it were impiety to depart."

Secondly, to the conservatism of the Asiatic races : for "in the tropics," as observed by Bluntschli in his "Theory of the State," "nature often appears so overpowering, that in despair of conquering her, man gives up all effort, and his heart is filled with fear and superstition" inclining him to the status quo or at least restraining him from flying from the known to the unknown.

Thirdly, in part, to the fertility of Indian soil : for, as Bluntschli observes, "the main motive to human effort is the desire for subsistence. If this is removed by the bounty of nature, men work little or not at all ; and generally sink into indolence and sensuality. When they do not work, men fail to develop the hidden resources of their nature, and society does not advance." Consequently Law which keeps pace with the movements of society cannot advance under such conditions.

Lastly, to the circumstance of its diffusion over a vast area : for, as Sir Henry S. Maine observes in his Ancient Law "the larger the space over which a particular set of institutions is diffused, the greater is its tenacity and vitality."

Even to this day Hindu Jurisprudence governs the civil rights of the Hindu races extending "From Kashmir's icy mountains

To Cochin's coral strand,

Where Mysore's sunny fountains

Roll down their golden sand," and that, strangely enough, in much the same way as it did in the days of their predecessors about thirty centuries ago. Witness in the Mahabharata the exclusion from the Raj of Hastinapur of Dhritarastra by his younger brother Pandu on the score of his (congenital) blindness, which is still, as then a disqualification for inheritance in Hindu law, Ram Nath v. Durga Sundari (I. L. R. 4 Cal. 550), Advypa v. Rudrava (I. L. R. 4 Bom. 104), Kogiyadu v. Lakshmi (I. L. R. 5 Mad. 149), IX Mann 210. Indeed in its general feature—for instance, in reference to the condition of the joint family, the order of inheritance, the practice of adoption and the like—Hindu law as at present administered corresponds fairly well with the state of law evidenced by the institutes of Manu, Vasistha and Gautama. Apropos of this conservative tenacity of Hindu religio-legal institutions, all distinctions between the past and present, actually disappear in India. "Sometimes," remarks Sir Henry Maine in his Village Communities, "the past is present; much more often it is removed from it by varying distances, which, however, cannot be estimated or expressed chronologically."

In fact, all the institutions of Hindu society seem devised for the maintenance of peace, order and contentment, and hardly any aims at progress in the modern sense. Its ideal is rest, or orderly movement which is but another name for equilibrium. "Life," says Bluntschli, "is an unchanging repetition, a wheel revolving for ever in the same way and round the same axle." The philosophy of the Upanishadas taught the same thing and it is perhaps because of that, that the Bhuddhist doctrine of Nirvana, or absorption into nothingness was hailed by the Hindus at one period of their national life, as a real relief from eternal monotony. When they made religion the governing principle of their life, it is but natural that the practical side of human nature got neglected. This, to a certain extent, explains why law in this country was always subservient to religion and morality, and never was given any independent scope for development.

For instance, the Hindu lawgivers considered that the right to inherit temporal benefits was co-extensive with the obligation of the heir to confer corresponding spiritual benefit on the deceased. Such doctrines are so foreign to the system of Western jurisprudence, that when we view them in the light of the latter, they serve only to puzzle us. Thus Sir Henry Maine wonders why "the right to inherit a dead man's property is exactly co-extensive with the duty of performing his obsequies. If the rites are not properly performed or not performed by the proper person, no relationship is considered as established between the deceased and anybody surviving him, the law of succession does not apply, and nobody can inherit the property. Every great event in the life of a Hindu seems to be regarded as leading up to, and bearing upon, these solemnities. If he marries, it is to have children who may celebrate them after his death; if he has no children, he lies under the strongest obligation to adopt a son from another family, "with a view," "to the funeral, the water and the solemn sacrifice." In the case of Raja Upendra Lall Roy v. Srimati Rani Prosonnomoji (1 B. L. R. 221), that eminent Judge Dwarka Nath Mitter entering into the spirit of Hindu law and applying it to the law of adoption said—"The institution of adoption as it exists among the Hindus is essentially a religious institution. It originated chiefly if not wholly in motives of religion; and an act of adoption is, to all intents and purposes, a religious act, but one of such a nature that its religious and temporal aspect are wholly inseparable."

The Hindu institutional writers use the term "Dharma" to signify both religion and law. It literally means "that which supports or holds up." So the Dharmashastra are more or less mixed treatises, which contemplate theology, metaphysics, jurisprudence, ritual, penance, ceremonial, expiatory and customary laws, and, as in Manu, even cosmology, as their proper province. Manu in his treatise on Dharmashastras lays down rules of conduct in all these spheres and phases of life. Yagnavalkya, next to Manu in date and authority, does however treat of the same traditional topics under the separate heads of Achara, Prayaschitta and Vyavahara and under the last, positive law. The only apparent exception to such mixed treatment of social, religious, moral and legal duties in the Dharmashastras is furnished by the work of Narada, a comparatively later compilation, which deals exclusively with civil and criminal laws.

The intermixture of ethics, metaphysics, and theology in the Hindu system of jurisprudence is attributable to a variety of causes. It is no doubt largely due to the notion of the universe as ordained and presided over by a divine agency. It is also true that at the dawn of civilisation "the facts of external nature and the doings of men," as Prof. Holland says, "were alike conceived of as ordained by the gods. The constitutions of states and the customs and laws of all the peoples of the earth were as much of divine contrivance as the paths of the planets." But over and above that, one has to consider the problem before the Hindu sages at that distance of time and the then conditions of society. The task of providing a government that would be at once simple and effective in preserving - order and contentment throughout a vast continent and amongst such a variety of people as is hardly to be met with any other part of the world. This task had to be accomplished by a handful of men, who were anxious not to sacrifice their best energies in the art of government, but to reserve them for the cultivation of the human mind and to establish its kinship with the Divine.

The legislators were a small but a cultured class and they early conceived that the best means of preserving peace, order and contentment in society was to preserve custom and usage, which were consistent with morality and to give to the people such ideas of life and rules of conduct as would make society move automatically and with the least degree of friction.

The country was then inhabited as to this day by a variety of races differing in manners, habits and speech and unlike now, at various stages of barbarity. The customs, usages and interests of all these numerous races, and their more numerous sections and sub-sections had to be equally preserved and also made to conform to the ruler's ideals of life and conduct. How this task was accomplished, the Code of Manu bears abundant evidence. For instance, the different forms of marriage sanctioned by Manu—especially the Asura, Rakshasha and Pisacha, as the names imply, were presumably of non-Aryan origin and yet because they prevailed as living customs, which could not be put down among the semi-Hinduised aboriginal races that they find a place along with the more approved ones in his Code.

- Mayne truly observes that "when the Aryans penetrated into India, they found a number of usages either the same as or not wholly unlike their own. These they accepted with or without modifications, rejecting only those which were incapable of being assimilated such as polyandry, incestuous marriages and the like. The latter lived only a merely local life, while the former became incorporated among the customs of the ruling race." This accounts for the mention of the practise of Nyoga, or raising up issue by one man on another man's wife, as also the disapproved classes of sons in the Code of Manu. Accordingly, to put down such disapproved usages, the sages were obliged to invoke the aid of religion and morality more than the arm of the law which could not go the same length. Thus, while putting together customs and usages of various tendencies, they were at the same time at pains to point out which of them were sanctioned by morality and religion, and ought therefore to be followed, and which were not. So particular customs came to be approved or disapproved on moral principles, giving rise to the intermixture of religious, civil and moral ordinances in Hindu law.

To some extent the policy of the ancient Hindu law, was the same as led to the union of Church and State at the earlier stages of European civilization. "To gain the obedience of men," observes that acute thinker Walter Bagehot, in his Physics and Politics, "the primary condition is the identity—not the union, but the sameness—of what we now call Church and State. What is requisite in the Old World is a single government—call it Church or State as you like—regulating the whole of human life. No division of power is then endurable without danger—probably without destruction, the priest must not teach one thing, and the King another. King must be priest and priest King (or society would go to pieces)." This language fits in with the description of the patriarchal institution of Vedic India.

But undoubtedly the most potent factor of all, is the innate religiousness of the people, which is perhaps the grandest aspect of Asiatic nature. The glory and majesty of Indian skies, her noble rivers and lofty mountains and broad and fertile plains bathed in sunshine, all stirred to their innermost depths the heart and imagination of the primitive Hindu, and bowed him down in kneeling worship of the Spirit behind them. Besides, primitive as he was, he was essentially engrossed by the might of the elements, Agni, the fire of the sun and lightning; Indra the bright, cloudless firmament; the Maruta, or winds; the Usas the dawn; and various kindred manifestations of the luminous bodies, and Nature in general—turned his awe into pious subjectivity and veneration. Thus from the first, the constitution of the Hindu mind took a religious and philosophical bias. Consequently the History of Hindu civilisation is the history of its different systems of philosophy and religion, that of the Vedas and the Upanisadas, the Sara-darsanas (six systems of philosophy) of Buddhism and Vedantism and of the infinite variety of faiths and persuasions, sects and creeds that sprung up out of each. Amongst such a people and under such conditions it is but natural that even law had its peculiar mode of evolution and was wrought out, as Bühler says, "under the influence mainly of religious conceptions."

Not that indications were wanting of a similar influence on Roman or Grecian law, but civilization as it moved westward seems to have taken a more and more practical form, and naturally the distinct provinces of law and religion became once for all established. To this fact more than to anything else, is to be attributed the marvellous development of Roman law, which has practically given birth to the modern science of jurisprudence.

Owing, however, to the peculiar conditions of Hindu society and to the peculiar tendencies of the Hindu nation, law could never extricate itself from the thralldom of religion. Conservatism has early been a creed of the Hindus. Any change in its laws or institutions, was strenuously opposed till they could be proved to be consistent with the Vedas. As Dr. Markby puts it "they are bound to accept the authority of the Vedas and Smritis as divine, and they cannot do this without making it the basis of their law. If they do not obey the precepts of the divine law, they must explain them away by a process of interpretation, or else allege a super-imposed custom." Both law and religion were subjected to the same process of interpretation, and the method of interpretation developed into a distinct branch of knowledge called the Mimansa Darsana. This method of interpretation had early cramped a free and healthy development of the Hindu law, and thus it is that it has ever remained entangled in the meshes of ceremonial law.

Another influence hardly less powerful was the supremacy of the sacerdotal class. Everywhere in the world, legislation is an incident of the sovereign power, but Hindu law presents the curious phenomenon of a divorce between legislation and sovereignty. The Brahmins had reserved to themselves this function of supreme power and established a Brahmin theocracy or oligarchy throughout the length and breadth of the country. "They modified the law," say West and Bühler, "by connecting every phase of moral or religious change with some doctrine or text regarded as of divine authority, or by suggesting a moral reason for the change," and the result of it all has been well summed up by Mayne in the following words: "The religious element entwined itself with legal conceptions and then distorted them in three ways. First, by attributing a pious purpose to acts of a purely secular nature. Secondly, by clogging those acts with rules and restrictions, suitable to the assumed pious purpose. And, thirdly, by gradually altering the customs themselves, so as to further the special objects of religion or policy favoured by Brahmanism."

But still under the Hindu regime, law underwent a development in its own way. When the tide of conquest set in, the conditions of things were changed, and things peculiarly Hindu, could no longer pursue an independent course of evolution. Under such circumstances everything threatened to be reduced into a dead form, till the advent of English jurisprudence infused new blood into it. Thanks to the common sense of the English judges and to the sovereign prerogative of the Privy Council that the Hindu law has entered upon a new phase of evolution and has been fast adopting itself to its new environments and, so far as we can judge, with the best of results. In conclusion this must be said as to intrinsic merits of the law itself that the moral principles which form its backbone will make it survive all vicissitudes of society and make it live and thrive in all civilized relationship between man and man.

Review.

CASE LAW ON TORTS. By R. D. Alexander, B.C.S. Fourth Edition. By Mr. P. L. Buckland, Barrister-at-Law. Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

That a work which aims at classifying the important Indian cases by way of illustrating the principle of the Law of Torts should attain a fourth edition in these days, when annotated Codes claim almost the sole attention of the practising profession, speaks for its inherent merit. The arrangement is good, the treatment methodical and the import of cases well brought out. The edition under review has been brought up to date by the incorporation of most of the recent rulings affecting the subjects dealt with. But there are one or two regrettable slips and omissions which display some degree of carelessness or haste in the preparation of the present edition. For instance, it is unfortunate that no mention is made of the very important case, East Indian Railway v. Kally Dass Mukerjee (3 C. W. N. 781: s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 165), relating to the liability of a Railway Company for the safe carriage of its passengers; the retention of the old title to recent General Clauses Act is a similar slip. Such errors would sometimes occur in spite of ones best endeavours to avoid them and do not in the case of the present work detract from its established reputation as a sound treatise on the Case Law of Torts.

BROOM'S LEGAL MAXIMS. Seventh Edition. By H. P. Manisty and H. Chitty. Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, London.

This is the seventh edition of this famous work which was first published in the year 1845 and at once obtained a wide circulation as a valuable textbook for legal students. The main idea of the work is to present under the head of 'Maxims,' the governing principles of the English law with illustrations as to their application, as to how they are limited or extended having regard to the circumstances of particular classes of cases. It does not pretend to be an exhaustive digest of the case law on any one subject, nor does it deal with any particular branches of the law in detail. No better or more useful book on first principles can be placed in the hands either of the practitioner or the law student. The importance of an accurate acquaintance with the fundamental rules is becoming more and more felt by the profession in India where Statute law is daily increasing in bulk. The Courts also feel the necessity of examining them carefully to see how they are to be applied according to the exigencies of any particular case before them. The book is not merely one for casual reference but should be thoroughly studied and intimate knowledge of it has not only become necessary in these days but should form part of the equipment of every practitioner. The book is divided into chapters. The first two dealing with the rules founded on the public and legislative policy, those relating to legislative policy and the crown. It then variously deals with certain maxims which are rather reductions of reason than rules of law and comprises maxims relating to property, marriage and descent, the interpretation of written instruments in general, contract, and evidence. In the present edition, the editors have succeeded in maintaining and developing the author's idea and by occasionally re-arranging and modifying a portion of the old work, they have succeeded in improving upon it. There has been a large addition of recent decisions. It also appears that the editors received valuable assistance from certain notes made by Lord Justice Lindley, which alone have enhanced the value of the work, too well-known to require a lengthy review.

ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS, &c. By Michael Cadell. Third Edition. Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, London.

This the third edition of this work which has already been found useful by lawyers, and in which a chapter has been added dealing with charging orders. The author has dealt with the subject of Execution on Debts, Equitable Interests, Stock and Shares. The law and practice in England relating to Execution are not so systematic as here, where most of it is codified. The law, however, relating to Receivers by way of equitable execution in this country is little known or understood and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating thereto are often found not to be helpful. Much assistance will be derived on such subjects from the work under review. The case law is brought down to date and it is a handy little book for daily reference.

LAW RELATING TO INJUNCTIONS IN BRITISH INDIA. Tagore Law Lectures, 1897. By J. G. Woodroffe. Thacker, Spink & Co. Calcutta.

Every one will agree that this book has supplied a longfelt want. Prior to its publication there was no book from which a student could have gleaned the law on the subject as administered in India. We think the author has very properly confined his treatment of the subject to the purposes for which the Tagore law professorship was created. It is an admirable book for the purpose and even the practitioner will find it useful as most of the Indian cases are noticed and commented on. Making every allowance for its being a course of lectures, we cannot help observing that the author might well have avoided repetition without making any the less impression on the minds of the students.

To carry out his purpose, as expressed in his preface, Mr. Woodroffe, has, perhaps necessarily, omitted to notice some very important subjects and cases, which are of rare occurrence and would not, perhaps, be of much use, to a mere law student. The practitioner can no doubt, as the author remarks, refer to the standard works of reference on the subject. Still we think the author would have done better to remember throughout his work the mofussil practitioner to whom such works are not ordinarily accessible. He would not then probably have omitted to notice such leading cases as Lytton v. Davey on the question of copyright in letters, or Caird v. Syme on the question of copyright in lectures, or such subjects as injunctions under the Criminal Procedure Code, which are of frequent occurrence in the mofussil.

As a book for students, the index perhaps is not of so much importance as it would have been if the work had been expressly written for the use of practitioners, to whom an exhaustive index is of the first importance.

English Notes.

COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED.—REGINA v. BATTON. Before JUSTICES MATHEW, LAWBRANCE, WRIGHT, KENNEDY and DARLING. 28th July 1900.

Obtaining goods by false pretences—Remoteness.

The Defendant had run in certain races at the August 1899 Athletic Sports at Lonsdown. The name sent in for those contests was that of one Sims who was not present at Lonsdown at the time and knew nothing of the entries for them sent into the secretary of the sports. The entries had statements therein regarding Sims, that he had competed unsuccessfully for certain races, which were correct. Those entries were not in the Defendant's handwriting. Sims being a poor runner the handicapper gave a favourable position to Defendant and he being an expert runner was first in the races and so secured the prizes.

The handicapper becoming suspicious questioned Defendant if he really was Sims and received an answer in the affirmative, which was false. It also appeared that the Defendant had previously secured a prize for running at another place. He was convicted of obtaining goods by false pretences. The Recorder of Lonsdown, however, stated a case, being doubtful whether his summing up to the jury was sound. He had left it to the jury to say whether Defendant had acted "for a lark" without criminal intent or had secured the prizes by false representations wilfully made with that object. The jury being of the latter opinion he was convicted.

THE COURT would not follow the case of Regina v. Larner (14 Cox C. C. 497) relied upon by Defendant's counsel who urged that the attempt to obtain the prizes was too remote from the pretence. The judgment states that Lord Justice Lindley had correctly questioned the decision in that case. Here the Defendant was handicapped with a false pretence, he had entered for the races with the intention of winning the prizes and such fraudulent intention was not too remote. The conviction was correct.

Mr. P. Hughes for the Defendant.

Mr. Shearman and Mr. Walker for the Crown.

Conviction affirmed.

COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED.—THE QUEEN v. STREETER. Before JUSTICES MATHEW, LAW-RANCE, WRIGHT, KENNEDY and DARLING. 28th July 1900.

In this case the wife of one Tickner had stolen certain goods from her husband and sent it to the Defendant Streeter who was aware that she had stolen them. The wife left her husband and lived as man and wife with the Defendant Streeter. The husband missed the goods, gave the police information. The wife Ellen Tickner and the Defendant Streeter were arrested. At the time of the arrest the missing goods were found in the boxes which Ellen Tickner had sent to Streeter and some of the money was discovered in a box belonging to Streeters the key of which was in Ellen Tickner's purse. Both were indicted for larceny, but the Defendant Streeter was in addition indicted for receiving the stolen goods. At the West Sussex Quarter Sessions the jury found the wife guilty of larceny, but they found that Streeter was not guilty of larceny, but was guilty on the count for receiving.

On the case stated now coming on before the Court as above constituted the Judges held that the indictment for receiving the goods and money stolen by the wife did not lie, the matter was concluded by the case of Regina v. Smith (L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266). They so held because under sec. 91 of the Larceny Act of 1861 only persons who received goods, the stealing of which amounted to a felony "either at common law or under the provisions of that Act" could be indicted as receivers. The stealing by the wife of her husband's goods was not a larceny at common law or under that statute.

Mr. Raven for the Defendant.

Mr. G. Campbell for the Crown.

Decision in favour of the Defendant Streeter.

COURT OF APPEAL.—SMITH v. THE INNS OF COURT HOTEL, LIMITED. Before LORD JUSTICES A. L. SMITH, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER. 14th June 1900.

Hotel Company—Poisonous food—Negligence—Want of proper care—Verdict of jury.

This was an appeal by the Defendants, the above-named Hotel Company, against a decision of Mr. Justice Grantham who tried the cause with a special jury. The action was brought by the Appellants

Smith and his wife to recover damages for injuries suffered by them. It appeared that 91 persons were dining one evening at the table d' hôte dinner at the above Hotel on 17th of July of last year, of whom 39 including the Plaintiffs were more or less poisoned, they had all eaten either mutton or fish and they were all poisoned by ptomaines. Two of the 39 had died. At the trial the jury gave a verdict for £140 damages. On the Defendants' appeal the Court unanimously dismissed the appeal. Lord Justice A. L. Smith said "if the case made out by Plaintiffs in an action of negligence was equally consistent with the Defendants having been guilty of negligence and with his having acted with due care then there was no case to go to the jury." But in this case where 39 persons out of 91 who partook of a particular meal were poisoned in a similar manner, he had to ask himself whether that state of facts was more consistent with there having been a proper examination of the food on the part of the persons who supplied it, or with there not having been a proper examination."

The learned Judge thought the state of facts was more consistent with there having been an improper examination; and Mr. Justice Grantham had acted rightly in leaving the matter to the jury and not accepting the suggestion of Defendants' counsel that there was no case to go to the jury. He thought that seeing that the quantity of poison supplied in the food was large, it might have been detected had a reasonably careful examination been made. The jury had on the medical evidence reasonably found that there was a want of proper care. Both contentions for Appellant failed and the application for a new trial or verdict for Defendants must be refused.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q. C., and Mr. George Elliott for the Appellants.

Mr. Dickens, Q. C., and Mr. M. Muckenzie for the Plaintiffs.

C. W. A.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL. THE KENT COAL EXPLORATION COMPANY v. MARTIN AND OTHERS. Before LORDS JUSTICES A. L. SMITH, VAUGHAN, WILLIAMS and ROMER. 3rd July 1900.

Causes of action, joinder—Several Defendants, statement of claim against, same and in the alternative.

GOWER v. COULDRIDGE (1898, 1 Q. B. 348) and FRANKENBURG v. GREAT HORSELESS CARRIAGE COMPANY (1900, 1 Q. B. 504) considered.

In this appeal the Order of Mr. Justice Bucknill refusing to strike out the Company's statement of claim was confirmed on appeal. The Defendants were 8 in number, 4 of them were the promoters, and the other 4 directors of the Company. The statement of claim charged guilt by conspiracy to defraud against all of them and alternatively that the Defendants, the directors, in carrying out the purchases loans and other transactions had acted negligently in breach of their duty as directors. The Defendants took out summons at chambers to have such statement of claim struck out, on the ground that a tort alleged against all the Defendants could not properly be joined with a separate tort alleged against only some of them. This position found favour with the master but Mr. Justice Bucknill reversed the master's order.

THE COURT OF APPEAL held that the present case was not governed by Gower v. Couldridge (1898, 1 Q. B. 348), the allegations in this statement of claim were very different from that in the other, here there was an alleged cause of action for conspiracy against all the Defendants, and then as regards the same cause of action it was alleged that the Defendants who were directors were guilty of breach of duty as directors. In the other case as regards two only out of 3 Defendants three separate causes of action were alleged, while as to the third only two causes of action were alleged.

Mr. S. Smith for the Appellants.

Mr. Cartmell for the Respondents.

C. W. A. Appeal dismissed with costs.

COMMERCIAL COURT.—BELL v. PLUMBLY. Before Mr. JUSTICE MATHEW. 17th May 1900.

Stock broker—Privity of contract.

The Defendant's stock broker was one Charles Hemmerde. The Defendant through him brought first 500 and then an additional 1,000 shares in the stock exchange in "the Colonial Gold Fields Limited." These 1,500 shares were by arrangement with the Defendant "carried over" in the stock exchange. Later on Hemmerde found it impossible to keep carrying over such a large amount in the stock exchange and with arrangement with the Defendant he carried over a portion as before and the remaining, the larger portion, he carried over outside the stock exchange, having come to an understanding with his (Hemmerde's) client a lady, the Plaintiff, Mrs. Bell. This lady was one who used her money in advancing for such purpose. This fact was known to Defendant. The actual transfer of the shares were made in Hemmerde's name with the consent of the Plaintiff, Mrs. Bell, whose affairs were managed by her son. Successive carries over took place in that way, 400 shares only being carried over in the stock exchange. For the settlement in the stock exchange of December 14th last the stock broker informed Defendant that he could not carry over more than 500 and he must take up and pay for the balance of 1,000 shares. Thereupon Defendant supplied "a name" and the account was sent to him showing account closed for 1,000 shares balance due £1256. At that settlement Hemmerde was declared a defaulter on the stock exchange.

The Defendant refusing to pay Mrs. Bell, this action was instituted. The learned Judge said Defendant admitted liability but not in favour of Plaintiff; it was urged on his behalf that two separate contracts had been entered into one between Defendant and Hemmerde the other between the latter and Plaintiff, but that was not really the result of the transactions. It was never intended that the broker should as regards the Defendant occupy the position of principal. The approval of the Plaintiff's son (who was acting for Plaintiff) was shown to each separate act of the broker. There was a clear case of contract between Plaintiff and the Defendant and Plaintiff was therefore entitled to judgment.

Mr. Harrison, Q. C., and Mr. Atkin for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Isaacs, Q. C., and Mr. Nevill for the Defendant.

Judgment for Plaintiff with costs.

C. W. A.

COUNTY COURT.—PHILLIPS v. LONDON BRIGHTON AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY. Before HIS HONOR JUDGE LAMBY SMITH, Q. C. 17th October 1900.

Railway Company—Liability for delay or inconvenience to passenger—Liability for not giving notice of delay—Conditions in the Company's time table.

In this case Mr. Phillips Silver Smith of Bond Street claimed a damage of £5 from the Railway Company for loss of business owing to delay in the arrival of the train at Victoria. The train started from Three Bridges at 11-30 and was due at the Victoria Station at 2-5. It did not arrive at its destination until two hours after due time, owing to a train in front having been derailed; consequently Mr. Phillips who was going to Christie Manson and Wood's auction to buy certain articles, was too late for purchasing them, and he afterwards found that they had been disposed of for a sum under that which she was prepared to give. The amount claimed was not anywhere near the loss he had thus sustained, he complained that it was the duty of the Company to have informed him of the accident which their servants were aware of when the train reached Streatham, that there would be considerable delay at that station, such information would have enabled him to take a conveyance by road to London and to be in time to secure the objects for which he was journeying. He urged that therefore the Company was liable for wilful misconduct.

His Honor came to the conclusion that Plaintiff was bound by the conditions in the Company's time table to which reference was made in the railway ticket given to Plaintiff, and therefore dismissed the action.

Mr. Austen for the Company.

Judgment for Defendant.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE PRESENT CONSTITUTION OF THE BENCHES IS MUCH appreciated by the profession. It would be difficult to improve upon them.

LORD RUSSELL'S GREATNESS IS NOT EXHAUSTED BY calling him a great judge or a greater advocate but, perhaps, to a large extent it is attributable to the breadth of his views. In these days it would be difficult to point to another word which is more often profaned than the word civilization. It is a pleasure therefore to find a different version of it from the late Lord Chief Justice in his address on International Law before the American Bar Association in 1896 from that which the course of recent events is trying to make it out to be.

"What, indeed, is true civilization? By its fruit you shall know it. It is not dominion, wealth, material luxury; nay, not even a great literature, and Education wide-spread—good though these things be. Civilization is not a venger; it must penetrate to the very heart and core of societies of men. Its true signs are thought for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for women, the frank recognition of human brotherhood, irrespective of race, or color, or nation, or religion, the narrowing of the domain of mere force as a governing factor in the world, the love of ordered freedom, abhorrence of what is mean, and cruel, and vile, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice. Civilization in that, its true, its highest sense, must make for peace."

CALUMNIES AGAINST GREAT MEN ARE VERY EASILY circulated, more readily believed and hardly ever removed, because they treat them with contempt and seldom care to contradict malicious reports. Lord Russell was commonly believed to be more addicted to the turf and cards than was good for him and he was said to have lost so heavily on both that very little of his enormous earnings remained. The property he has left amounts in value to about £150,000 and has given the lie to his calumniators.

THIS FULLY SUPPORTS MR. DICEY'S TESTIMONY IN the pages of the Fortnightly Review that the late Lord Chief Justice's chief attraction for sports consisted in relaxation, display of skill and triumph over an opponent rather than in the stake.

"But it always seemed to me, that for him the real attraction of card-playing lay not in the desire to win, but in the relaxation cards afforded him after the constant strain of his daily life."

"He was too highminded a man to derive much pleasure from winning money for money's sake. But he enjoyed the excitement of the game, the satisfaction of putting his skill against that of other players, and winning at the end."

MR. EDWARD DICEY, IN WRITING TO THE Fortnightly Review about Lord Russell, records the following private opinion of the late Lord Chief Justice as to the merits of a jury. "I recollect," says Mr. Dicey, "once remarking to him, after he had become Lord Chief Justice, that if I were on my trial as an innocent man I would sooner be tried by a Judge than by a jury. His answer was to the effect that if I knew as much of the judges as he did I should change my opinion, and that his experience was that juries, as a rule, took a more common sense view of the case than judges." We have in these columns also drawn attention to a similar expression of opinion by the present Lord Chancellor.

CLOGGING THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

HAVE the recent decisions of the Court of Chancery in Biggs v. Hoddinott (1898, 2 Ch. 307: s. c. 2 C. W. N. cccxv) and Santley v. Wilde (1899, 2 Ch. 474) altered or modified in any way the old equitable doctrine that the mortgagee shall not clog the equity of redemption? This was the question that was discussed in Rice v. Noakes (1900, 2 Ch. 445; 69 L. J. Ch. 643) and the Court of Appeal (Lord Alverstone, M. R., Rigby and Collins, L. JJ.) decided that the doctrine of clogging remained unimpaired as ever. No doubt this is true to some extent, but as pointed out in a previous article (4 C. W. N. cclxv), it is clear that the doctrine against clogging may now be said to have lost much of that rigour which attached to it when Jennings v. Ward (2 Vern. 520) and Howard v. Harris (1 Vern 190) were decided. The right to redeem is not a personal right, it is an estate or interest in the property mortgaged. That being so, we may next enquire into the meaning of the word 'clog.' As pointed out by Lindley, M. R., a 'clog' is something which is inconsistent with the idea of 'security' or in other words, a clog is in the nature of a repugnant condition. Ordinarily the mortgagor is entitled to a reconveyance on payment to the mortgagee of the principal and interest. If however, there is a covenant forbidding redemption that covenant would operate in the nature of a 'clog.' And the Court of Equity having its eye constantly on the redeemable nature of a mortgage security brushed aside the cobwebs of restrictive covenants. To this principle of law was grafted by successive decisions of the Court of Chancery beginning with Mainland v. Upjohn (41 Ch. D. 126) the view that a mortgagee was entitled to stipulate for reasonable collateral advantages. In Rice v. Noakes, it appeared that in a mortgage of a leasehold of a public house, the mortgagor covenanted with the mortgagees who were brewers that he and all persons deriving title under him should not during the continuance of the mortgage term, and whether any money should or should not be owing on the mortgage, use or sell in the house any malt liquors except such as should be purchased of the mortgagees. It was contended on behalf of the mortgagees that the above stipulation was not a 'clog' but was in the nature of a collateral bargain and was in fact part of the consideration for the parties entering into the transaction of loan. And in support of this view, reliance was placed upon the case of Santley v. Wilde (1899, 2 Ch. 474) where there was a mortgage of the leasehold of a theatre with a covenant to pay one-third of the profit rental thereof to the mortgagee during the whole of the mortgagor's term although the principal and interest had been paid. Lord Alverstone, M. R., pointed out that if Santley v. Wilde were before him, he would have felt some difficulty in deciding that the covenant in that case was not a 'clog' but the Court of Appeal had decided otherwise and he was bound by that judgment. In the present case, however, the Court of Appeal have now decided that the covenant was a 'clog' and hence unenforceable. It must be confessed, however, that the mystery of the doctrine of clogging the equity of redemption is not satisfactorily cleared up and every one will share in the hope of Lord Alverstone, M. R. (now the Lord Chief Justice of England) that in future we may have the guidance of the House of Lords upon the point.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (with Explanatory Notes and Commentaries). By Dinshah Fardunji Mulla, M.A., LL. B. Bombay: Caxton Printing Works. Price Rs. 6-8.

The present work is intended by the compiler to supply a want felt "by students and by that increasing class of lawyers who are just beginning their practice in procedural law" of a handy book of ready reference. We regret we cannot congratulate the compiler on this book. So far as we have seen of this book makes us doubtful as to its utility to the student and as regards its usefulness to professional men we must say it leaves much to be desired. For instance, the immense mass of the caselaw which has gathered round sec. 13 ought to have been set forth in some detail while care ought to have been taken to incorporate into the notes the effect of the most recent decisions of the different High Courts. The commentary on sec. 11, again, is also very meagre: the student, leaving alone the practising lawyer, is not made acquainted with that exhaustive classification of 'suits of a civil nature,' which ought surely to have found a place in this work. Take again the sections relating to the affidavit and inspection of documents. Here also the notes though they may be considered sufficient and ample for the student, are not such as afford any material assistance to the practising lawyer. Sec. 584 requires a great deal more of elucidation and explanatory notes than are presented by the compiler while the commentary on sec. 622 is hardly sufficient. No doubt the compiler has been somewhat hampered by his desire to keep the book within a narrow compass but this might have been better accomplished by replacing repetition by more useful matter. The index appears to be a carefully executed piece of work. The get up of the work is commendable and its price moderate and on the whole the book shows promise of its being converted with a little more industry, tact and judgment into a very useful work.

A GENERAL DIGEST OF CIVIL CASES: (2 Vols. 1886-1889). By D. G. Khandekar. Poona.

The volumes before us comprise Parts IV & V of a General Digest of Indian law cases compiled by Mr. Khandekar. We have been at some pains in looking through the volumes and while we cannot declare it free from defect in its details still we must say that we greatly appreciate the very complete and exhaustive classification adopted by the compiler. In the body of the digest references to the cases referred to or distinguished are given, various cross-references are given and the usefulness of the book is added to by the inclusion of various sub-heads. The get up of the work is no doubt very indifferent but we can always make allowance for such defects having regard to the general usefulness of a work of this kind.

English Notes.

THE CASE OF Carter v. Nelson & Co. DECIDED IN the Queen's Bench Division since the commencement of the Michaelmas sittings demonstrates how careful one must be to scan the terms of a tempting offer made in an advertisement. The offer was made by the Defendants, Nelson & Co., who advertised that they would pay to every woman who became a widow since Christmas 1897, and who since that date shall have purchased not less than one-half pound of their tea per week for the five consecutive weeks previously to her becoming a widow, 10 shillings per week as long as she remains a widow.

The above offer however was subject to a condition. "The only condition is that at the commencement of the continuous taking of the tea the husband must be certified to us to be in good health."

The Plaintiff, a widow, was induced by an agent of the Defendants to purchase the tea with a view of securing the pension, a certificate of good health of the husband was however not supplied at the commencement of the continuous taking but some time later, and although the County Court Judge of Yarmouth found as a fact proved, that the husband was in good health at the time of the taking of the tea yet he held that the certificate of his health not having been given at that time but later invalidated Plaintiff's claim which was dismissed and that decision was upheld on appeal by the Divisional Court.

COURT OF APPEAL.—HOGARTH AND COMPANY v. WALKER. Before LORDS JUSTICES A. L. SMITH, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER. 25th May 1900.

Marine Insurance policy—Furniture of ship—Grain trade—Dunnage mats not in use.

The question in this case was whether a policy covered certain dunnage mats and separation cloths which were damaged on board the ship "Felbridge" by a peril of the sea. The action was brought by the owners of the "Felbridge" to recover for such loss under a time policy of Marine Insurance. The Defendant was the underwriter. The policy was in the ordinary Lloyds form for 12 months. The words used in that policy included "and other furniture of and in the good ship." The mats and cloths were not in use during the voyage, they were stowed away in the forepeak. The "Felbridge" was on a voyage from America with a cargo of grain. In the American grain trade such mats and cloths are not used. It was, however, the custom for ships engaged in the Black Sea grain trade to use the dunnage mats by placing them underneath the grain and the cloths to separate the different parcels in which the grain was usually shipped by the different shippers.

Mr. Justice Bingham had decided in Plaintiffs' favour.

The Defendants appealed.

The Appeal Court, in dismissing the appeal, said the articles in question were necessary for the trade upon which the ship was entitled to go; consequently they formed part of the furniture. No appreciable difference had been pointed out between such articles and moveable bulk heads which last, it was conceded, would form part of the furniture of the ship. The policy covered as wide a power of trading as possible and in the Black Sea trade the mats and cloths were requisite.

Mr. Rufus Isaacs, Q. C., and Mr. Lush for the Plaintiffs were not called on.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Hamilton for the Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—PETTIFER v. PETTIFER. Before MR. JUSTICE BYRNE. 7th August 1900.

Will—Husband and wife—Condition in terrorem, effect of.

Mr. Pettifer by his Will made in 1897 bequeathed to his wife Ruth all his real and personal property whatsoever and wheresoever situate, the wife was to have complete and sole control thereof during her lifetime "on condition that Ruth do not marry again after my decease." She was appointed the executrix but there was no gift over in case of the marriage.

The learned Judge held that the rule of law applicable to personality governed the case because the realty was mixed up with it. The realty and personality were massed together in one devise to the same person. And therefore the condition was void as to both classes as being one in terrorem merely.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—IN THE MATTER OF THE AUTHORIZED VERSION OF THE RED LETTER NEW TESTAMENT. Before MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 24th October 1900.

Copyright Act, 1842, sec. 14—Expunging entry in registry of Stationers Company—Proprietor residing outside jurisdiction—Costs as mere brutum fulmen.

This matter came upon motion under the above Act after service of notice by registered letter sent to America on one Klopsch. The motion was on behalf of the Queen's printers, Eyre & Spottiswoode, who have by Royal letters patent the exclusive right to print and publish the New Testament. The object of the application was to have the name of the said Klopsch as proprietor of the copyright of the above publication expunged from the registry of the Stationers Company.

The Defendant did not put in an appearance.

The application was granted but the learned Judge refused to order costs against the Defendant because such order could not be enforced and consequently would be a mere brutum fulmen.

Mr. W. Horne in support of the application.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—WALKER v. BARKER. Before JUSTICES RIDLEY and BIGHAM. 17th May 1900.

Authority of shop assistant—Cheque paid by customer drawn in name of assistant, if payment to employer.

The Plaintiff was a jeweller in Regent Street. He had an assistant, named Miles, who served in his shop and received money across the counter for him. The Defendant was a customer of Plaintiff's and had on various occasions made purchases at the shop paying for same in cash to Miles the shop assistant across the counter. In December of 1897 the Defendant bought an article of jewellery for £34. Two months after this purchase the Defendant called at the shop with his cheque-book to pay for the article. Miles requested that the cheque should be drawn in his own favour or order. This was done with the result that Miles cashed the cheque and embezzled the proceeds.

The Westminster County Court Judge held that when the cheque was cashed it amounted to payment and decided in favour of the Defendant for the £34. The Plaintiff appealed.

The Division Court stated that it was admitted on behalf of Plaintiff that Miles had authority to accept payment in cash as also by cheque drawn in the name of the Plaintiff his employer. The inference followed that Miles had also authority to receive a cheque drawn in his own name provided that cheque was honored. Miles did receive the £34 for the cheque from the Defendant's Banker who was Defendant's Agent; that was the same as receiving it from Defendant and was equivalent to payment. The case was really covered by Bridges v. Garrett (L. R. 5 C. P. 451). The decision in Pearson v. Scott (9 Ch. D. 198) was not in conflict with it.

Mr. H. Dobb appeared in support of the Appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

PROBATE COURT.—SHAW v. SHAW. Before Mr. JUSTICE BARNES. 6th August 1900.

Leave to dispense with a co-respondent.

The husband who sought a divorce from his wife was married to her in November 1883. Some twelve years afterwards they separated under a deed of separation. In 1890 the lady gave birth to a child, and her story then told, that a commercial traveller was the father, was not true. Later on she informed the same person, a lady she had been lodging with, that another man a Mr. Speechley was its father. The last-named denied this, stating that his only acquaintance with her was through acting professionally for her as the managing clerk of a solicitor's firm. He was prepared to deny on oath that he had misconducted himself. It was disclosed in evidence that she had kept a disorderly house and Mr. Speechley had been seen there on business on two occasions.

The husband's case was that he had made every enquiry but wholly failed to obtain any justification for naming Mr. Speechley as a co-respondent and therefore applied that under such circumstances he should have leave to proceed with his divorce proceedings without a co-respondent.

The learned Judge granted the application suggesting the service of formal notice on Mr. Speechley.

Mr. Burnard for the Petitioner.

Application granted.

[APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF NATAL.]

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

LORD LINDLEY.

SIR HENRY DE VILLIERS.

SIR FORD NORTH.

GALLIERS and others,
v.

RYCROFT and others.

Construction of Will, Roman Dutch Law—Fidei-commissary and ordinary substitution—"Children"—Papinian's views—Omission of supposed natural duty.

The testator William Galliers, senior, an Englishman, had married in England before he settled down in Natal where the Will was made which was to be construed by their Lordships.

The Will contained the following disposition: "I give and bequeath all and singular my real and personal estate . . . unto my dear wife Matilda Galliers (born Sabin) for the use and benefit of herself and my children during her lifetime, and after her decease I direct that same may be equally divided among my children or such of them as may be then alive." The testator died in 1864 leaving him surviving his wife, a son and three daughters. In 1875 the son William Galliers, junior, died leaving a Will, whereby he bequeathed all his property to his wife Fanny Galliers. Besides that wife one son William Elton Galliers survived him. The senior Galliers' wife died in 1897, her three daughters and the said grandson Elton survived her. The executors of the senior Galliers awarded the whole of the estate to the three daughters. Thereupon claim was made by the widow of the junior Galliers and Elton to be entitled to share in the distribution of old Galliers' estate.

In the Supreme Court of Natal the majority of the Court (the Chief Justice contra) directed the executor to frame and file an amended account, so as to include Elton as taking his father's share in the capital as also income of the estate of the senior Galliers from the date of the death of the widow of senior Galliers. The widow Fanny of the junior Galliers supported her son, but in the alternative claimed as entitled herself as sole heiress under her husband's Will. The latter claim was rejected in Natal and concurred in by their Lordships.

The daughters now appealed. Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT states that the ground on which the said Court had supported the claim of the grandson was that the law of Natal, differing from the English law but in conformity with the Roman law, applied to cases of the present kind a rule of construction that where a parent has appointed children (or remoter descendants) as heirs and directed that upon their death their share should go over either to a stranger or to another child, then, the going over or substitution is subject to the tacit condition implied by law that the deceased child left no issue.

The judgment proceeds to state that that statement of the rule if confined to the case of fideicommissary substitutions, was a fair deduction from the Roman Dutch authorities on the subject. It quotes the passage from Papinian its origin and says it is obvious that in that brief opinion Papinian was not referring to the case of a direct or ordinary substitution—that is to say the substitution of the son on failure of the grandson to take under the Will—but to a case of fideicommissary substitution, in other words the substitution of the son for the grandson by virtue of a trust imposed on the latter to restore the inheritance on the happening of a certain event after he entered on it. The term fideicommissum used by Papinian would not be applicable to a direct substitution nor would the grandson be requested or able to restore an inheritance which he had never entered upon. The law relating to fideicommissum had been fully developed in his time, and it was very common practice for Roman testators in creating such trusts to make them conditional upon the fiduciary heir dying without children. Papinian held in effect that that condition si sine liberis decesserit should be read into every Will whereby the burden of fideicommissum was imposed on a grandchild of the testator. The authority of Papinian was very high, his response was accepted as law and confirmed by two imperial rescripts quoted in the Code. The terms of these rescripts showed that the condition si sine liberis was intended to be read only into Wills by which fideicommissa were created. None of the Dutch commentators on the Digest or the Code extend the rule any further.

The judgment proceeds to consider the comments which were noticed in the Court below, it also considers the case of Mylne (1 Natal Law Reports, p. 88) which it finds was no authority for the proposition that the condition si sine liberis could legally be read into a Will which merely substituted one heir or legatee for another in the event of the substituted heir or legatee not entering on the inheritance or legacy. The judgment proceeds:—

“By the Will now in question the testator, after giving a life interest in his estate to his wife for the benefit of herself and his children, directed that after her decease the estate should be equally divided among his children or such of them as might then be alive. The effect of that direction was virtually to institute the children as heirs on the death of their mother and to substitute the survivors for such of the children as might die before their mother. It was a case, therefore, of direct and not fideicommissary substitution. The children were not requested to part with their inheritance after they had once entered on it, and consequently those who survived their mother took their inheritance free from any burden. Those who died before their mother entered upon no inheritance and possessed nothing to restore.”

The judgment next refers to the case of Sturges v. Pearson (4 Mad. 411) and says that even if the doctrine of vesting and divesting had ever been adopted into the Roman or Dutch Law such vesting and divesting would be a very different matter from the additio and restitutio by an heir or legatee under a fideicommissary substitution. The present Will was free from ambiguity and contained no indication of the testator's desire to benefit his grandchildren.

Next the judgment takes into consideration the argument for Respondent that where a testator conferred benefits on “children” by his Will he must be presumed to have intended to include “all other descendants” but even the reasoning of Toet showed that the word “kinderen,” the Dutch for “liberi” or “children” must prima facie be taken to refer to descendants of the first degree unless the Will showed that descendants of a remoter degree was intended. The point which remained undecided in Martin v. Lee (14 Moore P. C. C. 142) need not be decided here for as in that case so in this seeing that the true intention of the testator was to restrict the gift to his children.

In the result their Lordships agreed with the Chief Justice and reversed the decision of the majority of the Judges. They allowed the appeal, disallowed the objections regarding the distribution, and ordered that the costs of all parties below be paid out of the estate of the senior Galliers as also the costs of this appeal.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM NEW SOUTH WALES.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	} PENNY ( in forma pauperis ) v. THE RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS OF NEW SOUTH WALES and others. • •
LORD MACNAGHTEN.
LORD LINDLEY.
SIR R. COUCH.
SIR H. STRONG.
1900.
21, July.

Construction of Will—Vested interests—Gifts over.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of New South Wales affirming that of Mr. Justice Walker. Both Courts had rejected the claim of the Appellants to two-fifths of two sums of money which the local Railway Commissioner had paid into Court as proceeds of certain lands taken by the Railway Commissioner; those amounts were paid into Court after satisfying the claim of the widow of James Williams whose property the lands taken were.

James Williams of Queanbeyan, New South Wales, died in December 1857. His Will which was to be construed in this appeal was dated in the March previous. His wife died in 1898. He left 4 step-sons, William Penny, Francis Penny, Thomas Penny, and Henry Penny, also a son James Williams. Of these William and Henry Penny predeceased his wife. The Appellant James Penny was heir to both the deceased Pennys and claimed as devisee the property which they would have taken had they survived their mother. The claim was opposed by the surviving step-sons, and the son who set forth their own claim to the whole. Since the testator's death two portions of his property were taken by the Railway Commissioner, and the remaining proceeds £382 and £209 were paid into the Supreme Court as aforesaid.

The following statement of the Will contains the material clauses:—The wife and one Morton were appointed executors and trustees of the Will, and it "devised and bequeathed all his real estate to his wife during her life and after her decease upon trust that the said executors and trustees should stand possessed of the same in trust" for the said four step-sons the sons of his wife by a former marriage and his own said son, "or of such of them as should be living at the time of the decease of the said wife and who should attain the age of 21 years, and in case they" (naming the 4 step-sons and the said son) "should all be living at the decease of the said wife and who should attain the age of 21 years" then he gave to William Penny a certain parcel of land containing 320 acres "to the use of the said William Penny and his assigns for life" and similarly he gave and bequeathed to each of his step-sons and to his own son specific plots on the same terms, and he declared that in the case of the death of any of the before mentioned persons then he "gave and devised the share to which he would have been entitled to the use of the person or persons who should then answer to the description of their general to such persons so dying as aforesaid, his her or their heirs or assigns forever, if more than one as tenants in common and upon, to, or for no other trust intent or purpose whatsoever.

The specific devises to the step-sons and son never took effect, the word "share" was only to be found in the last clause of the Will above set out. In describing the parcels specifically devised each portion was referred to as the "land."

The JUDGMENT proceeds and concludes as follows:— "The series of specific devises did in effect give each devisee a defined share of the testator's real estate and their Lordships saw no justification in so construing the last clause as to make it either inapplicable to the shares so specifically devised or applicable to them alone. The last clause appeared to have been inserted to provide for the event of any devisee dying in his mother's lifetime, or, if he survived her, for the event of his dying under 21. The Court of Appeal and Mr. Justice Walker also appeared to have treated the last clause as confined to the specific devises and as having no application to the first clause, but that view was only arrived at by giving no effect to the important words in the last clause, "the share to which he would have been entitled." Their Lordships could not regard any construction satisfactory which failed to give effect to these words. The key to the proper construction of this Will was, in their Lordships' opinion, to be found by attending to the first clause and reading the last clause as applying as well to it as to the series of specific devises interposed between those two clauses. The form in which the first devise to the step-sons and son was expressed was a very common form and its effect was well established. It was not equivalent to a simple devise to such of the devisees as shall survive the widow and attain 21. The effect of the clause was to give to all the devisees vested interests in fee subject to be divested as regards each devisee, in the event of his death in the lifetime of the testator's widow, in favour of those devisees (if any) who survived her and attain 21. If there were none such the divesting clause failed, the original vested gifts remained, and all the devisees took absolutely. That was settled by Sturges v. Pearson (4 Mad. 411) as regarded bequests of personal estate, and in that respect there was no difference between personal estate and real estate (See 1 Jarman Wills, 827, Ed. 4). The last clause in the Will now in question modified the first by saying in effect that if any devisee, i.e., the share to which he would have been entitled if he had survived her and attained 21—should go not to the survivors but to his heir as a purchase in fee. It was true that the last clause said only in the case of his death and did not say at what time. Death in the testator's lifetime might be meant; but it could hardly have been exclusively meant. Death before attaining a vested interest was covered by the words and could not be rejected as not intended by the testator. The event of death being inevitable, a gift to one person in the event of the death of another was only treated as a gift in remainder where the first taker took for life only. A gift over of property given to a person absolutely in the event of his death was always construed as a gift over in the event of his death before the period of distribution or vesting, unless some other period was indicated by the context (See the cases collected in Hawkins on Wills, 254, et seq.). That being, in their Lordships' opinion, the true construction of the Will it followed that the gifts over on the deaths of the two step-sons who died in the wife's lifetime took effect, and that the Appellant as their heir was entitled as devisee to two-fifths of the money in Court; and that the whole did not belong to the two step-sons and the son who survived the wife as decided by the Supreme Court. Their Lordships would humbly advise Her Majesty to allow the appeal and to reverse the orders appealed from and to remit the petition to the Supreme Court with a declaration that, according to the true construction of the testator's Will and the events which have happened, the Appellant James Penny was entitled to two-fifths of the sums of £382 2s. and £209 17s. 2d. in the petition mentioned and to two-fifths of any interest or dividends which might have accrued in respect of those sums since the payment thereof into the Supreme Court, and to direct that the costs of the original petition be borne as ordered by the order of September 8th, 1898, and the costs of the appeal to the Supreme Court be borne by the Respondents other than the Railway Commissioner. The costs of the Appellant of the appeal to this board would also be borne by the same Respondents and would be taxed on pauper scale. But the Railway Commissioner must bear his own costs."

Mr. Alfred Adams for the Appellant.

Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Cowell for the Respondents.
Appeal allowed with costs.

Mr. M. L. Dutt for the 1st Defendant.

At the close of the examination-in-chief of the Plaintiff's attorney, who was the first witness called Mr. Jackson referring to sec. 135 of the Evidence Act and asked that the cross-examination of the witness be deferred, until after the examination-in-chief of the Plaintiff by his counsel, submitting that the word "examined" includes cross-examination, referring to sec. 138.

THE COURT.—How does the case come within the section?

Mr. Jackson.—The section says that the order of examination in the absence of any law relating to Civil Procedure shall be regulated by the discretion of the Court. The Plaintiff should have been first called and given his account of the transaction.

STANLEY, J.—The Court is very slow to interfere with the discretion of counsel as to the order in which witnesses should be examined. I think that in the present case the ordinary practice should regulate the order of examination, and that the witness should be cross-examined at the conclusion of the examination-in-chief.

The witness was then cross-examined.

1900. } AUSTRALIA AND CHINA
6, August. }
HURISH CHUNDER NEGOT and others.

Receiver—Practice—Liberty to sue where property in possession of Receiver.

This was a suit upon promissory notes and an equitable mortgage made and effected by the Defendants as Executors of one Kristo Kissors Neogy, deceased, shortly after the death of the latter and prior to grant of Probate. The equitable mortgage was effected in respect of properties which the testator purported to make debutter by his Will. Subsequent to grant of Probate a son of the deceased instituted a suit (138 of 1900) against the Defendants in this suit and others praying for the construction of the Will, for a declaration that the alleged dedication was void, for administration and for the appointment of a Receiver, which suit was pending at the date of the institution of the present suit. An order had been made by consent in suit 138 of 1900 appointing a Receiver of, amongst other property, the premises subject to the equitable mortgage in favour of the Plaintiffs in the present suit. The sums advanced by the Plaintiff Bank not having been paid, an application was made for leave to file a plaint against the executors and for special leave if necessary to sue, having regard to the fact that the property the subject-matter of the intended suit, was in the hands of the Receiver—though the latter was not a party Defendant to the suit. The application was made ex parte at the time of presenting the plaint, and not in the suit in which the Receiver had been appointed or, on notice to the parties.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Applicants.

The Receiver has not been made a party. Though the mortgaged premises are in his possession he was no party to, and was not appointed until after, the transactions in suit: Smith v. Lord Effingham (7 Beav. 374 referring to Lewis v. Lord Zouche (2 Sim. 388). Kerr Receivers, 4th Ed. 166: and will unlike a third party be bound by the Court's order. It may, however, be urged that though the suit is not brought directly against the Receiver, leave is necessary as the suit is against parties over whose property a Receiver has been appointed, such Receiver being in present possession of the mortgaged premises. Kerr Receivers, 172. It is submitted that leave is unnecessary in the present case, since the Receiver's possession will not be affected until a decree for sale is made and the purchaser takes possession which may never occur for the executors may discharge the debt out of other assets in their hands. If however there be a decree for sale, an application may be subsequently made for leave to take possession. Jogendra Nath Gossami v. Debendra Nath Gossami (3 C. W. N. 90).

SALE, J.—I think that that is so but as any order made by me declaring that leave to sue was not necessary would not bind the parties who are not present it will be safer for the Plaintiffs that they should have leave.

Leave to sue was then applied for and granted and the plaint presented and accepted.

Messrs. Morgan & Co., Attorneys for the Plaintiffs.

15 & 16, May. } RAI NUNDO LALL BOSE and others.

Evidence Act, sec. 159—Refreshing memory—Evidence Act, sec 157—Corroboration of witness.

This was a suit for the construction of the Will of Mohendra Nath Bose and for administration of his estate. The facts of the case except so far as they appear in this report are immaterial.

Messrs. W. C. Bonnerjee, J. G. Woodroffe and S. K. Bonnerjee for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Pugh, Jackson, Allen, A. Chaudhuri and Chakravarti for the various Defendants.

Arbitration proceedings had been held some years prior to suit and at their close a draft minute of the proceedings was prepared by the arbitrators and then fair copied by their clerk. A witness who was present at the arbitration who had compared the draft and fair copy minutes made by the clerk and had found the latter to be correct was allowed under sec. 159 of the Evidence Act to refresh his memory as to what occurred at the arbitration by reference to the fair copy minutes made by the arbitrator's clerk.

A witness was asked with a view to corroborating another person intended to be called as a witness whether or not the latter person had made any statement to him with respect to one of the matters in suit. It was held that as sec. 157 of the Evidence Act refers to the corroboration of the testimony of a "witness," ordinarily before corroborative evidence is admissible the evidence sought to be corroborated must have been given. The Court has no doubt a discretion to allow evidence to be given under this section out of the regular order upon an undertaking by counsel to call the witness sought to be corroborated, though such a course will be found in most cases to be inconvenient. If necessary a witness will be allowed to be recalled to give evidence under this section after the person sought to be corroborated has given his evidence.

Messrs. Gonesh Chunder Chunder & Co., and Babu Hirendra Nath Dutt, Attorneys for the Defendants.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE HON'BLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE WILL PRESIDE AT the Court of Criminal Sessions which will commence its sittings from to-day. The hearing of the Original Side appeals will stand over till the Criminal Sessions come to a close. Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Hill, during this period, will hear appeals of the Rajshahye Group.

IT WILL BE NOTICED FROM THE BOARD OF THE JUDICIAL Committee which we publish to-day that the number of appeals is one of the lowest on record. The appeals from the Colonies have gone down considerably. There was only one appeal from Bengal and this and two others have been taken out of the list.

WE NOTICE WITH PLEASURE THAT THERE IS ONLY ONE appeal in which the Committee had reserved judg-ment for about six months and that in the majority of cases their Lordships' considered judgments were delivered as speedily as is consistent with their importance. In this respect the Judicial Committee is much ahead of the House of Lords.

IT IS INTERESTING TO NOTE THAT THE JUDICIAL Com- mittee notwithstanding its singular services to the British Empire is hardly any burden on the State as it is said that the fees defray all salaries, &c., three years out of every four.

• THE APPOINTMENT OF THE FOUR CHIEF JUSTICES IN Australia to be the Lieutenant-Governors of their respective Provinces under the new Commonwealth is no small tribute to the prestige of the legal profession. Sir Samuel Way, Chief Justice of South Australia, is also one of the Colonial Members of the Judicial Committee and sat on the Board in 1897 (2 C. W. N. 1). The judicial training of the Chief Justices is sure to make them fill their new offices with dignity and ability.

WE UNDERSTAND THAT THE MICHAELMAS SITTINGS of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council com- menced on the 7th November, when a Board compris- ing seven Judges presided over by the Lord Chancellor heard the arguments in the case of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs against Charlesworth Pilling & Co., and Messrs. Thomas D. Charlesworth & Co. This was an appeal and cross-appeal from a judgment of Her Britannic Majesty's Court for Zanzibar dated 28th November 1898, varying decrees of the Consular Court for Mombasa in the East Africa protectorate. The dispute arose owing to lands or "Shambas" belonging to Respondents having been compulsorily acquired by the Secretary of State for the building of the State railway from Mombasa to Uganda. Questions arose whether the case is governed by the maxim of English law, quid quid plantatur solo solo cedit as contended for by the Respondents; or governed by the lex loci rei sitæ which was the sharia or Mahomedan law as alleged on behalf of the Secretary of State.

The Court of Appeal had varied the decrees of the Consular Court by holding that the first named Respondents were entitled in addition to the value of the land taken, to the value of the railway buildings erected on one of the large "Shambas," viz., Rs. 60, 140, and it awarded in each case an increased sum for the lands. The Secretary of State objected to pay for the railway buildings and to the increased compensation. The Respondents claimed the sta- tutory 15 per cent. under the Land Acquisition Act 1894, over and above what was conceded to them, and they also objected to the value assessed on the land and buildings.

We understand that the Lord Chancellor at the close of the argument for the Respondents addressing the Solicitor-General (who was present and who argued the case with the Attorney General for the Secretary of State) said that their Lordships did not think it necessary to call for a reply; judgment will be delivered on a future occasion. We hope in our next issue to give a short history of the case and of the authorities on the Mahomedan law referred to during the arguments.

JUDICIAL AND EXECUTIVE

FUNCTIONS AND THEIR SEPARATION.

In the last number of Law Magazine and Review, Mr. Martin Wood, formerly Editor of the Times of India, contributes an article on the Judicial System of India. It follows in the train of the discussion that arose out of Sir John Scott's lecture before the Indian section of the Society of Arts and notices the opinion of some retired Anglo-Indian officials on the question of the separation of the Judicial and Executive functions. This question is now engaging the attention of the Government of India upon a reference from the Secretary of State. It is, therefore, interesting and it may also be useful to review some of the opinions noticed by the writer.

A member of the legal profession in India, who was present there as a casual visitor, took part in the debate and naturally gave expression to the prevailing sentiment in India that the administration of justice is the most popular feature of the British administration in this country. His observations are thus noticed by the writer:—

The only native Indian lawyer who took part in the debate was Mr. Taleyarkhan, to whose concise and pertinent remarks on the occasion a certain melancholy interest attaches, in that three weeks later he perished in the Great Western Railway collision at Slough. Mr. Taleyarkhan, as a legal practitioner of long experience in the use of the Indian codes, expressed his feeling of surprise that the administration of law proceeds so smoothly here without those aids and safeguards, to the great ability and learning of the Judges and the Bar, and to the orderly habits of the people." He considered that especially as regards criminal law, "codes in India are an absolute necessity, because more than half the Magistrates are not trained lawyers." He endorsed Sir John Scott's opinion that the people of India "regard the High Court with almost superstitious veneration,"—partly, as he indicated, because under the code, those tribunals have power "to revise every order and sentence passed by any Magistrate." Sir John Scott had quoted the testimony of the late Mono Mohun Ghose (an eminent practitioner on the Bengal side) in his well-considered statement in 1895 that "justice was never better administered, and life and property were never more secured in the history of India than they are at the present moment. Even the masses and the people in Bengal have learnt to appreciate the blessings of a pure administration of justice." Mr. Taleyarkhan fully endorsed this, and, speaking himself from his knowledge of western India, said, "there never was a time . . . when justice was so well administered in India. They are dissatisfied with other matters, with (some) executive proceedings; but so far as the Judiciary are concerned they are absolutely satisfied . . . that this is one of the greatest claims of England to the gratitude of India."

Of the other opinions referred to, those of Sir C. Cecil Stevens, who officiated for a short time as the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and of the Hon. Herbert Birdwood, ex-judge of the Bombay High Court, are deserving of notice. Sir Cecil has always been a man of moderate views. Still it is but natural that he should retain some bias for the system under which he had worked for thirty-six years.

His views have thus been shortly put by the writer:—

"He was not willing to admit that the separation of the two functions on that wide, remote, and secluded region can be accepted even as 'a counsel of perfection.' His more definite objection to the change is, that the supervising powers of 'the High Court provide an effective remedy' for occasional indiscretions, or even scandals that arise under the present system of Collector-Magistrates." And Mr. Martin Wood goes on to observe "our readers are aware, these powerful local magnates sometimes use their personal influence in course of trials, and occasionally let Sessions Judges know what they think as to the line that decisions should take."

As regards the views of Hon. Mr. Birdwood and those of Sir William Lee-Warner the writer adds:—

Here it may be well to recall that the objections to the proposed change as stated by the Hon. Mr. Birdwood, though expressed with more of the lawyer's precision, are very similar to those maintained by the Bengal Civilian. But it must be noted that on the Bombay side the judicial and revenue (executive) branches of the service have long been separate to a large extent. Hence the Bombay men are apt to regard too lightly the need for this long-desired reform in Indian administration. Thus Sir William Lee-Warner (formerly a Bombay Civilian, now occupying a high position at the India Office), after acknowledging that "the broad principle of a thorough separation of judicial from executive action is sound," and stating that "the victory of the separatists has long been won," asserts that "only one very small residuum of a great principle is at stake." He proceeded to magnify the supposed cost of the change, and make the most of "the loss of prestige" objection. Sir William who by the way had no judicial experience, ignores the mischief frequently arising in other provinces of India from the incongruous union of these two functions in one officer, or the friction and obstruction caused in the administration of justice by interference with the provincial Judiciary.

It is hardly surprising that any one whose mind is free from official bias and who at all desires to take a common sense view of the matter should come to such conclusions.

The "loss of prestige" argument is well met by the testimony of all who know the people of this country that British prestige has had its origin and growth amongst them through the courts of law and can only be maintained by the impartial administration of justice.

As regards the argument on the ground of expense, we have little to add as to its hollowness. We attempted to show in a previous article (4 C. W. N. clxxii) how by a simple notification in the Gazette and some necessary amendments of the Codes the change may be brought about. If there be a more rational division of work between the executive (police and revenue) officers and the magistrates entrusted with judicial duties and if the local Government would only agree to transfer the administrative control over the latter to the High Court, to at least the same extent as exists with regard to the civil judiciary, the whole problem may be solved in a manner which will greatly economise labour and necessarily wages.

English Notes.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—REGINA v. WARD. Before the RECORDER. 31st October 1900.

Prosecution for obtaining money by false pretences—“The purse trick.”

George Ward was charged for obtaining the sums of one shilling and two shillings by false pretences from one John Bannon. The prosecutor Bannon met the prisoner in a London thoroughfare. The prisoner was offering to a crowd round him to sell for 1 shilling a purse containing 3 shillings in it. The coins used to be dropped into the purse in the presence of the spectators. Prosecutor bought two purses on being asked by prisoner to do so. One of them for one shilling and the other for two shillings. The first was said to contain three shillings, the second four shillings instead of which they contained four half pennies.

The Recorder was of opinion that there was no case of false pretence; he could not think that the prosecutor could possibly believe, as he said he did, that the man was selling to him 3 shillings for one shilling. The jury was of the same opinion. The Recorder intimated that the prosecution of the prisoner should have been as a rogue and a vagabond.

The jury found him not guilty of the charge in the indictment and he was discharged.

Mr. Mackay and Mr. Perrott for the Prosecution.

Mr. Frith defended Ward.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—PROSECUTION OF ADA JANE STODDART BY THE ANTI GAMBLING LEAGUE. Before MR. JUSTICE CHANNELL. 30th October 1900.

CAMINADA v. HULTON (60 L. J. M. C. 116), STODDART v. SAGAR (1895, 2 Q. B. D. 474), HURT v. HAY (37 Scottish Law Reporter) stating a case.

The matter was brought before this Court at the desire of the Defendant so as to have the legality of the coupon system she carried determined by the Court for the consideration of crown cases reserved. She was the proprietor of Sporting Luck, a sporting journal started in 1890 and carried on in 10 Red Lion Court. In that paper was published 49 coupons with names of three horse races to be run that week and the conditions stated were that any person who bought the paper for one penny was at liberty to fill up the first coupon with the name of the selected winner free of charge and he could do so with the rest of the coupons, but for more than one the competitor would have to pay one penny each for the number filled up. Another system attacked by the prosecution was called the “skill coupon combination system.” The business had developed into a very large one. In 1899, £47,800 were said to have been paid away in prizes, the monies received by postal orders, stamps, &c., forwarded by competitors were sorted by 30 or more employees employed for that portion of the work alone, and two rooms set apart for it. The Defendant’s husband assisted her in the production of the said newspaper and to carry on her coupon advertising enterprise.

The indictment was for that she did unlawfully keep and use the said premises for the purpose of receiving money or valuable securities for contingencies relating to horse racing.

The second part of the Act (sec. 1) provided that no place, &c., shall be kept or used “for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of such owner, occupier, keeper, or person as aforesaid as or for the consideration for any assurance, undertaking, promise, or agreement, express or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency of or relating to any horse race, &c.”

The learned Judge expressed a difficulty in understanding the case of Stoddart v. Sagar to which necessitated his stating a case for the consideration of the Court for Crown cases reserved.

Mr. Ivory and Mr. Mackay for the Prosecution.

The Defendant who pleaded not guilty was defended by Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., Mr. Gill, Q. C., Mr. Grain and Mr. Kershaw.

COURT OF APPEAL.—DORMER (otherwise Ward) WILLIAMS v. WARD. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN. 5th November 1900.

Variation of marriage settlement—Nullity of marriage—Impotence.

For the facts of this case, see 4 C. W. N., cxcix. The Court of Appeal agreed with Mr. Justice Barnes from whose decision this appeal was preferred in holding that the Court had power under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, sec. 5 (22 and 23 Vict., c. 61) as amended by the Matrimonial Act 1878, sec. 3 (41 and 42 Vict., c. 19) to vary the marriage settlement. And upon a consideration of the provisions thereof the Court of Appeal differing from Mr. Justice Barnes held that there was the settled sum of £200 which could be applied for the benefit of the Petitioner. The judgment directs that the matter be sent back to Mr. Justice Barnes with an intimation that "we think that an order should be made for the application for the benefit of the Appellant of so much of the £200 and the rents and profits as to Mr. Justice Barnes may seem right."

COURT OF APPEAL—PRITCHARD v. DOUGHTON LOYCK AND COMPANY. Before LORDS JUSTICES A. L. SMITH, WILLIAMS AND ROMER. 11th May 1900.

Commission agents—Money had and received—Gambling transaction—Placing bets out.

The Defendants were turf commission agents having an office in Pall Mall where they carried on a betting commission business. Among the circulars they sent round advertising themselves as such, one was sent to Plaintiff. Plaintiff wired to Defendants to put on £20 on a certain horse named Sointilant for the Cesarewitch at 6 to 1. That horse won that race and Plaintiff not receiving payment brought this action to recover £120 which he alleged had been received by Defendants as his agents. The defence was that the Defendants' firm had neither made the bet nor received the money. The jury found a verdict for Plaintiff for the full amount and judgment was entered in accordance with such finding by Mr. Justice Darling. Defendants now appealed for judgment or a new trial.

THE APPEAL COURT held that such an action was not maintainable, as it was one for not fulfilling the order given by Plaintiff to Defendants for making a bet in accordance with his directions that is for not entering into a gambling transaction, which the Defendants could resist as an unlawful transaction.

It was for Plaintiff to prove two things, that Defendants had made the bet and that they had received payment from the person with whom the bet had been made; there being no evidence to sustain either of those propositions, the action for money had and received failed entirely. It was always possible for persons with whom such betting transactions were made, instead of placing the bets out in accordance with the desire of the person authorizing such commission agents to do so, for the latter to make the bet with himself and if he did so there was no security for the betting person, the commission agent was in a secure position.

It was ordered that judgment should be entered for Defendants.

COURT OF APPEAL—THE QUEEN v. SHEEL AND OTHERS. Before LORDS JUSTICES SMITH, WILLIAMS AND ROMER. 25th April 1900.

Appeal by civil proceeding to reopen matter criminal—London Building Act, secs. 74 & 150—Public house—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, sec. 33.

CARRITT v. GODSON (1899, 2 Q. B. 193) followed.

The present proceedings were started under sec. 150 of the above Act by the London County Council with reference to a public house, that building was intended to be carried on as fully licensed, the publican occupying part thereof as his private residence. Sec. 74 enacts that when a building is intended to be used part for trade and part for dwelling-house fire resisting materials should be used for the walls and flooring separating the two portions. The proceedings against the Defendants were taken before a Magistrate. The Magistrate following the decision of the Divisional Court in Carritt v. Godson decided against the London County Council and refused to state a case. That case had decided that a public house was not within sec. 74. That case having been decided under a criminal section of the above Act, the decision of the Divisional Court was final. Therefore the London County Council conceding that that case was on all fours with the present one commenced these proceedings under another section, their object being to challenge the said decision in Carritt v. Godson.

The Magistrate's order in this case was supported by another Divisional Court, they followed Carritt v. Godson and considered it was rightly decided.

THE COURT OF APPEAL considered the appeal to them frivolous. The Magistrate very properly followed the ruling in Carritt v. Godson from which case the present one could not be distinguished. The Magistrate was moreover perfectly right in refusing to state a case when requested by the London County Council to do so under sec. 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879, on the ground that his decision following as he did a ruling by which he was bound was not erroneous. The decision of the Magistrate was not wrong in law as the law stood and the Divisional Court was right in so deciding. The legislature had said that the decision in Carritt v. Godson was not appealable, nevertheless the County Council was desirous of having it set aside and go on appeal to the House of Lords and that was their object in this proceeding. If there was any Civil proceeding whereby they could obtain that object the Court was not aware of it. The learned Judges refused to establish a practice which appeared to be novel.

COURT OF APPEAL—THE QUEEN v. THE CHIEF REGISTRAR OF FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. Before LORDS JUSTICES SMITH, WILLIAMS and ROMER. 24th April 1900.

Friendly Societies Act, 1896—Powers of Chief Registrar—Enforcement of award.

This matter arose out of proceedings taken before the Chief Registrar of friendly societies under sec. 80 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, for the dissolution of a society of which one Evans was the managing director. Evans had applied before the Divisional Court for a writ of prohibition to restrain the Chief Registrar from adjudicating upon claims which Evans had against the society and the society had cross-claims against him. That application was rejected. Evans then obtained a rule nisi from the Court of Appeal. Now on the arguments of that rule the Appeal Court held, that under that section the Registrar was acting within his powers in making an award for dissolution and he was also empowered to investigate the affairs of the society and upon such investigation if he arrived at the conclusion that the funds of the society were insufficient to discharge the existing claims, sub-sec. 3 empowered him to pass an award that the society be dissolved and by sub-sec. 5 such award was final and conclusive against all members of the society and also against persons having claims on the funds of the society, and the award could be enforced as a decision on a dispute under the Act. No appeal was allowed. The Registrar was consequently acting within his jurisdiction. The Rule was discharged.

30, July.

Contract—Agreement to "favourably consider" certain proposals, effect of.

An agreement was entered into by the above Gas Company with the Plaintiff-Respondent Vasey to supply to them certain ammoniacal liquor manufactured at their gas works. That agreement was dated the 15th December 1886. The Respondent agreed to pay for same under certain terms and conditions.

Five days after the execution of the above agreement the following letter was written by the Chairman of the Gas Company to Respondent the interpretation whereof was the main matter for consideration by their Lordships:—"Referring to the contract made with you on the 15th instant for the sale of ammoniacal liquor, I may say that if we are satisfied with you as a customer we would favourably consider an application from you at the expiration of the term for a renewal of the same for another period."

At the expiration of the agreement of the 15th December, the Appellants refused the Respondent's application for a renewal. Therefore the Respondent commenced the present suit seeking to recover damages for an alleged breach of the said agreement, also for the refusal to receive the contract, alleging that the Gas Company were bound to renew it under the terms of the said letter. On both claims the Court of first instance, Mr. Justice Mathew, decided in favour of the Respondent, and for the refusal to allow a renewal of the contract he gave $10,000 damages with interest from the date of judgment. Appeal and cross-appeal from such decision were heard together before the Court of Queen's Bench, and judgment, (the Chief Justice dissenting) was thereupon given, maintaining the first judgment as regards the damages for breach of contract held to be contained in the letter, but allowing the appeal on the question of interest by allowing interest not only on the above-mentioned sum in question but upon other items of damages which need not be here mentioned.

In this appeal the Gas Company contended that the said letter did not comprise any contract or agreement susceptible of legal enforcement.

THE JUDGMENT OF THEIR LORDSHIPS states:—"The letter must speak for itself. If there was a contract to renew, its terms must be found in the writing. Their Lordships are unable to find in the promise made in the letter 'that the Appellants would favourably consider' an application to renew anything legally binding on the Appellants. So far from that being so the terms used implied that the Appellants reserved to themselves the right to deliberate on the question of renewing the contract if the Respondent should apply to them to do so. The utmost that could be said was that the Respondent if he proved to be satisfactory as a customer might, as the letter assured him, expect favourable consideration. It did not require demonstration to show that such an undertaking fell short of a contract."

Her Majesty would be advised to allow the appeal by discharging so much of the judgment as awarded for damages $10,000. No costs to be awarded to either party in the Court of Queen's Bench.

No order for costs of the present appeal.

The Hon'ble Edward Blake, Q. C., and Mr. Branson, Q. C., for the Appellants.

Mr. Lawson Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Smith, Q. C. (Canadian Bar), for the Respondent.

Registrar's sale—Purchase by agent—Principal, refusal by, to complete purchase—Sub-purchasers' application by agent to complete purchase—Period for payment of balance expiring during holidays, interest.

This was an application in chambers for substitution of the name of a purchaser and for liberty to complete the sale.

The properties were sold by the Registrar under a mortgage decree. At the sale the Petitioner, Bhavadab Chatterjee, attended with instructions from his uncle Ram Akhoy Chatterjee, to purchase the properties on his behalf for a sum of Rs. 9,000. The Petitioner, however, exceeded the limit and bid up to Rs. 9,725 when he was declared the highest bidder, and he thereupon signed the bidding paper as for Ram Akhoy Chatterjee, and paid in the required deposit. The latter, however, refused to complete the purchase on the ground that his limit had been exceeded, and the Petitioner now applied that his name might be substituted for that of Ram Akhoy Chatterjee as the purchaser of the said properties and that he be allowed to complete the purchase by paying the balance of the purchase money into Court. The application was consented to by Ram Akhoy Chatterjee. Forty days within which the balance of the purchase money was to be paid under the conditions of sale had, however, expired within the holidays.

Babu Pearl Lall Haldar for the Petitioner referred to Rules 448 and 451 of Chambers' Rules and Orders, and submitted that in equity he was entitled to be substituted for Ram Akhoy Chatterjee.

Babu Amar Nath Ghose for the Plaintiff, contended that the Petitioner should pay interest from the date when the time for paying in the purchase money expired.

Babu Pearl Lall Haldar.—The time expired within the holidays when we could not pay in the money. The time should be held to have expired on the opening of the Court.

The Court.—Rule 448 did not apply to this case, but upon equity the substitution of name should be allowed.

chaser and he must pay interest from the date when the 40 days expired.

Decree, execution of—Receiver, appointment of, for the purpose of realising money in the hands of third parties—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 268 and 503 (a).

This was an application in chambers for the appointment of a Receiver for the purpose of realising certain monies in execution of a decree. The Plaintiff had obtained a decree against the Defendant and in execution of that decree obtained an order under sec. 268, Civ. P. C., prohibiting and restraining the Defendant until the further order of the Court from receiving from the Chief Auditor, East India Railway Co., a moiety of his salary with exchange compensation allowance for each and every month, commencing from the date of the order, and the Chief Auditor from making payment of those sums to any person whomsoever.

On the 24th August 1900 the Plaintiff obtained an order that the Chief Auditor should be at liberty to pay into Court the moneys attached under the previous order, but the Chief Auditor in the exercise of his discretion under the last para. of sec. 268, declined to pay the money into Court.

Babu Pearl Lall Haldar for the Plaintiff now applied for the appointment of a Receiver under sec. 503 (a), Civ. P. C. He contended that that was the only course left open to him to realise the money and it was the usual course followed in such cases.

The Court.—The appointment of a Receiver would be a heavy burden on the Defendant. Can you give me any precedent?

Sonthal Pergunnah Regulation (III of 1878)—Partition, by mal riyats, of waste and jungle lands and of fruit trees—Mal raiyats, right to partition, inter se—Suit for partition of such land—Effect of partition.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of February 1898, against the decision of R. Carstairs, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Dumka, District Sonthal Pergunnahs, passed on appeal from a decision of H. H. Heard, Esq., Sub-Judge of Deoghur, dated the 1st of September 1897.

This appeal arose out of a suit for partition of mouzabs Baramerkhi and ohak Domartari, taluk Pathrol, in the Sub-Division of Deoghur. The village was settled under the Sonthal Pergunnahs Regulation (III of 1872) with two persons, the Plaintiff being entitled under the settlement to a 14 annas share and the Defendant to the remaining 2 annas share of the village. The parties were described as "mal raiyats" of the village and the Plaintiff sought to have his interest separated from that of the Defendant as between themselves and to have the whole area of the village divided from the share of his co-sharer.

The suit had been dismissed originally by the lower Courts upon the ground that no partition could be effected of the jungle and waste lands, as also of the fruit trees; but the High Court, in second appeal (No. 553 of 1895, decided, on the 28th August 1896, by Ghose and Gordon, JJ) was of opinion that the view adopted by the lower Courts was erroneous and upon that ground the case was remanded to the Court of first instance for trial upon the merits.

The suit was again dismissed by the lower Courts upon two grounds:—First, that so far as the jungle and waste lands were concerned, they being lands reserved for the benefit of the village raiya, they could not become the property of the mal raiyats until they had been cleared or occupied by them; and, secondly, that there being two classes of trees upon the property, one class belonging to the superior landlord, the ghatwal, and the other class belonging to the mal raiyats, no partition of the trees generally could be made.

Held—That as between the mal raiyats themselves, there can be no difficulty as to partition of such lands (waste and jungle lands) though such partition cannot be binding upon the superior landlord, the ghatwal, and will only subsist during the currency of the settlement.

That so far as the trees to which the superior landlord is exclusively entitled, they cannot be the subject of partition, but as to the trees which belong to the mal raiyats, they can be partitioned.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 60, 86, 91, cl. (a)—Redemption, right of, of the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption—"An interest or charge upon property," meaning of—Raiyati interest, if sufficient to entitle one to redeem—Review granted to bring in necessary parties in a mortgage suit, if proper, after dismissal of suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of May 1898, against the decree of G. Gordon, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 25th of February 1898, affirming that of Babu Charu Chandra Mukherjee, Munsif of Hat Hazari, dated the 20th July and 27th August 1897.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The property in suit was owned by Isafali, Defendant No. 7, and his two nephews, Latif Ali and Petra Mia, Defendants Nos. 5 and 6, the former having 8 annas and the latter 4 annas each. On the 27th of Kartik 1247, they mortgaged the land to Girish Chandra Dey and his two brothers, Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, Appellants in the present appeal. On the 2nd of Asar 1249 Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 sold their rights in the property of Soh. II to one Abdul Ali, Defendant No. 4 and on the 19th of Chaitra 1253, Abdul Ali granted a raiya lease to the Plaintiff Respondent, Juramoni Dey. On the 30th of Chaitra 1254 Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 sold their rights in the property in Soh. I to the Respondent and the Respondent became entitled to 8 annas of the property in Soh. I and 12 annas of that in Soh. II.

In 1893 the Defendant No. 1, Girish Chandra Dey, instituted a suit for foreclosure against Defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7 and obtained a decree. The Respondent attempted to save his property by deposit of the money due on the mortgage but as his title was denied, his application was rejected. He then instituted a suit which was dismissed by the Munsif in May 1894, but he obtained permission from the Appellate Court in January 1895 to withdraw the suit with leave to bring a fresh suit upon the same cause of action. He then instituted the present suit on the 16th of September 1895, chiefly for declaration of his rights to the properties as also for redemption of the properties mortgaged.

The Munsif found all the issues in favour of the Plaintiff except a new issue framed by the Court and upon the finding of that issue, i.e., that the suit was bad for non-joinder of necessary parties the Munsif dismissed the suit on the 17th of March 1897. Subsequently the Plaintiff applied for a review which was granted on the 19th April 1897, and the widow of Defendant No. 2 being made a party, the suit was tried in her presence and was decreed. On appeal by the Defendants, Girish Chandra Dey and others, the District Judge dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the first Court and declared Plaintiff's right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged properties.

Against that decree the Defendants preferred this appeal and on their behalf it was contended, first, that the Plaintiff having merely a raiyati interest in the 12 annas of the property mentioned in Sch. II was not entitled to redeem that portion of the mortgaged property; secondly, that his right of redemption must be restricted to the 8 annas share of the property specified in Sch. I; and, thirdly, that the Court of first instance improperly granted a review in this case and that the suit having been dismissed for non-joinder of parties, should not have been allowed to be reviewed.

Held—(1) That the words "any person" having any interest in or charge upon the property," in sub-sec. (a) of sec. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) means any person having an interest in or charge upon the property which is affected by the mortgage.

(2) That the Plaintiff as a raiyat having no such interest in the property mentioned in Sch. II is not entitled to redeem it.

That the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is not entitled to redeem the whole but must be restricted to the redemption of that share.

Nawab Azmat Ali Khan v. Jowahir Sing (13 M. I. A. 404, at p. 415) cited and followed.

That having regard to the provisions of Sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act as to necessary parties, the review was properly admitted.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE LAST ISSUE OF THE Calcutta Gazette PUBLISHES the following resolution of the Government of Bengal regarding the improvement of the prospects of the members of the Civil Service who may select the judicial line instead of the executive. We set out now only the outlines of the proposed changes and reserve our comments for a future occasion.

In 1897 certain District and Sessions Judges in Bengal submitted memorials praying for the improvement of the Judicial Branch of the Indian Civil Service. In transmitting the memorials to the Government of India this Government suggested the advisability of providing a few appointments for the members of the Judicial service with higher pay than that of the present first grade of District and Sessions Judges, in order to place them more on an equality with officers of the Executive Branch.

The proposals were laid in due course before the Secretary of State, and he has now sanctioned the following re-arrangement of the grades and rates of pay of District and Sessions Judges in Bengal:—

	Rs.
3 first grade District and Sessions Judges on	3,000
14 second grade ditto ditto ..	2,500
16 third grade ditto ditto ..	2,000

The total number includes the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, and the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur. One of the conditions under which the scheme has been sanctioned is that these two appointments are not attached to any particular grade, but may be held by an officer of any grade. Another condition is that promotion to the highest grade on Rs. 3,000 will go by merit, rather than by seniority.

In compliance with these orders, the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to give effect to this re-arrangement from the 1st October 1900.

THEIR LORDSHIPS OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE HAVE settled the conflict between the Calcutta High Court and the Allahabad High Court, in respect of allowing interest on mortgage decrees, in favour of the Calcutta view. We invite attention to the note of the Board's judgment in Maharajah Bharatpur v. Rane Kanno Dei at p. 28 (xxviii) of this issue and also to 4 C. W. N. p. cccxxxiii and p. cccxxvii.

OUR ENTERTAINING CONTEMPORARY THE Green Bag from across the seas recites some lessons from the life of a departed lawyer which reminds us of the poet who sang the Psalm of Life. We cull some of these in our columns in the expectation that the example of the late Lord Chief Justice of England will prove profitable both to the Bench and the Bar.

He was gentleness and kindness itself to the young and nervous barrister, and amazingly patient and helpful with a painstaking lawyer and an honest witness. But woe betide the pertinacious counsel, trying to bolster up a bad defence, or, worse yet, fighting a trumpety or speculative action, or an evasive or mendacious witness.

THE FOLLOWING NARRATIVE ABOUT TWO OF ENGLAND'S greatest lawyers, now departed, may be said to have left "Footprints, that perhaps another,

Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again."

His progress was sufficiently slow to discourage him, and the story runs that about this time he dined with two other young limbs of the law who were also in despair of ever getting work enough to afford them a living. Some one suggested abandoning the Bar, joining forces and emigrating to the Colonies, and the proposition was seriously considered. Happily, it was not adopted, as one of the three afterwards became the Lord Chancellor of England and was known and affectionately regarded in America as Lord Herschel; the second was Lord Russell of Killbuck, Lord Chief Justice of England, and the third is now the present Speaker of the House of Commons.

AND THE FOLLOWING INCIDENTS IN LORD RUSSELL'S forensic career well illustrate the truth of the poet's advice

"In the world's broad field of battle
In the bivouac of Life
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!"

In 1878 he got his first big chance in one of the libel actions brought against Labouchere's Truth. The case came on for trial before Sir Alexander Cockburn, in the old Queen's Bench Court at Westminster; and for a "silk" new, or comparatively new, to London, and in a sense upon his own trial in the metropolis, the commencement did not seem propitious to Russell, whose vigorous handling of the plaintiff caused Chief Justice Cockburn to interject some comment as to the proper limits of cross-examination, and to express the opinion that they were being over-stepped. Russell, always fearless at the Bar, even with such an opponent as Cockburn on the Bench, would not give way, saying that the line he was adopting was necessary to the justification of his defence, and he hoped that when his case came to be fully heard by the Chief Justice that he would withdraw what he had said, and in the meantime suspend his judgment. At the conclusion of the trial when both Russell and his defence had been heard, Cockburn was generous enough to publicly withdraw every word of injurious comment which had fallen from his lips, and in paying a high tribute of praise to the defendant's advocate went on to blame himself for an interference, which, on reflection, he admitted had not been warranted.

In Mr. Russell's young days in "silk" when the late Mr. Justice Denman was going the Northern Circuit, just before the rising of the Court on a warm summer afternoon some very high words were flung from the Bar to the Bench, in a tone and with a vehemence which caused the learned Judge to say that he would not trust himself to reprove them in his then condition of sorrow and resentment, but would take the night to consider what he ought to do, and when they met again the next morning he would announce his determination. "In considerable commotion the Court broke up, and on the following day it was crowded, in anticipation of a "scene"—an anticipation somewhat encouraged by Mr. Justice Denman's entry into Court with, if possible, more than ordinary solemnity, and, on taking his seat, commencing the business of the day by saying, "Mr. Russell, since the Court adjourned last evening, I have had the advantage of considering with my brother Judge the painful incident. . . ." Upon which Russell quickly broke in with, "My Lord, I beg you will not say a word more upon the subject for I can honestly assure you that I have entirely and for ever dismissed it from my memory"—a turning of the tables which evoked such a roar of laughter in the Court that even the learned Judge himself could not but join in it.

THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND IS NOW REPRESENTED by all four sections of the United Kingdom, though its jurisdiction is confined to two. England is represented by the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Rigby, Wales by Lord Justice Vaughan Williams, Ireland by Lord Justice Collins, and Scotland by Lord Justice Stirling, who is, by the way, the only Scotchman now on the English Bench. All the members of the Court, except Lord Justice Vaughan Williams, who belongs to Oxford, are Cambridge men. Both Lord Justice Romer and Lord Justice Stirling were Senior Wranglers. Lord Justice Rigby, who, as senior Lord Justice, will now preside in Appeal Court II., was Smith's Prizeman. Lord Justice Collins obtained high honours in Classics, and became a Fellow of Downing College; and the Master of the Rolls rowed in the University race.

THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY have taken steps to redeem the honour of the profession. Every solicitor who is an undischarged bankrupt or who has executed a deed of arrangement or assignment for the benefit of his creditors has been informed that his certificate will not be renewed "as a matter of course." It may safely be assumed that a solicitor who can show that his insolvency is due to undeserved misfortune will not be driven from the ranks of the profession. The obvious reasons for adopting this course are that the solicitors stand in a fiduciary capacity to the public; they are officers of the court with great responsibilities; and it is not desirable that those responsibilities should continue to be borne by members of the profession whose financial position may tempt them to betray their trust.

THIS NOTICE ON INSOLVENT SOLICITORS CAN HARDLY be regarded as an innovation. Since the Solicitors Act, 1888, was passed, it has always been the practice of the Society to refuse a fresh certificate to an undischarged bankrupt, but until last year the Society was under the impression that it was bound to renew the certificate of bankrupt solicitors who had not allowed their certificates to expire. A decision given by the Divisional Court last year showed this impression to be wrong, and thereupon it became the practice of the Society not to renew the certificates of solicitors who were undischarged bankrupts. What is novel is the extension of this practice to solicitors who have executed deeds of arrangement or assignment for the benefit of their creditors.

AT THE MEETING OF THE SOCIETY HELD THIS YEAR at Weymouth the President put forward a proposal as to the undue retention by solicitors of clients' money. "I see no reason," said Mr. Ellett, "why a client should not be able to give notice to a solicitor requiring him to deliver a cash account and a statement of all securities and documents held by him for the client, and if this is not complied with within, say, seven days, the client should be empowered to apply to the Statutory Committee, and that committee should have power to suspend the solicitor from practice until the notice is complied with." Several speakers supported this proposal, but quite as many opposed it. A resolution was moved in favour of its adoption, but was ultimately withdrawn, on the understanding that the Council would consider the proposal without any formal expression of opinion by the meeting. The steps to be taken by the Council are being watched with interest.

LITTLE SPARKS OF HUMOUR OCCASIONALLY RELIEVED the proceedings of the Incorporated Law Society. One of the speakers at the Weymouth meeting claimed that all solicitors were brothers. "Brothers-in-law," quickly came the correction. After this exhibition of humour a long discussion took place on the constitution of the Council, in the course of which it was contended that many of the members of that body were too old. Immediately following this discussion a prominent member of the Council proceeded to read a paper on "Ancient Lights."

It would seem that the procedure once peculiar to the Kazis in this country is occasionally followed in the proceedings before the County Courts in England.

In the Westminster County Court, before his honour Judge Lumley Smith, Q. C., the case of Johnson v. Page was decided. The Plaintiff, a housemaid, claimed damages for the detention of her boxes by the Defendant, her late employer. She admitted leaving his service without notice. The Defendant admitted detaining the boxes and counterclaimed for damages against the plaintiff for leaving without notice. He said if he won the day he was willing to pay all the costs and forego claiming what damages he was awarded. He kept her boxes, so that the matter would come into court and he could get a decision on a very important question—could a servant leave without notice, take her boxes away, and leave her master or mistress quite unprepared? She went on a Sunday and never returned. He did not get anyone in her place for about a week. His Honour said there was no right to detain the boxes, and plaintiff had no right to leave without notice. He found for the plaintiff for 10s. on the claim and for the defendant for 10s. on the counterclaim, each without costs.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.—In re Ford. Before Mr. Justice Wright. 19th May 1900.

Bankruptcy—Payment into Court pending action—Secured creditor.

Jay & Co. were creditors of Ford. They sued him for a sum of over £1,000 and applied for judgment under order XIV of the High Court rules. An order was made in favour of Plaintiffs to be at liberty to sign judgment if the money sued for was not paid into Court within three days. Ford paid the money in Court and thereafter early in December put in a defence and counter claim, but the matter was not further proceeded with. In January on Ford's own petition a receiving order was made and adjudication followed.

The matter now came before the Court on a claim made by the trustee in bankruptcy for the money deposited on the ground that it still remained the money of the bankrupt, that it was the bankrupt's at the time of the receiving order, when the trustees title accrued.

The Plaintiffs' position at that time, it was urged, was that of an ordinary creditor and still was so, they would only be entitled to whatever they might be able to prove in the bankruptcy.

The learned Judge had to decide whether Jays were ordinary creditors or secured creditors. He referred to the order of the High Court which Plaintiffs had obtained and said that order must be treated as an order that the right to the money when paid into Court "shall abide the event." And it was settled that when money is paid into Court to abide the event it must be treated as a security, that the Plaintiff shall not lose the benefit of the decision of the Court. It has been held that when Plaintiff has, without default on his part, failed to get judgment before the bankruptcy the "event" is the decision of his right in bankruptcy (ex parte Banner, 9 Ch. 379, In re Gordon 1897, 2 Q. B. 516). It was ordered that the money was to remain in Court until decision in the trial or adjudication upon a proof by the Plaintiff in the bankruptcy.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—SANDERS CLARK v. GUGHELMO D'ALLESANDRI. Before Mr. Justice Buckley. 30th May 1900.

Property, reasonable use—Nuisance to neighbour by noise or smell.

Plaintiff Clark was lessee of a flat, 10 Grosvenor Mansions. The Defendant was lessee of premises comprising the basement and entresol beneath the flat and used it as a restaurant. Plaintiff sought an injunction to restrain Defendant's use of the restaurant in such a way as to cause a nuisance to Plaintiff. The nuisance complained of was smell from cooking and noise.

In delivering judgment in Plaintiff's favour, the learned Judge referred to Lord Selborne's words in Gaunt v. Finney (1872, L. R. 8 Ch. 8, sec. 12) where it is said that a nuisance by noise was emphatically a question of degree, and that to offend against the law, the acts must be done in a manner which beyond fair controversy ought to be regarded as excessive and unreasonable. Here the noise had neither been excessive nor unreasonable. As regards heat the Defendant had altered the premises, a large cooking range had been put in by him, the result being an excessive increase in the heat which Plaintiff complained of. After action brought, the Grosvenor Mansions Company had remedied this but Defendant had exposed his neighbour to an annoyance which she should not have had to endure and following Ball v. Ray (1873, L. R. 8 Ch. 467-9) he was liable for that. Mr. Justice Buckley guided himself by the judgment of Lord Selborne in that case to the effect that the Court must have regard to whether the Defendant was using his property reasonably or not. If he was using it reasonably, there was nothing which at law could be considered a nuisance; but if he was using it for the purposes for which the building was not constructed, then the Plaintiff was entitled to relief. In the present case the alterations made by Defendant were unreasonable so he was liable, and also for the smell and for the reason that by altering the window he had exposed Plaintiff to the smell from the restaurant; that was a substantial interference with the Plaintiff's comfort. There would be no order except that Defendant was to pay Plaintiff's costs of the action as he had undertaken to carry out the alterations suggested by Plaintiff.

PROBATE AND DIVORCE COURT.—BAILEY v. BAILEY. Before the PRESIDENT and MR. JUSTICE BARNES. 7th November 1900.

Compromise of action—Counsel, authority of.

The complaint in this appeal of the husband from a conviction by the Salago Justices in May last was that his Solicitor Mr. Copeland had compromised the case without his authority. It appeared as the husband's case that Mr. Wilcock, an experienced counsel, was retained for him but at the hearing Mr. Copeland appeared and declined to conduct the case on the lines suggested by him. The wife had alleged persistent cruelty on the part of the husband. On her behalf Mr. Copeland's affidavit was put in disclosing that the husband had on his advice expressly consented to the order made against him.

In favour of his argument for setting aside the compromise by counsel, Kempshall v. Holland, 14 The Reports 336, was relied on for the husband. In the result the appeal was dismissed with costs, the Court acting on the affidavit of Mr. Copeland which confirmed the wife's account and it was pointed out that in Kempshall v. Holland matters outside the scope of the action were included in the settlement come to in that case.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—Appeal from the Allahabad High Court. The MAHARAJA OF BHARUTPUR STATE v. RANEE KANNO DEL. 10th November 1900.

Mortgage decree for sale—Interest up to realization—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 88 and 97.

The facts and arguments of this case are stated in Vol. IV, C. W. N. at p. ccxxvii, where the decree in execution is set out as also the important portion of the High Court's judgment.

LORD HOBHOUSE to-day delivered their Lordships' judgment in the above appeal, heard last sittings, advising Her Majesty that the order appealed from and that of the Subordinate Judge should be discharged; and that the case should be remitted to the Subordinate Judge for execution of the original decree with the declaration that, according to the proper construction of the decree, the Plaintiff was entitled to interest at 8 annas per cent. up to date of payment.

The decision is an important pronouncement upon the meaning of sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act. As regards that section the judgment in its concluding portion states as follows:—"It must be admitted that the language of sec. 88 was calculated to cause difficulty and a sort of difficulty which was a common cause of conflict in judicial interpretation of new statutes. It looked as if the draftsman of the Transfer Act had overlooked the difference between a foreclosure and a sale, and had forgotten that in the former case interest stopped because the mortgagee got the property in lieu of his debt, whereas a sale must be subject to some substantial delay, and in many cases was subject to long delays. However that may be, there was the difficulty, and if sec. 88 could be looked at as an isolated enactment quite detached from other legal considerations it would be hard to construe it otherwise than was done in the case of Amolak Ram (I. L. R. 19 All. 174). But considering the universality of the long established practice, its continuation for years after the Transfer Act was passed, the manifest justice of it, the lack of any apparent reason for upsetting it, the conformity with it of sec. 97, which was in pari materia with sec. 88, the presumption that sec. 88 was framed with reference not to the running of interest but to the determination of the time for redemption or sale alternatively, and the form of suit sanctioned by the Procedure Code, their Lordships had no hesitation in expressing their concurrence with the Courts of Calcutta (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 766) and Madras (I. L. R. 21 Mad. 364) and with the ultimate decision of the Allahabad Court (I. L. R. 21 All. 361)."

[APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	IMMADIPATTAM THIRUGNANA
LORD DAVEY.	[SAMANDA OVALA KONDAMA NAIK
LORD ROBERTSON.	and another, Defendants,
SIR R. COUCH.	Appellants,
1900.	v.
15th November.	[PERIYA DORASAMI by his grandmother Kuppamal, Plaintiff and Lukshman Chetti, Defendant, Respondents.

Usufructuary mortgagee, claim of proprietary right by—Non-registration of deed of transfer.

Two suits were brought in forma pauperis by the Respondent Periya, son of the late zemindar of Ayakadu, to redeem family property. The principal Defendant, the Appellant, is a near relative of the Plaintiff. The Defendant Chetty is the mortgagee, he did not dispute Plaintiffs' title.

While the property was in the hands of Plaintiffs' father he mismanaged it to such an extent that it became liable to a heavy debt. Decrees were obtained by creditors, with the result that a document was executed, by the adult members of the family, and the mortgagees' representative, the abovenamed Lukshman Chetty, on the 4th November 1882, called an usufructuary mortgage.

It was under this arrangement that the Appellant claimed and alleged that he was thereby constituted proprietor of the property. The evidence with regard to Appellant's claim that the property was transferred to him is to be found in this mortgage deed, and in an arzi written by Plaintiffs' father to the Collector three days after.

The actual possession of the property has been with the mortgagee Defendant.

The principal issue raised was "whether by the arrangement come to between Plaintiffs' father and the Defendant the property passed to the latter."

The Sub-Judge of Madura held that Appellant was entitled to succeed on that issue. He declined to consider the question, because he thought it was taken too late, that the alleged transfer was invalid inasmuch as it could only be made under the Transfer of Property Act by a registered document.

The High Court, inter alia, said with reference to the mortgage:—

"It may be said that there was declaration of an intention on the part of Plaintiffs' father to divest himself of his "ownership in the zemindari, but nothing was done to "give legal effect to this intention, and without a registered conveyance it was not competent for him to pass the property whether the transaction was in the nature of a sale or in the nature of a gift . . . . .

It is hardly suggested that the Plaintiffs' father absolutely divested himself of the ownership in such a manner as to vest an indefeasible title on the Respondent."

The High Court decided both suits in Plaintiffs' favour. Mr. Mayne now relied on the terms of the said mortgage deed, the arzi, documents of later date, showing that Appellant was, as he urged, the openly recognized Zemindar, and as evidence that the transfer was recognized. He urged that the absolute transfer of title to the Zemindari was part of a family arrangement all the terms of which were embodied in the said registered mortgage deed.

LORD DAVEY.—You have got no conveyance. .

Mr. Mayne.—No, we have not, but we have it all set out in this family arrangement.

LORD DAVEY.—No consideration passed from you, you were a mere volunteer.

Mr. Mayne.—The mortgagee relied on our undertaking personal responsibility to Government and then further commented on the terms of the mortgage deed more particularly referring to cls. 25 and 27 thereof.

Their Lordships did not call on Mr. Phillips, who appeared for the Respondent for reply.

Judgment reserved.

LORD ROBERTSON.

RAJA SHANKAR DUBE, and

SIR RICHARD COUCH.

after his death the Collector of Jaunpur as Manager Court of Wards.

Ex parte decree—Sec. 108, C. P. C.

The questions raised in this appeal were whether the decree complained of was an ex parte decree or not and whether an appeal to Her Majesty in Council lay in this case.

The High Court of Allahabad had reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Benares and the appeal came on under the usual certificate granted by the High Court that the case was a fit one for appeal under sec. 596, C. P. C.

The suit was brought for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 65,426 principal and interest due on two hypothecation bonds, dated 17th and 30th June 1890, executed by Raja Harihar Dut Dube of whom the Defendant in this suit Shankar Dut Dube was the legal representative.

The first Court decreed the claim on the 19th March 1896. Subsequently on the 9th April 1896 Shankar Dut Dube applied to the same Court to set aside the decree as having been passed ex parte under the provisions of sec. 108, C. P. C. On the 8th October 1896 the Sub-Judge disallowed the objection, but on the Defendant's appeal the High Court (Chief Justice Edge and Mr. Justice Blair) set aside the order of the Sub-Judge and remanded the case to that Court under sec. 562, C. P. C.

The amended plaint had been filed on the 8th January 1895, written statements of the various Defendants including Shankar Dut Dube was placed on the record on the 17th May 1895, and with regard to what had followed the Sub-Judge stated as under:—

"The 19th March 1896, on which the decree in question was passed, was fixed to the knowledge of the pleaders for both parties, for the purpose of the production of evidence on the issues framed. These issues had been framed with reference to the plaint and the written statement filed on Defendant's behalf on the 17th May 1895 and 19th March 1896; but the case was postponed before 19th March from time to time, either by reason of the application of Defendant's pleader praying for the postponement on account of his being busy elsewhere, or by reason of the Record of the Suit not having come back from Jaunpur, where it had been sent on requisition. The postponement took place on the 31st January 1896, on which an order was passed that the case should come on for decision on the 19th March 1896, and that the parties with their witnesses should appear on that date, due notice thereof was admittedly given to pleaders. That day having arrived the pleader for the applicant stated that he could not conduct the case and he had received no instructions from his client. Thereupon the Court proceeded to try the case, and tried and decided the issues on the evidence adduced on Plaintiff's behalf and decreed the suit against the applicant. Now, taking these circumstances into consideration, and also the fact that Applicant's pleader as well as that of the Plaintiff had in the beginning applied for time to enable him to produce precedents, I hold that the Defendant's pleader, who refused to conduct the case on the 19th March 1896, was not without instructions; and that his appearance in Court, therefore, was an appearance of his client (the applicant). . . . I may also remark that notice to a pleader of the date fixed is as good as a notice to his client in person. Hence the decree was not ex parte, and no application lies under sec. 108, Civil Procedure Code."

The judgment of the High Court reversing the decision of the Sub-Judge and remanding the case is as follows:—

"It appears to us that the decision of this Court in Bhagwan Dai v. Hira (I. L. R. 19 All. 355) and of the High Court at Calcutta in Jonardan Dobey v. Ramdhone Singh (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 738) are authorities in favour of the contention of the Appellant that an application lay in this case under sec. 108 of Act No. XIV of 1882. On the other hand, we have been pressed by the learned counsel for the Plaintiff decree-holder with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahibzada Zein-ul-abdin Khan v. Sahibzada Ahmed Raza Khan (L. R. 5 I. A. 223: s. c. I. L. R. 2 All. 67). The procedure which the Subordinate Judge must in our opinion have adopted was that under sec. 157 of Act XIV of 1882. That section makes applicable, so far as may be, to cases coming within the section, the procedure of Chapter VII of the Code. Sec. 157 apparently relates to a later period in the litigation than the sections which are to be found in Chapter VII, but there is no difficulty in ascertaining the rule to be followed in cases under sec. 157 by reference to Chapter VII. It has been contended for the Plaintiff decree-holder that the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahibzada Zein-ul-abdin Khan v. Sahibzada Ahmed Raza Khan (L. R. 5 I. A. 233) is, that there can be no decree which can be called a decree ex parte against a Defendant who has, at any time and on any occasion before the decree is made, put in an appearance in the suit, although at the hearing he may have been absent and unrepresented, or may have been present merely a pleader who had no instructions. In our opinion the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council merely referred to the opening paragraph of sec. 119 of Act No. VIII. of 1859. That section itself shows quite clearly that there can be ex parte decrees against Defendants, whether or not they have put in appearances in the suit. The prohibition of an appeal in the earlier part of sec. 119 is limited, to apply the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to a case in which the Defendant had not put in any appearance at all. In our opinion the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council has no bearing on the case before us here."

Mr. Upjohn, Q. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellant.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Is there nothing in the record to show whether Defendant's pleader informed him?

Mr. Upjohn.—No.

LORD DAVEY.—It all depends on that fact.

SIR R. COUGH.—It may be he was present without proper authority.

For the Appellants it was contended that the decree of the 19th March 1896 was not an ex parte decree within the meaning of sec. 108, C. P. C. Moreover if it was, the High Court was wrong in remanding the case. The Defendant had not complied with the terms of that section, he had to satisfy the Sub-Judge that he was prevented from sufficient cause from appearing, &c.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—That appears to be so, the application should have been remanded for the Sub-Judge to find on evidence whether Defendant had satisfied the terms of that section.

After hearing Mr. Phillips for the Respondent their Lordships called on Mr. Ross to show the appealable nature of the order, and whether the decree of the High Court under appeal was a final one.

Mr. Ross referred to among others secs. 594, 588, 566 of the Civil Procedure Code and to Syed Muzhar Husein v. Bodha Bibi, L. R. 22 I. A. 1.

Rent, suit for—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 61, Art. 2 (a), Sch. III—Co-sharer landlords, right of, to recover rent—Separate collection—Deposit of rent—Service of notice—Limitation.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of February 1898, against the decree of Babu Birj Mohan Pershad, Subordinate Judge of Mozafferpur, dated the 25th of September 1897, passed on appeal from the decision of Babu Jaya Prasad Panday, Munsif of Samastipur, dated the 30th of June 1897.

These were several appeals which arose out of several suits brought by the Plaintiffs for the recovery of rents due from the Defendants who held khas in mouzahs Chaka and Masina, in which the Plaintiffs were co-sharer landlords. Some of the suits were for the recovery of rents due for the years 1302 to 4 annas kist 1304, B. S., and all the remaining suits for 1301 to 4 annas kist 1304, B. S. It was alleged that the mouzahs were divided into several pattis under an Ekrarnama executed by all the maliks and that the Plaintiffs had been in possession of their pattis from the date of the document. There was a dispute in some of the suits as to the annual rentals, the Defendants having stated them to be less than those stated by the Plaintiffs. In two suits, the Defendants stated their jamas was more than those claimed by the Plaintiffs. In some suits the Defendants pleaded payments in full till 1302, B. S., and in some other suits, the Defendants said that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover rents from them as they sold their khas several years ago to Mr. Manners, proprietor of Almasnagar Factory. In the remaining suits the Defendants pleaded that the Plaintiffs did not own so much share in the two mouzahs as alleged in the plaints; that their jamas were less than those alleged by the Plaintiffs; that there had been no division of the mouzahs by private partition; that the mouzahs were in joint possession of all the maliks and the suits could not therefore proceed without all the sharers being parties; that the collection of the Plaintiffs' share was not separate, and the suits for the recovery of rents of their share alone could not be maintained; that the rents till 1303, B. S., they had deposited in Court, and that the present suits having been instituted after the expiry of six months from the date of service of notice, the claim for the period ending with 1303, B. S., was barred, and that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover rents for 4 annas kist of 1304, B. S., as they had not accrued due at the time of the institution of these suits. Only in two suits the Defendants stated their jamas to be more than those alleged by the Plaintiffs.

* With this appeal was heard analogous appeals Nos. 269 to 309, 369, 654 and 655 of 1898.

The Munsif decreed the suits and on appeal the decrees of the Munsif were affirmed by the Subordinate Judge of Mozuffarpore.

Against these decrees the Defendants preferred these appeals and on their behalf it was argued (1) that the suits were not maintainable; (2) that the rent of 1303 B. S. was barred; (3) that the rent 4 annas kist of 1304 was premature and fourthly that the finding as to the rate of rent was not supported by any evidence.

Held—That the Plaintiff being entitled to have 9 annas share of the rent, which he is in the habit of collecting separately from his other co-sharers the suits are maintainable.

That the co-sharer landlords being jointly and severally entitled to the rent claimed the service of notice of the deposit of rent on any one of the landlords under sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would not reduce the period of limitation to six months as provided in Art. 2 (a) of Sch. III of the Act.

That the agricultural year commencing in Behar from the 1st of Assar and the 4 annas kist rent becoming due after the expiry of 3 months, i. e., in Assin, long before the institution of these suits, they are not premature.

Babu Unakali Mukherjee for the Appellants.

Mr. Gregory and Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter for the Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act, (VIII of 1885), Art. 3, Part I, Sch. III—Co-sharer landlord, dispossession of occupancy raiyat by—Occupancy raiyat, right of, to possession—Suit for declaration of right of co-sharer landlord to bring to sale property of such raiyat—Limitation—Recognition of right of raiyat after dispossession, effect of.

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th of September 1898, against the decree of Babu A. C. Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, dated the 25th of July 1898, reversing the decision of Babu Bhaba Charan Mukerjee, Additional Munsif of Ram-purhat, dated the 15th of March 1897.

The facts of the case out of which this appeal arose were as follows—

Chandra Moni Gupta (Plaintiff No. 1) having obtained a decree for money against Shiva Ram Mondul (Defendant No. 3) attached in execution of the said decree the land in suit together with other lands forming the jote of the said Siva Ram Mondul. Thereupon the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the Appellants in this appeal, preferred a claim to the land in suit which was allowed. Chandra Moni Gupta then brought the present suit, for a declaration of her judgment-debtor's (Siva Ram Mondul's) right to the land in suit and that it was liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by her against the said Siva Ram Mandul.

The Plaintiff's case, so far as is material to this report was briefly this.—That the disputed 6 bighas 11 cottahs of land formed part of the jote of Siva Ram Mandul consisting of 12½ bighas of land in kismut Chanchal of which the Plaintiff was seputnidar to the extent of a one moiety share and Defendants No. 1 was the durputnidar of the remaining one moiety share, and that both the landlords were in possession by separate realization of rent from the tenants of the aforesaid mehol kismut Chanchal, that Siva Ram Mandul who was an occupancy raiyat of the said jote sub-let a portion of his jote, viz., the disputed 6 bighas 11 cottahs of land, to one Ram Doyal Muchi in 1289, B. S., and Ram Doyal Muchi remained in possession of the same since then to 1293 as koyfadar under Siva Ram Mondul, that Ram Doyal gave up the land in 1293, whereupon Siva Ram sub-let the same to one Haridas Babaji who died in 1299 without leaving any heir, that after Haridas' death, Siva Ram took khas possession of the land, and that since then he was in khas possession of it, by cultivating the land himself, that the Plaintiff obtained a decree for money for Rs. 8.9 annas against Siva Ram Mondul on the 17th January 1895 and that in execution of the said decree the whole jote of Siva Ram was attached; out of which Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 preferred a claim in respect of 6 bighas, 11 cottahs only, the subject-matter of the present suit; that the said claim was allowed on the 13th July 1895.

The defence of the principal Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was, inter alia, that the Plaintiff Chunder Moni Gupta had no right to sue inasmuch as she had no right to the money due upon the decree mentioned by her in the plaint; that the Defendant No. 3 Siva Ram had no right to the land in suit; that the suit was barred by limitation as Siva Ram was never in possession within twelve years prior to the suit; that Siva Ram, on behalf of himself and his minor brother relinquished the land in suit in favour of Defendant No. 1 and the predecessors in interest of the Plaintiff, who were the 16 annas landlords at that time; that thereafter Defendant No. 1 kept the land in khas possession and paid rent therefor to himself and his co-sharer landlord and settled the same with Ram Doyal Muchi but no mutation of names in the landlord's sherista was made and Siva Ram's name continued in the sherista in respect of the whole jama; that Defendant Nos. 1 and 2 continued to be in possession up to date; that subsequently the land in suit was registered in the name of Haridas Babaji, who was merely a benamidar of Defendant No. 1; that its objection was made by Defendant No. 3 at that time and as Defendant No. 3 or his brother was not in possession within 12 years or two years of the suit, whatever right they had in the land in suit had been relinquished. Defendant No. 3 supported the Plaintiffs' allegations.

The Munsif dismissed the Plaintiff's suit and held on the question of limitation, that Siva Ram was an occupancy raiyat, and any suit for recovery of possession of the land in suit by him would be governed by art. 3, Part I, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides two years limitation from the date of dispossession and that the said article would apply to any such suit by Siva Ram Mondul was sufficiently clear from the case reported in I. L. R. 24 Cal. p. 40, and that the provisions of sec. 28 of the Limitation Act read together with sec. 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, clearly shewed that even if Siva Ram had any such right as alleged by the Plaintiff it was extinguished.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge, reversed the decision of the Munsif and allowed the appeal and decreed the Plaintiff's suit holding that the suit was not for recovery of possession of jote land by a tenant against his landlord, and that two years' limitation would not apply, but was for declaration of jote right of the tenant in the disputed land under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, that it might be sold in execution if Plaintiffs' decree for money, and that the Defendant No. 1 not being 16 annas proprietor, dispossession by him could not be held to be dispossession by the landlord as contemplated by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and relying upon the case of Dinabondhu Shaha v. Lolit Mohun Mitter Vol. II, C. W. N. p. 259 (short notes) held that 12 years' limitation applied to the case and the suit having been instituted within 12 years from 1294 the date of dispossession, was not barred.

Against that decree the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 preferred this appeal and on their behalf, it was contended that under art. 3 of sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act the suit was barred, and the question argued was whether the raiyat Siva Ram having been dispossessed by the Defendants more than two years antecedent to the suit, it was open to the Plaintiff, who was one of the co-sharer landlords, to bring to sale the land of Siva Ram in execution of a decree obtained by him against Siva Ram.

Held—That if the raiyat lost his right by efflux of time and if he was not in a position to assert his right to the land by reason of art. 3, Part I of sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it would not be open to the Plaintiff to bring to sale the property in question as the property of Siva Ram.

That the right of the raiyat to the land not coming to an end before two years antecedent to the suit, and the title of the raiyat as raiyat, having been throughout recognized by all parties concerned, notwithstanding the unlawful possession by one of the co-sharer landlords, and the recognition having been up to within two years of the institution of the suit the suit was not barred.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Surendra Chandra Sen and Mr. J. R. Percival for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

has to guard against failure of justice and to exercise the prerogatives of the Crown. There can be no doubt that a lawyer is better fitted to discharge such duties than a layman. Besides, he has in his gift the offices of Specially magistrates and recorders and it is always better that the power should be exercised by men who have a knowledge of the Bar. ## THE LAW OF INSOLVENCY IN BRITISH INDIA AND ITS ANOMALIES.

In the last quarterly number of the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation there is an article on Comparative Legislation in Bankruptcy by professor Richard Brown. The object of the article is to examine the Bankruptcy laws of Great Britain and its Colonies in comparison with the law in other European countries. The learned professor maintains that the object of the law of insolvency is to secure a rateable distribution of the insolvent's assets amongst the creditors and proceeds to shew that the Scottish system has attained the greatest perfection in this respect. Although the law as it obtains in British India does not come in for his consideration, yet judging the law here by his standard, we have no hesitation in declaring that it is the most defective of any system that prevails at the present day.

In the Presidency-towns in India, the English Statute (11 & 12 Vic., C. 21) is still in operation and in the rest of British India, Chap. XX of the Civil Procedure Code governs the law. For the present we shall deal with some of the prominent defects in both.

We shall begin with the Civil Procedure Code. In sec. 344 power is given to any holder of a decree for money to apply that his judgment-debtor may be declared an insolvent. This provision was apparently inserted in the Code without much consideration and it has often worked harshly towards the judgment-debtor. No money limit is fixed and a creditor who has obtained a decree for a trifling sum may apply to have his judgment-debtor adjudicated an insolvent. Besides this, it has given rise to other anomalous results to explain which we must go into the history of this curious clause in sec. 344.

In the former Code of 1877 there was no provision for the judgment-creditor to apply for adjudicating the judgment-debtor an insolvent. This

THERE WILL BE NO ISSUE OF THE "WEEKLY NOTES" during Christmas week

AT THE LAST FINAL EXAMINATION OF THE BAR HELD in the middle of October last, there were 73 candidates out of which 54 passed.

THE Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, not so very long ago, expressed its surprise at the number of the verdicts by jury which are interfered with on reference or appeal in this province. The opinion of the leading professional organs in England, as also that of the head of the judiciary there, such as the present Lord Chancellor and the late Lord Chief Justice, seems to be at one that a jury is more often likely to be right than a judge. Of course, the jury may return sometimes a perverse verdict and then it is but right that the judge should interfere, especially if it be one for conviction. But in case the majority are for acquittal it is, perhaps, the safer course to accept the verdict or to send it for re-trial before another judge.

SIR MATHEW WHITE RIDLEY, THE HOME SECRETARY under the late Ministry, has been raised to the peerage. His successor is like him a layman. For a considerable length of time it was the practice to appoint a lawyer to that place. There are two special reasons in favour of the former practice. In England, where there are no Courts of criminal appeal, the Home Secretary has in a manner to take its place and defect was noticed and the Legislature proceeded to amend the Code and did it in such a slipshod manner that it has given rise to great uncertainty both as to the law and its administration. To explain both, we must notice first the amendments. To begin with, provision was made in sec. 344 to the effect that a decree-holder may apply to have the judgment-debtor declared an insolvent. But the Legislature omitted to state on what grounds. Following up the amendment to the next section, we find that it was provided that the decree-holder need only set forth in his application the date of the decree, the name of the Court, the amount remaining due and the residence of the judgment-debtor. The earlier part of this section (345) was, however, so amended as to restrict the declaration thereunder as to the details of the debtor's property, his debts and creditors and his bond fide, only to cases where he is the applicant. The only other material amendment that need be noticed was in sec. 347 which provided that when the applicant was the judgment-creditor no notice need be served on any one except on the judgment-debtor or his pleader. Coming to the procedure to be followed by the Court, the Code does not seem to indicate the course to be taken when the decree-holder is the applicant. Sec. 350, which provides that the judgment-debtor is to be examined has, in the cases we report in this issue, Gouri Kanti Burman v. Damodar Das Burman (p. 90) and Ram Komal Saha and ors. v. Bank of Bengal (p. 91), been held as having no application when the decree-holder is the applicant. Consequently the provision of sec. 351, which says that the Court has to be satisfied that the judgment-debtor has not concealed any property or committed any fraud or act of bad faith before declaring the judgment-debtor an insolvent, has also no application when the decree-holder is the applicant. Such a law it may well be imagined leaves a large loop-hole for the judgment-debtor to commit fraud on other creditors in collusion with one of them. While the Code thus gives ample opportunity to the dishonest insolvent to give undue preference to one of his creditors it can hardly be said to give an effective redress to an honest insolvent. The Code does not apparently provide for a final discharge so as to release him from all his liabilities. An insolvent may disclose all his creditors or debts in his statement but if the creditors or some of them do not care to come in and prove their debts, he can only obtain a discharge in respect of those who do. Thus under the present law an insolvent-debtor may be harassed all his life, if his creditors choose to lie in wait and turn up in turns.

Turning now to the Insolvent Debtors Act we find that a creditor to whom five hundred rupees are owed by a trader may apply to have his debtor adjudicated an insolvent. The Code, as we have seen, fixes no such limit but still provides that notice of the proceedings should be given to the judgment-debtor though not necessarily to the public (see s. 347, C. P. C. and also 5 C. W. N. 91).

But under the Insolvent Debtors Act (11 & 12 Vic., C. 21) an adjudication order can be made ex parte and we know how often traders have been adjudicated without any reason and the loss they have suffered in consequence. But the worst anomalies may be said to arise out of this conflict of law coupled with the question of jurisdiction under the Insolvent Debtors Act. It frequently happens in practice that a man who has for years traded in the mofussil, say in the North Western Provinces, finds himself in insolvent circumstances. He may owe lakhs of rupees to persons there and only a few hundreds to creditors in Calcutta. The insolvent-debtor comes here, takes a room in some house with some friends of his and after a stay of a few days, petitions the High Court to be declared an insolvent. In a case tried a few years ago (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 634), it was held that there was nothing to shew that the residence contemplated by sec. 5 of the Insolvent Debtors Act must necessarily be a permanent residence; the object of the section being to extend the benefit of the Act to those who could be said to be bond fide residents, for the time being, within the jurisdiction of the Court at the time they filed their petitions. This case has not always been followed by other learned judges and in practice it has often been found that a person has obtained the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act from a Court within whose jurisdiction he has no bond fide residence.

Some years ago a Bill was introduced into the Imperial Council with a view to amend the law. This Bill was copied largely from the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883 and the opinion of judges and various public bodies was obtained, we do not know what was said by those who were consulted, but the Bill was unaccountably dropped and nothing further has been heard of it since. Any one who is acquainted with the law and practice of Bankruptcy in India will agree that the Bankruptcy law in India is badly in need of reform.

COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED.—
THE QUEEN v. ADA JANE STODDART. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICES WILLS, WRIGHT, KENNEDY and PHILLIMORE. 17th November 1900.

The Betting Act, 1853, sec. 1—Coupon betting, keeping office for.

The facts of this case when before Mr. Justice Channell are reported in Vol. V, C. W. N. at p. xix.

The case is known as the "Sporting Luck" case, the Defendant being the owner of that weekly paper. In each publication large prizes were offered to persons who correctly filled in a number of coupons printed in the paper with the names of the first three horses in a given race.

Mr. Justice Channell had held that the case fell within the intention of the above act, but stated a case showing that the indictment charged Defendant, that she being the occupier of 10 Red Lion Court used that office for the purpose of money being received by or on her behalf as the consideration for undertaking to pay thereafter money on events relating to horse racing.

The main argument for the Defendant was that what she did was neither betting nor wagering and so was not covered by the Betting Act.

THE COURT as above constituted held that the transaction in this case came within the express words of the statute and effect must be given to it even if it were assumed that what the Defendant did as argued on her behalf did not amount to betting or wagering. The operation of the section was not limited to those transactions alone.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., argued on behalf of the Defendant.

COURT OF APPEAL—In re MARCUS BEBRO. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY and COLLINS. 25th May 1900.

Bankruptcy application, consent by withdrawal—Creditor securing increased amount—Whether extortion.

The original debt of the debtor was for £115. The creditor obtained judgment thereon in October 1899 and immediately after filed a bankruptcy petition in respect thereof. By consent of parties when the matter was on for hearing before the Registrar on November 14th it was dismissed upon the debtor giving the creditor a fresh acceptance for a larger sum, viz., £130, and agreeing to pay costs of the petition as well as of the judgment and that was done at the intimation taken by the debtor. On this new bill the creditor obtained a judgment and on the 2nd February 1900 he presented a second petition for over £140 the amount of the judgment and also the sum that was due for the costs of the previous judgment.

The question was whether the creditor in securing an increased amount as the inducement for permitting the former petition to be dismissed had used the process of the Court for extortion. Mr. Registrar Griffard made a receiving order, arriving at the conclusion that as a fact extortion had not been substantiated.

THE COURT OF APPEAL came to the conclusion that the proceedings in the previous bankruptcy application were of a bond fide nature; that being so, it was not to be regarded as an extortion simply because a larger amount was obtained than could then have been recovered in the bankruptcy. In In re G (44 Sol. J. 345), the Registrar had found extortion proved, here on the contrary, it was held, not proved. The Master of the Rolls cited with approval the view taken in In re Atkinson (9 Morr. 193), where it is said "the moment the Court saw the petition was made a means of extorting money, a Petitioner should not be able to get a receiving order, and it did not follow that because the solicitation on the first instance came from the debtor there could not be extortion since the creditor in demurring to the request might still act in such a way as to put considerable pressure on the debtor."

Mr. Herbert Reid, Q. C., and Mr. Muir Mackenzie for the Debtor.

Mr. Isaacs, Q. C., and Mr. Simmons for the Respondent.

Lex loci—English Law—Jurisdiction.

On the 28th November 1898, Her Britannic Majesty's Court at Zanzibar varied two decrees pronounced in 1897 by the Consular Court for Mombasa, in the East African Protectorate in two suits brought by the two above-named Charlsworth firms. From such decision special leave to appeal was granted by Her Majesty in Council to all parties, Secretary of State and the Respondents.

The said decrees appealed from of the two local Courts purported to assess the compensation payable by the Secretary of State to the respective Plaintiffs in the two suits for certain lands belonging to the Plaintiffs in the Island of Mombasa and compulsorily acquired by the Secretary of State for the construction of a railway from Mombasa to Uganda. Those lands lay in 4 plots called "Shambas." The first three belonging to Plaintiffs-Respondents first named, the fourth to Thomas D. Charlsworth and Company. The last-named carried on business in London. While Charlsworth Pilling and Company carried on their business in Zanzibar with a branch at Mombasa.

On the 27th May 1896 the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 came into force in Mombasa. On 2nd November 1896 Mr. Crawford, Her Majesty's acting Commissioner and Consul-General, issued a declaration under sec. 6 of that Act declaring that the lands now in question were needed for public railway purposes and also issued a notice on the Respondents under sec. 9 requiring them to state their interests in the lands and claims for compensation.

Before any of these steps were taken in 1895 the railway buildings for which compensation is claimed had been erected on certain of the said "Shambas," by railway engineers employed by Her Majesty's Government and they without authority took possession of the Shambas.

On 16th November 1896 and 5th January 1897 claims for compensation were sent in by both firms, objecting to the Collector's measurement of the said "Shambas."

The Island of Mombasa forms part of the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar and was leased by him to Her Majesty with full sovereign power to administer on His behalf.

Her Majesty has also extra-territorial jurisdiction under treaty (signed 30th April 1886) with the Sultan which at the time of these proceedings was regulated by the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884 (November 29th).

Sec. 8 of that Order in Council is as follows:—

Sec. 8 (a) ..... Subject to the other provisions of this order, and to any treaties for the time being in force relating to Zanzibar, Her Majesty's Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction in Zanzibar shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the enactments for the time being applicable as hereinafter mentioned of the Governor-General of India in Council, and of the Governor of Bombay in Council, and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by and before the Court in the Presidency of Bombay beyond the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay according to their respective jurisdiction and authority, and so far as such enactments, procedure and practice are inapplicable, shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised under and in accordance with the common and statute law of England in force at the commencement of this order.

(b) ..... Declares certain Indian enactments not affecting this question to be applicable to Zanzibar.

(c) ..... Any other existing or future enactments of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council shall also be applicable to Zanzibar, but shall not come into operation until such times as may in the case of any of such enactments respectively be fixed by the Secretary of State.

On the 27th May 1896 pursuant to above, the Land Acquisition Act, No. 1 of 1894, came into operation in Zanzibar.

The judgment of Mr. Oator, the Judge of the Mombasa Court, on the question of which law governed the case, the Mahomedan law as urged for the Secretary of State or the maxim of English law quid quid plantaver solo solo cedit as urged for the Respondents, was as follows:—

Besides my duties as a Consular Judge, I sit here as one of the Sultan's Judges, and in that capacity have to administer, with the help of native Judges, the Sheria or Mahomedan law which is the local law here, and the observance of which has been solemnly guaranteed to the inhabitants of the country, but Mr. Daly contended that I could not make use in this case of any knowledge so acquired, and although it is an extreme instance of the rule, that in every case Foreign law must be proved as a fact to an English Judge, I think he is right. The Defendant called two of the Sultan's Cadi's or Judges from Zanzibar and their evidence is conclusive that in a case, such as the present, the landowner cannot claim possession of buildings placed upon his land by a trespasser but can only call upon the trespasser to remove the buildings and restore the land to its original state. They gave their evidence well and referred to text-books. Mr. Daly cross-examined them severely but failed to shake their testimony, and although I may not make use of my knowledge of the Mahomedan law directly, I think there can be no harm in my saying that I in no way disagree with them; whether or not the question would be affected by the fact that the Government of the country is that of the Sultan, although administered by Her Majesty's Government, if, in my opinion, English law had to be applied, I need not consider. Mr. Daly thought not, but I have grave doubts on the point, because although the Defendant is in form an Englishman, he is after all but the Agent of a Mahomedan Prince to whom unquestionably Mahomedan law would apply.

The evidence of the Cadi's or Kathi's referred to, contain, inter alia, the following:—

I have been a Kathi 14 years.

I studied Mahomedan law under many teachers, Mahomed Bnb Seh, the Mufti of Mecca, the chief of all the Mecca tutors was my greatest teacher, Said Ahamed Dahalar, one of the Mecca teachers, Said Baka Shettar.

My father was a Kathi.

Q.—If a man builds a house on the land of another man against his will, to whom does the building belong?

A.—The house belongs to the man who built it.

Q.—What remedy has the owner of the land against the builder?

A.—The man who has built the house can remove it or leave it there as he likes.

Q.—If the owner of the land came to me as Kathi with a complaint that a man had built on his land?

A.—I should ask him to remove it, i.e., the man who had built the house—the owner of it.

Q.—Could the owner of the land claim the house and prevent the builder from removing it?

A.—This would be impossible; the ground alone belongs to him, not the house.

If any damage has been done to the land by building and removing the house he must make it good. If no damage has been done the owner of the land, gets no compensation.

If the house has stood for some time before being removed, the owner of the house is bound to pay rent for it.

I can show written law in support of this in the Tufa, the great book of the Laws, written long ago—400 years—always printed.

Chapter called Ghrasib, No. 394, Vol. II. Ghrasib means "to take a man's property."

All the judges ought to judge according to this book. This is for everywhere, Constantinople, Mecca. The doctrines are taken from the Koran and the Prophets and some others besides. If Christians go to the Islam judge they will be judged according to this law. If he goes to any other judge, he will be judged according to the law of that judge.

The other Kathi also deposed similarly; he moreover referred to a book called Monhaj and said it was printed in 1295 at Misri a place called Bolak, part of Cairo, in the time of Ismail Pasha; in cross-examination he said:—

If the owner of the land tells the other man not to build, and the man still builds, the building will still remain the property of the man who built it.

He will be told to remove it.

All those who build houses on others' land know that the land is not their own when he is building on it.

It is called Rhasib when a man takes another man's property in this way.

If the landowner seized the house I should tell him to give it back again; he cannot get it except by agreement between the parties.

This book is very old—650 years; this book is older than Tufa. I don't quite recollect how old Tufa is. I have seen the date. It is an old Law book.

There is no new law. The students of law all follow the old law.

There are new books by other authors. They are all the same as this, I could bring them. I have not got them here.

Sherbe wa Fatila Olmoim is one of them. It was written not long ago. The author died lately.

I do not know of an author called Amir Ali. I have heard that there is a big book in the High Court in Bombay, but I have not seen it.

This statement of the law was accepted by both Courts.

From the decision pronounced by the learned Judge the Charlsworths appealed to the Bombay High Court. The appeals were rejected by that Court for want of jurisdiction.

They then appealed to the Zanzibar Court.

In two respects the latter Court varied the decrees of the Consular Court.

(a) By holding that Charlsworth Pilling & Co. in law were entitled in addition to the value of their land taken to the value of the Railway buildings which the Court estimated at the cost price of 60,140. The Consular Court having held that Plaintiffs were not as a matter of law entitled to be paid for the same.

(b) As regards the general value of the land taken, by awarding in each case, apart from any question of railway buildings, a far larger sum than that awarded by the Consular Court.

The Judge of the Consular Court decided that Mahomedan law applied. The appeal Court held that the English law applied on the ground that the principle of extra-territoriality established by the Zanzibar Treaty of 1886 introduced that law into Zanzibar.

Reference during the arguments was made to the XVI clause of the said treaty which was as follows:—Subjects of Her Britannic Majesty shall as regards their person and property enjoy within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar the rights of extra-territoriality. The authorities of His Highness the Sultan have no right to interfere in disputes between subjects of Her Britannic Majesty amongst themselves or between them and members of other Christian nations. Such questions whether of a civil or criminal nature shall be decided by the competent Consular authorities. The trial and also the punishment of all offences and crimes of which British subjects may be accused within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan, also the hearing and settlement of all civil questions, claims, or disputes in which they are the Defendants, is expressly reserved to the British Consular authorities and Courts, and removed from the jurisdiction of His Highness the Sultan.

"Should disputes arise between a subject of His Highness the Sultan or other non Christian power not represented by Consuls at Zanzibar, and a subject of Her Britannic Majesty in which the British subject is the Plaintiff or the complainant, the matter shall be brought before and decided by the highest authority of the Sultan, or some person specially delegated by him for this purpose. The proceedings and final decision in such a case shall not, however, be considered legal unless notice has been given, and an opportunity afforded for the British Consul or his substitute to attend at the hearing and final decision."

And, secs. 8 and 21 of the said Orders on Council, sec. 21 was as follows:—

"Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Civil Procedure, "The Bombay Civil Courts Act 1869," "The Indian Succession Act," and the other enactments relating to the administration of civil justice and to bankruptcy for the time applicable to Zanzibar, shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a zilla or district in the Presidency of Bombay; the Consul-General shall be deemed to be the District Judge of the district, and his Court the District Court or Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the District, and the Court authorised to hear appeals from the decisions of the District Court; and the powers, both of the Governor-General in Council and the Local Government, under those enactments, shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or with his previous or subsequent assent by the Governor-General of India in Council."

For the Secretary of State it was contended that as a matter of law the Respondents were not entitled to be paid for the Railway buildings and that the compensation was properly assessed by the Consular Court; also that as regards that question the evidence did not warrant the Court for Zanzibar varying the judgment of the Consular Court. That the rights of the parties must be governed by the lex loci rei sitæ that the 16th, 18th and 20th articles of the treaty did not impair that rule. That even if English law applied, Plaintiffs would not be entitled under the circumstances to compensation for the value of those buildings.

For the Respondent it was contended that the Mahomedan law did not apply, and even if it did, it would not help the Secretary of State's case. They disputed the decree of the Zanzibar Court as to the area and value of the lands and of the buildings and they set up the affirmative claim of 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in addition to the amount awarded. During the course of the argument the Indian authorities referred to by the Respondents were the Hedaya as a leading book and not the Tafa; Grady at p. 539 or Hamilton's Vol. 3 on Usurpation. Thakore Chunder Poramanik v. Ramdhone Bhuttacharji (6 Suth. W. R., p. 228; 3 Calcutta Law Reports, p. 194), Indian Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 23.

Appellant's counsel were not called on to reply.

The Attorney-General, The Solicitor-General, Mr. Mayne and Mr. Sutton for the Secretary of State.

Mr. Haldane, Q. C., and Mr. Branson for the Respondents.

Judgment reserved.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 805 OF 1900.

AMEER ALI, J.

STEVENS, J.

1900.

8, December.

In the matter of the petition of SHEOBARAN OJHA.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 4 (h), 250—Compensation for frivolous and vexatious accusation—Information given by a Police constable—Order for compensation passed against police-officer lodging information.

This was a rule granted by Pratt and Brett, JJ., on the 16th of October 1900, against an order of the Joint-Magistrate, in charge of the Giridih Sub-division of District Hazaribagh, dated the 1st of September 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The Petitioner, Sheobaran Ojha, a Police constable of the Kharakdih outpost, in the Sub-division of Giridih, gave information to the outpost that one Nunmonia Doshad of Kharakdih had in his possession four counterfeit coins (Rupees) which were found by the Petitioner on the 14th August 1900. The Sub-Inspector took up the enquiry, arrested Nunmonia and sent him up for trial under sec. 243, I. P. Code. The Joint-Magistrate of Giridih tried the accused Nunmonia and ultimately discharged him under sec. 253, Cr. P. Code, and recorded an order "enter mistake of fact, sec. 243, I. P. Code." The Magistrate found "that the constable either from feelings of enmity towards the accused or more probably because he wanted to shew what a smart detective he was deliberately resolved to run a case against the accused, though he must have known that the accused had acted in a perfectly bona fide way." He observed in his judgment as follows:—"There is just a modicum of truth in the case to prevent it being classified as false; but it is obviously both frivolous and vexatious. It is only right that the accused should be recompensed for the trouble and expense to which he has been put in defending this case; and I therefore call upon the complainant constable who has no business to prostitute his position as a constable by bringing a case of this nature to shew cause why he should not pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused under sec. 250, Cr. P. Code."

The Petitioner constable in shewing cause said that he acted bona fide in the discharge of his duties. But the Joint-Magistrate on the 1st of September 1900 made his previous order absolute and directed the constable Sheobaran to pay Rs. 50 to Nunmonia as compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. Code.

Against this order the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present rule to shew cause why the order for compensation should not be set aside on the ground that the Petitioner was a police-officer acting in the discharge of his duties and not a private prosecutor and that sec. 250, Cr. P. C., did not apply.

Held—That sec. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to a case instituted on information given by a police-officer.

Ramjeevan v. Durgacharan (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 979) followed.

Rule made absolute.

SUIT No. 237 OF 1900.

HARINGTON, J.

1900.

4, December.

AMRITA LALL CHOWDHRY

v.

CHARLES JAMBON and another.

Practice—Order, peremptory, to file written statement, non-compliance with—Transfer of Small Cause Court suit to be heard with High Court suit—Dismissal of High Court suit for non-prosecution—Retransfer Small Cause Court suit, power to.

This was an application on behalf of the Defendants for an order that the suit may be dismissed with costs for want of prosecution and that the suit instituted by them in the Small Cause Court, which had been transferred to this Court to be heard along with this suit, may be retransferred to the Small Cause Court. The facts are shortly these. In January 1900 Jambon & Co. instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court against the present Plaintiff and one Moti Lal Mukerjee for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 750 due by them in respect of certain mica transactions. In March 1900 the Plaintiff instituted this suit in this Court, alleging that the balance in respect of the said mica transactions stood in his favour and amounted to a sum exceeding the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. By an order of this Court, dated the 9th April 1900, the Small Cause Court suit was transferred to this Court to be heard together with the present suit. On the 28th June the Plaintiff was ordered to file his affidavit of documents within three weeks from date of the order. This he failed to do and on the 20th August the Defendants obtained a peremptory order against the Plaintiff directing him to file his affidavit of documents on or before the 3rd September and ordering that in default his suit should be dismissed with costs. The Plaintiff failed to comply with this order, and on the 12th September the Defendants made this application before Pratt, J., the Vacation Judge, who adjourned the matter till after the holidays. The application now came on for hearing.

Mr. Zorab for the Defendants:—The order of the 20th August not having been complied with, this suit ipso facto stood dismissed on the 3rd of September last. My application is really for a declaration that the suit is dismissed; the Court cannot go behind that order.

If this suit stands dismissed the Small Cause Court suit should be retransferred to that Court. The order for transfer says that it is to be heard with this suit. That cannot be done if this suit is dismissed.

HARINGTON, J.—What power have I to retransfer the suit.

Mr. Zorab.—Sec. 25, Civ. P. C., and cl. 13 of the Charter, which relate to the transfer of suits, do not say anything about retransfer, but the Court has power to vacate its own order if the purpose for which it was made subsequently fails. The purpose of the order having failed, the order of transfer should be vacated, and the Small Cause Court suit would automatically go back to that Court. It would be of no benefit either to the Plaintiff or the Defendants that costs should be incurred on the High Court scale in a suit for Rs. 750 and odd.

Mr. Robinson.—I have got my affidavit of documents ready and ask to be allowed to file it at once. According to the practice of this Court the suit was not dismissed by the order of the 20th August, but a further order has to be made. That is why the Defendant had to make this application. This is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court, but the order should only be made in the last resort and where a party is contumacious. I have an affidavit explaining why the orders of this Court were not complied with. He then cited Twycroft v. Grant [W. X. (1875), p. 201, 229].

Mr. J. N. Banerjee for Moti Lal Mukerjee.

Held.—That the Court has no power to go behind the order of the 20th August and the suit must be dismissed.

That this Court has no power to retransfer the Small Cause Court suit to be tried by that Court.

Babu Ashutosh De, Attorney for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Dignam & Co., Attorneys for the Defendants.

Babu Kumar Krisna Dutt for Moti Lal Mukerjee.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 164 of 1899.

BANERJEE, J.

BRETT, J.

1900.

28, November.

RAJAH PEARY MOHUN MUKHERJEE, Defendant, Appellant,

v.

NORENDRA KRISHNA MUKHO-PADHYA and others, Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Suit for recovery of money advanced—Debutter estate, representation of—Relief—Personal and against debutter estate—Limitation—Loan or donation—Order declaring liability of estate and directing accounts to be taken, whether appealable—Appellate Court, power of, to allow amendment of plaint—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs 2, 53, 582—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 36, 120.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th of April 1899, against the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Ghose, Subordinate Judge, third Court, Hughly, dated the 17th of February 1899.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Respondents to recover a certain sum of money against a debutter estate or in the alternative against the Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, or any of the other Defendants whom the Court might consider liable for the same.

Under a Will of the late Babu Jaga Mohun Mukherji, dated the 28th Bhadro 1247, B. S., certain properties were made debutter or trust properties and Babu Joy Kissen Mukherji was the first shebait or trustee respecting such properties. After the death of Babu Joy Kissen Mukherji, Babu Naba Kissen Mukherji became the shebait and on the death of Babu Naba Kissen, which took place on the 27th Bhadro 1297, B. S., the duties of the office of trustee devolved upon Babu Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee. During the incumbency of the last-mentioned shebait or trustee Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, c.s.t., interfered with his possession and management of the properties and litigations, civil and criminal, followed. The Raja tried to ignore the debutter character of the properties, and Babu Bejoy Krishna had to institute a suit for the establishment of his shebait right and the debutter character of the properties, Babu Bejoy Krishna succeeded in this case but pending the final decision of it died on the 29th January 1894. It was alleged in the plaint that owing to the acts of the Raja, Babu Bejoy Krishna could not realize the whole rent from the tenants of the mehals, but could with difficulty realize only a small portion of it; that he had to lay out large sums of money from his own pocket for the performance of the acts enjoined by the Will creating the trust estate, for the preservation and maintenance of such property and for wresting it from the grasp of a wrong-doer who claimed it as his secular property and on such allegations the sons of Babu Bejoy Krishna brought this suit for the recovery of the money advanced by them and their father from their own pockets for the purposes alluded to above, from the debutter properties.

The Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, alone contested the suit and his defence in the case was that the Plaintiffs had no cause of action; that the suit was bad on the ground of misjoinder of parties and causes of action; that it was barred under secs. 12, 13, and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code and by the law of limitation that the allegations in the plaint as to the wrongful acts of the Defendants were untrue; that the Defendant was not in any way either in law or in equity liable for the claim, and that the debutter estate was not liable for the claim.

The Plaintiffs made all the male descendants of Babu Jaga Mohun's family Defendants in the suit, as they could not ascertain who would be the next shebait, and they wanted the suit to be decided in their presence. The suit was brought within six years from the date of Bejoy Krishna's death. The Court below disallowed the objection of the Defendant in bar, and held that the Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, was personally liable for the claims so far as he had realized money belonging to the debutter estate, and it further held that for the remainder of the claim the debutter estate was liable; and having come to that conclusion it made a preliminary decree and appointed a commissioner and directed certain accounts to be taken.

Against that order of the lower Court the present appeal was preferred by the Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, and on his behalf it was contended, first, that the suit must fail so far as it sought relief against the debutter estate by reason of no one having been made a party Defendant as representing that estate; secondly, that the suit so far as it claimed reliefs against the Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, was not maintainable, as the Plaintiffs, who were only creditors of the debutter estate, were not entitled to advance any claim against any debtors of the estate; thirdly, that the claim was barred by limitation; and, fourthly, that the Plaintiffs, as the heirs and legal representatives of Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee, were not entitled to recover the money alleged to have been advanced by Bejoy Krishna to the debutter estate, as there was evidence to shew that the advances were not made as loans to the debutter estate and were not intended to be recovered from it.

At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the Plaintiffs Respondents, that no appeal lay as the order appealed against was not a decree.

Held.—That the order appealed against was a decree within the meaning of the definition of that term in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that an appeal lay against such an order.

That the Plaintiffs who claimed to be creditors of the debutter estate and sued for recovery of the money that was due to them were not entitled to claim any relief against the Defendant, Raja Peary Mohun Mukherjee, personally simply on the ground of his having realized money belonging to that estate.

That the claim against that Defendant personally was barred by limitation under Article 36 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act.

That as regards the claim against the debutter estate time began to run not from the date when the advances were made but from the date on which Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee died and the period of limitation was six years under Article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, and the claim against the debutter estate was not barred by limitation.

That the absence in the Will of Bejoy Krishna of any mention of or reference to any monies being due from the debutter estate and the destruction of the accounts of Bejoy Krishna in which those advances were entered cannot destroy the character of those advances and make them donations to the estate, and they do not evince any intention of wiping out the debt that was due to the debutter estate.

That in the absence of any definite statement by the Plaintiffs as to who the shebait of the debutter properties was against whom they asked for a decree making the debutter estate liable or in the absence of any prayer in the plaint asking the Court to determine for the purpose of the suit who was the shebait and the person entitled to represent the debutter estate and such determination by the Court none of the persons who were made Defendants in the case can be said to represent the estate.

That the order of the Court below declaring the liability of the debutter estate and directing accounts to be taken is bad and must be set aside.

That the Appellate Court has power, under sec. 582 read with sec. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to allow an amendment of the plaint if such amendment does not alter the character of the suit, and to send back the suit for retrial on amended plaints. Gagan Chand Kundoo v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (I. L. R. 9 Cal. 695), Dhani Ram Shaha v. Bhagirath Shaha (I. L. R. 22 Cal. 692) and Sheshamma v. Chennappa (I. L. R. 20 Mad. 467) referred to.

Mr. Hill (with him Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbarty, Mr. Hendra Nath Roy, Surendra Nath Roy, Tarit Mohun Das, Syama Prasanna Mozumdar and Manmatha Nath Mukherjee) for the Appellant.

Babus Saroda Charan Mitter and Anulya Churn Banerjee for the Respondents.

*Appeal allowed :
Fresh trial ordered.*

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT THE NEXT EXAMINATION OF candidates for admission as Attorneys will commence on Monday the 4th day of February next.

THREE WELL-KNOWN LONDON SOLICITORS ARE SAID to be under arrest on charges of fraud. The most lamentable case, perhaps, is Mr. Lake's. He has served as President of the Incorporated Law Society, and as Chairman of the Discipline Committee, and has been for many years one of the most active and respected members of the Council.

THE JUDGES FROM THEIR BETTER EXPERIENCE ON THE Bench are loath to make long Wills. Lord Russell's Will, by which he disposed of property worth £150,000, is said to be remarkable for its brevity, while Lord Mansfield, who had more wealth to dispose of than any Chief Justice that has ever been, disposed of it all very economically on a half-sheet of note-paper. But, perhaps, none has yet surpassed Sir James Fitz James Stephen, whose last testamentary wishes were expressed in the simple words "I give all my property to my wife whom I appoint sole executor."

LORD RUSSELL BEQUEATHED ALL HIS PROPERTY, "freehold and personal," to his wife. It is somewhat curious that after such a clear and concise expression of his wishes he should have thought fit to annex a schedule of his properties to his Will and then omitted to sign it. But such informality could not invalidate the Will in which his intentions were so clearly expressed.

LORD MANSFIELD THOUGH WRITING HIS WILL ON half a sheet of note-paper yet contrived to pen a longer document than most people would write in such a limited space. His economy of space stands in sad contrast to his extravagance of language. Having provided for specific legacies to his more intimate friends, he gave the rest of his possessions to his nephew in such superfluous terms: "Those who are dearest and nearest to me best know how to manage and improve, and ultimately, in their turn, to divide and sub-divide the good things of this world which I commit to their care, according to events and contingencies which it is impossible for me to foresee or trace through all the mazy labyrinths of time and chance." It was common in those days to indulge both in extravagance of language and of feelings in testamentary documents.

THE FOLLOWING INSTANCE GIVEN BY THE Law Journal is, nothing out of the common. "In making a very simple gift to his 'most virtuous, faithful, and dearly loved wife,' the Earl of Dorset took occasion to remark that he did not intend it to be regarded as 'any recompense of her rare and reverent virtues, of charity, modesty, fidelity, humility, secrecy and wisdom,' which he 'honoured, loved, and esteemed above all the transitory wealth and treasure of this world, and which therefore by no price of earthly riches could be valued, recompensed, or requited, but he desired it to be accepted as 'a true token and testimony of his unspeakable love, affection, estimation and reverence.'"

LORD ST. LEONARDS IS THE ONLY WELL-KNOWN Judge whose Will has been the subject of litigation. His testamentary wishes occasioned a probate suit, not because he was not careful in framing his Will, but because he omitted to take proper precautions for its safe custody.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—IN THE MATTER OF FOUR SOLICITORS. LYDALLS, FATHER and SONS v. MARK JAMESON LETCHER. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICE KENNEDY. 21st November 1900.

Solicitors—Undisclosed practice of receiving a share of profit in legal proceedings.

The applicant was a Barrister, named Stephens, who in his affidavit charged various misconduct on the part of J. H. Lydall, father and his two sons, partners in his firm, and also against Mark Jameson Letcher, all London solicitors. The committee of the Incorporated Law Society found that the senior Lydall for many years past, and the two sons since 1894, had introduced the Respondent Letcher and other solicitors, to act for parties in administration actions whose interests conflicted with those of the parties for whom the Lydalls were acting. And in all such cases the Respondents received from the solicitors introduced by them, agency on, or a share of their profit costs without disclosing that fact; and the committee found that the Respondents were guilty of professional misconduct within the meaning of the Solicitors Act, 1888.

In their considered judgment the Court held that such conduct was fraught with risk to the welfare of clients and wrong in principle and injurious to the proper administration of justice. The committee had found that the Respondents in carrying on this practice of undisclosed profit-making with solicitors who represented conflicting interests have been guilty of professional misconduct. The Court agreed with that and emphatically endorsed the grave censure which that finding involved.

As this was the first time the Court had to consider this particular kind of professional misconduct, the Court in its order leaned towards clemency, but if after this public condemnation and warning such misconduct should again come before the Court, the principal ground for mitigation will have disappeared.

The order was that the senior Lydall should be suspended for three months, and he and the others, all of them, should pay the costs of the Incorporated Law Society but not of Mr. Stephens because the graver charges he had formulated in his affidavit he was unable to maintain.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q. C., Mr. Pickford, Q. C., and Mr. Jones for the Respondents.

Mr. Trevor for the Society.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR R. COUCH.

1900.

10, November.

HASAN JAFAR and another, vs.

MAHAMMAD ANKARI.

Privy Council, order of, application to vary—Point not raised during hearing—Mistake.

In this appeal their Lordships in their judgment, dated 18th May 1899 (4 C. W. N. 65 at p. 70 or L. R. 26 I. A. 229 at p. 235), declared as follows:—

“And it should be declared that in the events which happened Karam Ali became and was as to one-fourth of the estates comprised in the sanad granted to him trustee for Sadek Husain and that the Appellants, as representatives of Sadek Husain, are now entitled to recover one-fourth of those estates.”

Upon these Appellants attempting to execute this decree as regards the 13 villages comprised in the talukdari estate of which Karam Ali was the talukdar, the Respondent objected as to two out of the 13 villages on the ground that they were not included in the sanad but acquired subsequently at regular settlement by Karam Ali. The Courts in India rejected Appellants' application quoad these two villages on the ground that the decree of the Privy Council only awarded one-fourth of the villages included in the decree.

The matter now came on upon a petition praying Her Majesty in Council to vary that order so that the Petitioners may not be deprived of their interest in the two villages which were an integral part of Karam Ali's talukdari estate.

Mr. Cohen, Q. C.—My Lords, in this case I appear with my learned friend Mr. Arathoon for the Petitioners. It is an application praying that an order in Council made upon the 29th May may be varied.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Were you for the Appellants in the case on the former occasion?

Mr. Cohen.—Yes.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Nothing was said about the two villages at the time.

Mr. Cohen.—There were no distinctions drawn between the two villages.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The particular circumstances in which they were situated were not called to our attention.

Mr. Cohen.—Not at all.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—I suppose you were perfectly ignorant of the point now raised, as we were?

Mr. Cohen.—Yes.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—We were all ignorant.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes, the Respondent's case drew no distinction at all, nor did the argument of the Respondent.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The whole case was treated as standing or falling by the establishment of a trust.

Mr. Cohen.—That is exactly so. If we had objected that the sanad did not comprise those two villages I should have mentioned it.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It does appear from the papers, but it certainly was not called directly to our attention. I do not think any thing was said about it.

Mr. Cohen.—No, nor was it at all material.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I do not know. I think it was material.

SIR R. COUCH.—It seems to have been assumed that the sanad included all that was settled.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The non-mention of it creates the present difficulty.

SIR R. COUCH.—I do not see any thing in the proceedings to show what villages were actually included in the settlement? How does it appear? It seems to have been rather assumed that the sanad showed what was settled.

Mr. Cohen.—I think I can show your Lordships that that is not so.

SIR R. COUCH.—Look at the plaint, p. 2, 6th paragraph.

Mr. Cohen.—The plaint enumerates the 13 villages.

SIR R. COUCH.—No, the plaint has got a list of villages.

Mr. Cohen.—The plaint does not mention the sanad at all.

SIR R. COUCH.—It gives a list of the villages claimed.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The whole of the argument turns on the effect of the sanad.

Mr. Cohen.—No.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The argument before us did.

Mr. Cohen.—I think your Lordships will find not; nor did the judgment which turned really on the settlement which was made.

SIR R. COUCH.—It is true the argument turned on the settlement, but it was assumed that the sanad showed what was settled. The sanad was the document to be looked at, to see what was actually settled.

Mr. Cohen.—If your Lordships will allow me to state the facts I can state them in a few words.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The claim as presented to us on the one side, was that the sanad conferred an absolute title upon the person to whom the Government granted the land; on the other hand that there was a trust for the representative.

Mr. Cohen.—Would your Lordships kindly look at the statement of defence page 11, paragraph 18.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—That is your lodged case.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes, at the bottom of page 10. "That Hakim Karam Ali, after the meeting during the summary settlement, applied for the settlement of the whole taluka in his name offering however to give Plaintiff and Ali Mehdi their shares when they came back, and paid what was due to him."

SIR R. COUCH.—This is the Defendant's written statement.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes. "That the settlement of the whole taluka was ultimately on 8th November 1859 made unconditionally and absolutely with Hakim Karam Ali in distinct repudiation of the claims of Plaintiff and Ali Mehdi. That the Government granted a talukdari sanad to Hakim Karam Ali in respect of the estate under dispute except the villages Pyaripur, Sarayan and Daulatpur."

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—That is so.

SIR R. COUCH.—It was not gone into.

Mr. Cohen.—No, but then it goes on to say "that Hakim Karam Ali sued for and obtained settlement decrees for villages Pyaripur, Sarayan and Daulatpur."

That falls within the 3rd section of the Act of 1869.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Our attention was not called to this certainly.

Mr. Cohen.—No, because we say there was a settlement made.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I do not think the settlement decrees were in evidence at all.

Mr. Cohen.—The sanad was in evidence on the record I think.

Mr. Arathoon.—No, the sanad was not in the record.

Mr. Cohen.—The settlement decrees were in the record; that is at p. 20 "settlement of village Zaidpur."

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It is the summary settlement at page 20. It is in the regular settlement that I understand the claim was made for the two additional villages.

Mr. Cohen.—That is so. The regular settlement is not in evidence, the fact is, it was assumed throughout that the fate of the 13 villages depended entirely upon the question whether or not they were held in trust as regards one-fourth for the Plaintiff.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Of course there were many other points argued below, but nothing but that was argued here.

Mr. Cohen.—If your Lordships look at the judgment or in the Respondent's case there is no distinction drawn at all.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—That is so.

Mr. Cohen.—Kindly look at the judgment on p. 149. It is the judgment of the District Judge; I think this judgment makes it quite clear; reads from "the property which is the subject" to the words "sec. 3 of Act 1 of 1869, became part of this taluka." I should like to direct attention to that section, reads the section. It is stated here "more landed property" that means these two villages, "was decreed to Hakim, Karam Ali at the first regular settlement of the Province of Oudh and that property under sec. 3, Act 1 of 1869, became part of his taluka."

So that under the Act of 1869 these two villages became part of the taluka, and the only question that was argued was whether the whole taluka was not held in trust as regards one-fourth share. In the judgment of the Court below they said that the land was afterwards acquired; your Lordships' judgment in effect stated that on the whole their Lordships were of opinion that the Appellants had made out their case as to one-fourth of the estate. That really means the whole taluka. It was, however, an accident that those words were put in "property comprised in the sanad." The sanad was not in at all; it was not part of the record. It was really admitted throughout that the question was not whether some of these villages were held in trust, but whether the whole of the villages were. Your Lordships were of opinion that the case was made out as to one-fourth of the estate. That is the taluka which under the Act of 1869 comprised these two villages. The Judicial Commissioner in the very same case says exactly the same thing "Karam Ali died on the 22nd August 1879. At the time of his death he was the recorded proprietor of the taluka which then consisted of the estates abovementioned, and villages which had been decreed to Karam Ali at the first regular settlement."

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We do not know why they were decreed to him or on what ground he claimed them originally when the suit was instituted. You claimed the whole taluka, your case was that the man died intestate, and you were entitled to the whole taluka.

Mr. Cohen.—We claim the whole; they set up the sanad really and say that these villages were granted to them and their name only was inserted on the sanad.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Your point was that although their name was inserted he was a trustee.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—And after the sanad was granted you acquired some other villages. You may have acquired them by reason of your position as holding the sanad. I do not know. Have you an opponent here to-day?

Mr. Cohen.—No, I ought to tell your Lordships something which is not mentioned in the petition.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Are you asking now for leave to appeal from this?

Mr. Cohen.—No.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Because what can we do.

Mr. Cohen.—I am asking that the order may be varied in form. There is authority for saying that your Lordships can do that, that you can recommend Her Majesty to make another order. I ought to state that when this mistake, if I may so call it, was discovered, my clients applied to the Indian Courts for execution to obtain possession of the 13 villages and the Indian Courts said (and if I may say so with great deference I think quite rightly) that they could only look at the actual words of the order and therefore they dismissed the application. We then at once gave notice to the other side that we should apply to your Lordships. We gave them notice in June. They are not, as far as I know, here to oppose our application. It was evidently a mere slip and nothing else.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I think it is very likely if it had been mentioned at the time, they would have admitted that they were governed by the same rule. But we have not got them here to-day.

Mr. Cohen.—In June we gave notice so that they have had ample time.

Mr. Arathoon.—The petition was served on them on the 1st of June.

Mr. Wheeler.—We issued a summons.

Mr. Cohen.—They have had an opportunity, we served on them the petition. The fact is they know that it was a mere slip. The point was never raised. Your Lordships would not have allowed them to raise it.

Mr. Arathoon.—The Judicial Commissioner throughout speaks of the claim to the whole estate, which includes these villages.

Mr. Cohen.—It is a mere mistake in the form of the judgment, arising from the fact that no body at the time drew any distinction—on the argument I mean—between the two villages and the 11 other villages and they knew that no distinction could really be drawn, as the regular settlement followed what had been done previously. If the first eleven villages were held in trust so were these two.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—That may be or may not be so, but that is not the way it is stated in their defence. They said they sued for and obtained those villages.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—There seems to have been a contest about it, but really we do not know the history of the subsequent regular settlement.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I think very likely these villages are effected by the same trust. Even if it had been mentioned at the time I do not think we should have had materials enough for us to decide it, if they contested it. Very likely they would not contest it.

Mr. Cohen.—They did not contest it.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—But it was not raised.

Mr. Cohen.—Will your Lordships look at the Respondent's case and see what kind of defence is raised. They might have raised it. As your Lordship notices that appeared from the pleadings. Now let us look at the Respondent's case for a moment. I think your Lordships will see that I am right in saying that they admit there was no distinction. (Counsel here read from pages 2 and 3 of the Respondent's case).

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I do not see any reference whatever to it.

Mr. Cohen.—There is no reference whatever, and no distinction drawn at all, not the slightest. I have looked through it most carefully. Look at the reasons given. I pointed out that it was included in the plaint.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Because he claimed the whole of the estate as heir.

Mr. Cohen.—And then I read the statement of defence in which it is stated that the sanad did not comprise the two villages, but at the regular settlement.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—No, it is not the regular settlement. It is very likely you are entitled to this, but it is an absolutely different equity you see. The equity on which you recovered the property comprised in the sanad is because the Government imposed a trust upon it. There is a further equity because, having got this property by reason of the sanad granted on those conditions, you then obtained some further property bound by the same trust. That is a different equity.

Mr. Cohen.—They did not raise that point at all, look at the reasons.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—What seems to me is this, that there would be no materials before us on which we could have decided, unless they had chosen to bring it before us. I do not think you ought to be barred from raising the present question, but I do not see how you could raise it in this stage unless you could get them to agree. There is some danger that res judicata may be set up.

Mr. Cohen.—Your Lordships will be inclined perhaps to vary the order, if necessary. It will be unjust to allow the judgment to be a bar.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I am inclined to think it would not be, but one wants to be safe.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It is an ex parte application.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes, we gave notice to the other side. We served the petition. So they knew all the facts.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—And they have not appeared.

Mr. Cohen.—They really do not dispute this fact. We served the order in June.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—On the English solicitors.

Mr. Arathoon.—Yes, on the solicitors here who appeared in the other case.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Then of course they had no instructions.

Mr. Cohen.—They had ample time.

Mr. Arathoon.—The petition was served on the 1st June and we have given them every opportunity to communicate. They say they have no instructions to appeal.

Mr. Cohen.—We from time to time gave them notice, that this was to have come on at the last sittings.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Do you mean they returned you no answer, took no notice of the service of the petition?

Mr. Cohen.—They say they have no instructions.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—There is no affidavit I suppose.

Mr. Cohen.—No, they state they have no instructions to appear.

Mr. Arathoon.—I am told by Mr. Wheeler that they have got a vague letter saying they cannot appear—they will not appear. The clients know of it in India.

Mr. Cohen.—They have been served and they say they will not appear.

Mr. Wheeler.—Yes.

Mr. Cohen.—Mr. Wheeler says the answer was they will not appear. The point was never raised and was never intended to be raised.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—If it had been raised and if they had objected, I do not think we should have been in a position to deal with those two villages at all. You might have expressly reserved your right to sue for them. Whether that would be an advantage or not I do not know.

Mr. Cohen.—But they did not raise it.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—You did not raise it. Nobody paid any attention to it.

Mr. Cohen.—No, I thought it had often been ruled that your Lordships will not allow either party to depart from the assumption on which the whole case proceeded. It proceeded on the assumption that if he were entitled to any of these villages he was entitled to the thirteen. Your Lordships on looking at the pleadings, at the judgment of the Court below and at the reasons given by the Respondents cannot help, I confidently submit, coming to the conclusion that the whole case proceeded upon the assumption that if we were entitled to have a share in any of these villages, we were entitled to a share of all. That being the case I should have thought according to the practice uniformly adopted by all Courts, your Lordships would not allow another point to be raised now. They were all in the taluka.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—When you come to execution you find that the document on which your whole case turns does not include these two villages. I think it is very likely if I were at liberty to guess that the sanad is the foundation of the whole title, the two villages would have to share the fate of the eleven.

Mr. Cohen.—When your Lordships delivered judgment if I had been wise enough and quick enough to have told your Lordships that that does not comprise two villages your Lordships would at once have said—

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We could at once have appealed to the other side and asked what they had to say about it.

Mr. Cohen.—I think not, your Lordships would not have heard the other side, and would not have allowed them to say there was any distinction.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There are really two very different equities.

Mr. Cohen.—It was not necessary for us to give any evidence on the point. The whole case proceeded in India and here on the assumption that if we were entitled to eleven of these villages we were entitled to the thirteen.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—I suspect there must have been a further enquiry if you raised the point at the Board.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We are asked to alter a judgment.

Mr. Cohen.—Simply to say that the estate comprised in the plaint is so and so.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We cannot alter it.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes, there are cases showing that if there has been a mistake in the form of the judgment your Lordships can alter it.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I do not think that there is any mistake.

Mr. Cohen.—I should have submitted with deference that we were entitled to a judgment for the villages comprised in the plaint.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—If you had asked that I should have asked what your title was with regard to these two villages.

Mr. Cohen.—It is not disputed that we are entitled to them, it is only disputed that all these villages were granted absolutely to the Defendants; that was the argument and the sole argument. We succeeded upon that and are therefore entitled to our share of the 13 villages. At any rate we are entitled to be protected.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The whole controversy turned on the sanad and the circumstances under which the sanad was granted.

Mr. Cohen.—No, my Lord. I assure your Lordships not. If your Lordships will look at the judgment delivered, you will find you did not mention the sanad at all, not as a material part of the case, your Lordships will find it all turned on what the Chief Commissioner signed.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It is the sanad that gives the Talukdar the title by which he resisted your claim. The question was whether he got it under circumstances making him a trustee for you. That was the whole controversy decided in your favour. Then it turned out that there were two villages not acquired by the sanad, but acquired by a subsequent claim made at the regular settlement. I think it very likely that the sanad was at the bottom of the whole matter and the two villages must come under the same consideration, but it is possible there were considerations besides that which induced the Collector to make the regular settlement with the Talukdar.

Mr. Cohen.—In those proceedings it was assumed that there was no difference between the eleven villages and the two villages as regards the legal position of the Plaintiff and Defendant. That being so would a party be allowed to raise an entirely new point. There is another question looking at the issues at p. 61.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I think if this had been raised at the time, all we could have done would be to direct some enquiry as to these two villages, with perhaps an intimation of opinion, that if the sanad was really the cause of their being included in the regular settlement, they would come under the same principle of trust, but I cannot conceive that we could have done anything more than that.

Mr. Cohen.—I will not trouble your Lordships long, the issues are at p. 61.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There is no issue about this at all.

Mr. Cohen.—None.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It would be a very hazardous thing to go behind the decree.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I do not think we can possibly alter the decree. I think if it had been raised at the hearing and before the decree was pronounced, it would be a question whether the other side admitted it or not, and if they did not the utmost we could have done would have been to leave it open to you.

Mr. Cohen.—An order which your Lordships have made in one or two cases not very dissimilar to this case is this; instead of varying the order to direct that the Plaintiff may claim these two villages and make use of the old record.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There is no information about how he got these two villages except that he sued for them after a certain date after he got the sanad.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—At the regular settlement a separate claim was made and there appears to have been litigation about it, and a decree was made in favour of the Talukdar.

Mr. Cohen.—Yes, I think your Lordships will agree with me on this point. The 3rd section speaks of property acquired afterwards by a decree.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—I think the judgment is quite right in regard to the construction of that. That section is brought to the attention of the Court and what they say is "that section does not provide that the villages or lands which may be decreed to a Talukdar," reading down to the words "when the summary settlement was made." That is all and I think that is right.

Mr. Cohen.—I am not quarrelling with the judgment. The 3rd section also says "or which may have been or may be decreed to him by the Court of an officer engaged in making the first regular settlement."

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It does not say they are to be held on the same trust.

Mr. Cohen.—That is true. It was assumed throughout that the effect of the decree was exactly similar to the effect of the sanad; that decree followed the sanad and intended to do so, that was assumed throughout. At any rate your Lordships will not hold it to be a bar against bringing an action for the two villages.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It certainly was not intended that you should be barred.

Mr. Cohen.—If your Lordships say that, that is enough.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We cannot say that you are not barred. It certainly was not intended that you should be, because it really was not raised before us, our attention was not called to it.

Mr. Cohen.—The authorities show that we shall not be barred if the question was not raised at all.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Lord Hobhouse, you agree with that, don't you, that the question was not raised at all before us?

LORD HOBHOUSE.—No it was not, there was not a suggestion that such a question existed.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Not on either side.

Mr. Cohen.—So little did the parties think that the case depended on the sanad that the sanad was not sent up at all in the record.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We know what the sanad was.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It was in common form. If I recollect rightly we asked the same question in that as in other suits as to why the sanad was not here. Oh, it is in the common form.

Mr. Cohen.—Your Lordships are of opinion that we ought to institute another suit.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—We cannot advise you.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It is open to you to sue.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It is open to you to sue; this particular question was not raised before us; and if it had been and disputed on the other side there were no materials on which to decide it. We cannot go further than that.

Mr. Cohen.—I suppose we should have to show that the decree—

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—That you obtained this additional land by reason of the sanad.

Mr. Cohen.—That is what we shall have to show.

Mr. Arathoon.—We can easily show that if we are not barred by limitation.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There may be a question whether you are barred by limitation, the point was not brought to our attention and most certainly we did not intend to decide it. Perhaps your opponents will be reasonable, I don't know.

Mr. Cohen.—I should think they will be reasonable.

C. W. A.

Application refused.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 702 of 1900.

STANLEY J.	}	QUAZIE MOHUMMAR ROHMAN,
1900.		Plaintiff,
6, December.	}	n.
		SARAT CHUNDER DUTT, Defendant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Chap. XXXIX—Leave to defend, extension of time to apply for.

This was a suit by the Plaintiff as endorsee for value of a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the Defendant, instituted under Chap. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code, on the 30th August 1900. Summons was issued in the form given in Sch. IV, No. 172 of the Code, and the Defendant was given ten days from date of service to appear and apply for leave to defend if he intended to defend the action.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri was instructed by the Defendant to apply for leave to defend on the 20th of November 1900, the Defendant alleging that he had been served in the beginning of the month of October 1900, during the close holidays. The Courts re-opened on the 19th of November and the verified petition of the Defendant had been affirmed on that day. Counsel stating that having regard to the date when the application was being made a question of limitation arose, his Lordship directed notice to issue to the Plaintiff. The application was finally heard on the 3rd of December 1900.

Mr. R. Mitra, with him Mr. A. Chaudhuri, for the Defendant.—The Defendant is a resident of Hooghly, and this Court has held that a person who does not reside within the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court should get sufficient time to appear and ask for leave, Groom v. Wilson (I. L. R. 3 Cal. 539).

Pontifex, J., in that case held, that inasmuch as sec. 532, Civ. P. C., provided that the summons was to be in the form given in the schedule, or in such other form as the High Court may from time to time prescribe, power to extend the time is given to the High Court by implication.

STANLEY, J.—Can a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Court alter the form?

Mitra.—Under sec. 36 of the Letters Patent a single Judge has the same power as the High Court.

He also relied upon Chandra Kant Roy v. Pogose (3 B. L. R. O. S., p. 83), Joseph v. Sokano (9 B. L. R. 411). He also referred to certain unreported cases.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, for the Plaintiff.—Under sec. 4 of the Limitation Act, the Court must take the point of limitation, it cannot be waived. Art. 159 of that Act expressly provides that the Defendant is to apply for leave to defend within ten days from the date of the service of summons. We say that the Defendant was served in the fourth week of September. It is very doubtful as to whether the Defendant was not barred even on the 19th of November when the Courts re-opened. He referred to Ersatkar v. Gyan Moni Dabi (before Sale, J., 12th March 1895, unreported) and Madhub Lall Durgur v. Hoopendra Narain Sen (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 573). The cases referred to by Mr. Mitra all refer to extension of time of service, not the extension of time to appear after service. Sec. 534 gives the Defendant a right under special circumstances to set aside the decree and if necessary to stay or set aside execution, and that is the proper and the only course open to the Defendant.

R. Mitra in reply.—Sec. 534, Civ. P. C., supports my contention. If the Court can set aside the decree under special circumstances, such as exist in this case, it is merely a technical objection to say that the Court cannot give leave to the Defendant to defend the action before decree. The Court has got to be satisfied that the Plaintiff is entitled to a decree and there is an inherent power in the Court to order such steps or proceedings to be taken as may lead to the administration of justice.

STANLEY, J., delivered a considered judgment, holding that the Court had no power to extend the time. The cases cited go to the extent of showing that the period of service may be extended under certain circumstances and that execution might be stayed. His Lordship referred to the cases cited and the unreported cases of Narendra Nath Bose v. Hari Lal Mullick (Suit No. 599 of 1898. O'Kinealy, J., 22nd December 1898). The proper course was to apply to set aside the decree under sec. 534, Civ. P. C.

MACLEAN, C. J.	}	EMPRESS
1900.		n.
7, December.	}	MUNGROO BHOOJAH.

Examination of the prisoner by the committing Magistrate—Committing Magistrate, right to call, to give evidence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 255, 287, 342 and 364.

At the close of the case for the prosecution the Standing Counsel tendered the examination of the prisoner by the committing Magistrate.

Mr. E. P. Ghose, counsel for the prisoner, objected to such examination being read to the jury. The statement made by the prisoner in answer to the Magistrate's question was made in Hindustani and I submit that the translation recorded by the Magistrate is not a correct one. Further in this case the prisoner's statement should have been recorded in the language in which he gave it, that is in Hindustani; for it is quite practicable for the committing Magistrate, Mr. Rahim, who is thoroughly conversant with Hindustani to record the statement in that language. See the remarks of the Full Bench in Queen Empress v. Nilmadhub Mitter. Again the provisions of sec. 364 have not been complied with, for no answer has been given to the first question. "You have heard the evidence against you." Lastly, in direct contravention of the provisions of sec. 255, sub-sec. (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is nothing in the record to show that the charge was read over and explained to the prisoner before he was asked whether he was guilty or had any defence to make.

MACLEAN, C. J.—If your objection is well founded then in every case at every Criminal Sessions of this Court over which I have presided, and over which other Judges have presided the examination of the prisoner before the committing Magistrate has been erroneously admitted.

Mr. Ghose.—In this case I submit it was practicable for the committing Magistrate to take down the prisoner's statement in the language in which it was made, and that under sec. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code this ought to have been done.

The Standing Counsel (P. O'Kinealy) for the Crown.—I have never heard this objection raised before; and both the clerk of the Crown and Mr. Hume, who for the last twenty-seven years has been the Government Prosecutor in the Police Court, tell me that they have never heard it raised before. The prisoner was questioned generally on the case by the committing Magistrate as provided for by sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code and under sec. 287 of that Code I am bound to tender the examination of the accused by the committing Magistrate. Every provision of sec. 364 has been complied with. The language both of this Court and the Police Court is English.....(stopped by the Court).

MACLEAN, C. J.—I overrule the objection.

The prisoner's counsel then asked the Court to call Mr. Rahim, the committing Magistrate, and at his request the Court allowed that gentleman to be called. At the close of his examination, MACLEAN, C. J.—I have allowed the committing Magistrate to be called at the request of the prisoner's counsel, but I wish it to be distinctly understood that this is not to be regarded, so far as I am personally concerned, as a precedent for calling the committing Magistrate in other cases. I consider that such a course would be open to the gravest objection.

The examination of the prisoner before the committing Magistrate was then read to the jury.

GAUDNA BIBI and others, Decree-holders, Petitioners,

v.

JABANULLA MANDUL, Applicant, Opposite Party.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, B. C.), sec. 153—Revisional powers—Jurisdiction—District Judge—Additional District Judge.

This was a Rule obtained against the order of the Additional District Judge of Jessore, dated the 30th of May 1900, reversing the order of the Munsif of that place, dated the 10th of March 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The decree-holders abovenamed in execution of a decree for rent obtained by them against their raiya, Sadon Mandul and another, put up to sale the raiya holding and purchased the same themselves on the 18th of August 1898. Thereupon the opposite party abovenamed, an under-raiya holding under the raiya, the judgment-debtor, made an application under sec. 311, C. P. C., for setting aside the sale. On the 10th of March 1900, the Munsif before whom the application was made rejected the same on the ground that the applicant being merely an under-raiya had no locus standi to make the application under sec. 311, C. P. C. Subsequently on an application by the said applicant on the 31st May 1900 the Additional District Judge of Jessore set aside the said order of the Munsif purporting to act under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and remanded the case for investigation into the merits. Against that order the decree-holders moved the High Court and on their behalf it was contended that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to interfere as the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only empowered the District Judge to exercise revisional powers and the distinction between a District Judge and an Additional District Judge was clear from cl. (a) of the section.

Held—The Additional Judge had no jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the Munsif as the law made a distinction between a District Judge and an Additional District Judge.

Babu Sharat Chandra Roy Chowdhury for the Petitioners.

Rule made absolute.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE UNDERSTAND THAT TWO IMPORTANT APPEALS from the Punjab Chief Court are now pending before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The case of Ahmed Yar Khan and others (the Khakwani family of Mooltan) against the Secretary of State for India concerns the Hijwat caudals fifty miles long in the Mailsi Tehsil which were made by that family at a cost of 9 lakhs of rupees in 1861. The Government denies the proprietary right of the Plaintiffs and both Courts have decided in favour of Government. In the other case the present Nawab of Tank, Dera Ismail Khan District, is the Respondent and the Appellant his uncle is claiming one moiety of the Tank Ilaka.

WE NOTE THAT AN APPEAL in forma pauperis (Healey v. New South Wales Bank) from the Supreme Court of Victoria was heard before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on 27th November last. It is satisfactory to find that the appeal although preferred against concurrent decisions on facts was determined by their Lordships after an examination of the evidence. The Board was comprised of five Judges and was presided over by the Lord Chancellor. The Appellant was characterized as a fraudulent knave who had cheated the Bank and it was stated that the appeal was an audacious one yet their Lordships did not dismiss the appeal before "looking to the evidence for themselves" they were clearly of opinion that the Appellant was not to be believed." After this we may safely conclude that the practice alluded to by the Board with regard to concurrent findings of fact in the case of Moung Tha v. Moung Pan (4 C. W. N. 808) is by no means a hard and fast one.

WE ARE UNABLE TO TAKE THE VIEW ADOPTED BY the Court of Appeal in the case of Franklyn v. Chaplin we report to-day. The precedent set therein appears to us to be one fraught with great disadvantages and are likely to lend encouragement to actions for breach of promise. The leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction appears to us to have been granted on too slender grounds and may be the basis of similar applications by women choosing to harass men who are away from the country and at a great distance, by statements unsupported by anything in writing or by any other corroborative evidence.

INTEREST AFTER DECREE IN SUITS ON MORTGAGE.

As was pointed out by us some time ago (1 C. W. N. cccix and cccxvii), the doubt and hesitation which had been felt by the Allahabad High Court as to the legality of the practice of awarding interest to a mortgagee beyond the day fixed for payment into Court by the mortgagor of the money due on the mortgage has at last been set at rest by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharajah of Bharatpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (5 C. W. N. 137), which we report in our present issue. The Privy Council point out in clear and unambiguous language that if it be held that the effect of sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act has been to disallow interest to the mortgagee beyond the day fixed for payment into Court of the mortgage money, it works a startling abridgment of the remedies of mortgagees as previously understood. Their Lordships lay stress on the fact that, with the exception of the Allahabad High Court, it has always been the practice of the Calcutta and the Madras High Court to allow such interest to the mortgagee and that such practice is in conformity with sec. 97 of the Transfer of Property which is in pari materid with sec. 88 of the same Act. It is noteworthy, however, that recently a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court relying on Rameshar v. Mahomed (2 C. W. N. 633; 25 I. A. 179; 26 Cal. 43) may be said to have anticipated the present decision of the Privy Council (Bakar v. Udit, I. L. R. 21 All. 361). Their Lordships observe in the course of their present decision that the Allahabad High Court rested a little undue weight on the case of Rameshwar Koer v. Syed Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan and others (L. R. 25 I. A. 179; I. L. R. 26 Cal. 39; 2 C. W. N. 633) and that the point now in issue had not been raised in that case. Be that as it may, it is satisfactory to note that the controversy which had been started by the case of Amolak Ram (I. L. R. 19 All. 174) is now at an end.

We wish we could say the same of another point on which apparently the Courts in India are divided in opinion, we mean the question whether the rate of interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment should be at the contract rate or at what is called a reasonable rate. In the case of Rameshwar Koer v. Syed Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan and others (L. R. 25 I. A. 179; I. L. R. 26 Cal. 39; 2 C. W. N. 633) the Privy Council upheld the High Court of Calcutta which had altered the rate of interest from 4 per cent. as decreed by Court below to the stipulated rate of 12 per cent. and made it payable from the date of the institution of the suit until realization. Their Lordships observed "the second ground taken for the appeal is that the High Court have altered the rate of interest after the date of suit from 4 to 12 per cent. The Subordinate Judge evidently considered that the case fell within sec. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code which gives a discretion to the Court in such matters. The High Court founded their order on secs. 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, which indicate clearly enough that the ordinary decree in a suit of this kind should direct accounts allowing the rate of interest provided by the mortgage up to the date of realization. * * * The mortgagor cannot complain if he is made to pay no more than he contracted to pay." These remarks of their Lordships were held by the Allahabad High Court in Bakar v. Udit, I. L. R. 21 All. 361, to decide that interest must be allowed at the stipulated rate up to the date of realization. On the other hand, the Madras High Court in the recent case of Commercial Bank of India v. Ateendralayya, I. L. R. 23 Mad. 637, have held that by the date of realization the Privy Council could only have meant the date fixed for payment into Court as contemplated by sec. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act. Sec. 86, no doubt, does not expressly provide for the payment of any interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment into Court but it is doubtful how far that alone would justify any departure from such express dictum of the Judicial Committee as referred to above. Mr. Justice Shephard points out that after the day fixed for payment in the case of a mortgage decree, the rights of parties are merged in the decree and that there is no warrant for giving subsequent interest at the contract rate. The practice in England lends support to Mr. Justice Shephard's view and subsequent interest is there only allowed in those cases where such interest is secured by express or implied contract. (See the cases of Popple v. Sylvester, 22 Ch. D. 98 52 L. J., Ch. 54, and Re Sneyd, 52 L. J., Ch. 724, also Fisher on Mortgage, Art. 1555). In view of this conflict we earnestly wish that the High Courts in India may before long have further light from the Lords of the Privy Council for their guidance.

Review.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE with Notes. By J. O'Kinealy, Esq. New Edition, revised by C. P. Caspersz, Esq., I. C. S. Calcutta: Messrs. S. K. Lahiri & Co.

We welcome a new edition of O'Kinealy's commentaries on the Indian Penal Code. The cry of reclaiming this work from oblivion and presenting it to the profession in its present form is due Mr. Caspersz who has bestowed considerable labour on it. Although the larger compilations of Mayne, Starling, Agnew and Hamilton are in much more common use yet this book supplies a want which has long been felt. The annotations in this work are concise and to the point. The arrangement is good and the references to case law is exhaustive including as it does even the decisions of the Punjab Chief Court. The busy practising lawyer will undoubtedly find this handy edition of the Penal Code very convenient to consult in every day work. Messrs. Lahiri & Co. also deserve to be congratulated on the very satisfactory get up of the book.

COURT OF APPEAL.—FRANKLYN v. CHAPLIN. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORD JUSTICE COLLINS. 26th November 1900.

Service of writ out of jurisdiction—Breach of promise action—Corroborative evidence—Order XI, Rule 1 (e)

In this case which was a breach of promise action and the Defendant proprietor of an hotel in Griqualand East was away in South Africa, Mr. Justice Day had acceded Plaintiff's request to serve writ of summons on him there. The word "contract" in the above order it was argued, on this application for leave to appeal on behalf of the Defendant should be understood as meaning an enforceable contract, while in this case it was not so, because beyond her own word regarding the breach she had not produced any corroborative evidence. It was contended that her application for service out of jurisdiction should fail until she satisfied the Court that she had corroborative evidence of which fact her affidavit said nothing.

The Court held that that was not necessary as a matter of law, what the Plaintiff had done was sufficient to give the Court discretionary power and Mr. Justice Day had exercised his discretion and no cause was shown for interference.

Mr. Foa made this ex parte application for the Defendant Henry Chaplin.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re THE PERL SETTLED ESTATES. Before LORDS JUSTICES SMITH, WILLIAMS and ROMER. 25th June 1900.

Pictures and heirlooms, variation of order concerning same.

This was an application on behalf of Sir Robert Peel to vary the order of the Court of Appeal made on the 4th December 1899 permitting the sale of certain pictures and heirlooms. The heirlooms sold fetched £67,000 whereas it was anticipated the time that only about £30,000 would be recovered, on that value the trustees of the settlement undertook to secure a house for Lady Peel and her infant son in England and setting apart annually for Lady Peel. As the sale-proceeds were more than double it was sought on behalf of Sir Robert that £1,000 a year should be paid to him personally.

The Court refused to accede to the application, the order sought to be raised was made for the benefit of Lady Peel and the infant and the mere act that a larger sum was recovered was no ground or the desired variation.

The application was refused with costs which was to come out of the income of the heirloom fund.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q. C., and Mr. Lincoln Reed or the Applicant.

Mr. Ellgood for the trustees was not heard.

Application refused.

COURT OF APPEAL.—SHAW v. TAPP AND BAMBRIDGE. Before MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY and COLLINS. 31st May 1900.

Company law—Directors' liability—Resolutions of directors—Issue of shares—Measure of damages—Time for ascertaining value.

The Plaintiffs Shaw and others as also the Defendants Tapp and Bambridge and one Holland were all shareholders in a Company called the St. Helens Development Syndicate Limited. Tapp, Bambridge and Holland were also directors thereof. The two former were the first directors. The questions in this suit principally arose under cl. 88 of the articles of Association of the Company which authorized the directors and their assigns under certain circumstances to exercise the option within two years of the incorporation of the Company to have allotted to themselves their assigns or nominees ordinary shares but not exceeding 15,000 shares within a certain time. Five thousand shares were issued to them (Tapp and Bambridge) or their nominees in pursuance of the above article. Beyond this further shares were issued to them or their nominees in pursuance of resolutions of the directors which gave the two last-named additional similar options. The Plaintiffs claimed payment by Tapp and Bambridge of £43,000.

Mr. Justice North held that the Defendants were not liable for the allotments under the said cl. 88; but they were liable for those shares which they had secured under the directors' resolutions; these were not lawfully obtained and the directors were liable for misfeasance regarding same.

The appeal of the directors from that decision was dismissed by the Court of Appeal. They held that the said resolutions of the directors were ultra vires, and the allotments made in pursuance thereof were invalid. There had been nothing amounting to a ratification by the Company. As regards the proper measure of damages raised by the cross-appeal, the general rule was that a wrong-doer ought to be charged with the maximum price which could be obtained for the property which he had wrongly appropriated while the property was in his control, but because there was evidence that some shares had been sold at a particular price it was not to be assumed that all shares could have been similarly disposed of. Persons standing in a fiduciary position should be charged with the highest value; that was a sound principle, but with not more than the real value, and the value ought not to be ascertained by the price obtained on one occasion by the sale of a few shares, the surrounding circumstances must be taken into account. And the true date for ascertainment of the value of the shares is the date at which the party, who was liable for same, obtained them.

Mr. Eve, Q. C., Mr. Isaacs, Q. C., Mr. Lawson Walton, Q. C., Mr. Griffith and Mr. Craig for the Defendants.

Mr. Eady, Q. C., and Mr. Gregson for the Plaintiffs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—EVAN O'MORE v. MARY HARE. Before MR. JUSTICE JOYCE. 14th November 1900.

Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874—Misedescription of property—Specific performance with compensation.

MANSER v. BACK (6 Hare, 443) approved of and followed.

The applicant asked for a declaration that he was entitled to compensation for misedescription of a lot he had bought at an auction. That lot was described in the catalogue as lot 5. "Four similar houses adjoining the last lot." Lot 4 was described as "Four capital private houses, each with hall entrance, gardens and outbuildings in the rear."

The applicant had gone over the houses described in lot 4, but as lot 5 was described as similar he did not view them. As a matter of fact lot 5 had not the entrance hall nor the water closets lot 4 had. After making his purchase and signing the contract and making the usual deposit on the 580 the price at which he bought, lot 5 applicant discovered the differences between the houses in lot 4 and lot 5 and at once asked the Defendant for compensation; and that being refused this summons was taken out under the above Act, whereby the Court was authorized to determine "any claim for compensation or any other question arising out of or connected with the contract." It was found on the evidence that the auctioneer at the time of sale pointed out the difference between the two lots, but the applicant did not hear what the auctioneer had said regarding same.

The learned Judge held that the above cited decision was a clear authority for the vendor to be let off his contract in such a case as this. He said that case was approved of in Tamplin v. James, 15 Ch. D. 217, and appeared to him to be correctly decided.

He held, therefore, that applicant cannot have specific performance with compensation.

The contract was ordered to be rescinded. Applicant to have costs of investigation of title including examination of auctioneer.

Mr. Jolly for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hewet for the Defendant.

Summons dismissed? Defendant to pay his own costs.
C. W. A.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—KING AND SMITH v. FRICKER. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 25th May 1900.

Fraud of third party—Mortgage executed without knowledge of contents, reliance on solicitor, payment by cheque—Time of payment.

The question in this litigation was which of two innocent parties must suffer owing to the fraud of a third party, a solicitor called Eldred. The Plaintiff Joseph King had employed Eldred for several years for the purchase of small tenements for him. Plaintiff used also to deposit money with Eldred and receive 10 per cent. interest thereon. The evidence disclosed that Plaintiff trusted Eldred implicitly and signed whatever he told him to sign, he was an ignorant man. In April 1894 Eldred induced Plaintiff to execute an indenture of mortgage of a piece of land to Defendant for an advance of £300 with interest at 5 per cent. The Defendant paid a cheque for that amount to Eldred who cashed it that day and used the money for his own purposes.

Plaintiff now claimed a declaration that that indenture was void and should be cancelled and the title-deeds delivered up to him. It was also contended that the money having been paid by cheque was not good payment and the deed void because obtained by fraud.

The learned Judge referring to Hunter v. Walters (7 Ch. 75) held that the deed though voidable on the ground of fraud was not a void deed. The Plaintiff was aware that he was doing something, though no doubt he never intended to mortgage the property and taking all the disclosed facts as to Plaintiff's previous dealings with Eldred and his absolute confidence in him, he must hold the deed to be valid. Plaintiff was estopped by the same circumstances as rendered the deed valid from denying that Eldred had authority to receive the money (see also sec. 56 of the Conveyancing Act). The law made no distinction between hours of the same day, the cheque in this case was cashed the same day that the deed was produced to Defendants so the payment was a good payment as Defendants were trustees. Plaintiff must pay their costs.

Mr. Hugo Young, Q. C., and Mr. J. Edwards for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., and Mr. G. Henderson for the Trustees.

Suit dismissed with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—J. & J. CASH, LIMITED v. JOSEPH CASH. Before MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 25th May 1900.

Trade name, imitation—Defendant bearing same name as Plaintiff—Tendency to deceive.

The name of the Plaintiff Company was well known in Coventry as manufacturers of ribbons, frillings, tapés and other textile goods. In 1895 the old established business of J. and J. Cash was turned into a limited liability company. The Defendant Joseph Cash was one of its directors. The company it was agreed were to secure and exclusively use J. and J. Cash's woven names and initials and their manufactures. In 1898 the Defendant was allowed to retire from the directorate. After an unsuccessful attempt by Defendant to start a similar company under the name and style of Joseph Cash, Limited, he started a private business calling it Joseph Cash & Co.

The present was an action to restrain him from so doing and the Plaintiffs sought an injunction until the trial of the cause. The learned Judge granted it relying on Reddaway v. Banham (1896, A. C. 199) and Sackner v. Apollenaris Co. (1897, 1 Ch. 893). No person, he said, must sell his goods as J. and J. Cash's manufactures of frillings, ribbons, &c., as that name had been well known in Coventry for years in connection with such business. The case, he thought, was one of gross dishonesty in view of the fact that this Defendant was for years a director of the company; because his name was Cash that did not entitle him to act as he was doing. No body has any right to represent his goods as that of another.

Mr. Ellgood for the Defendant.

Mr. Warrington, Q. C., and Mr. Sargant for the Plaintiffs.

Injunction granted.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—LANGLY v. BOMBAY TEA COMPANY, LIMITED. Before JUSTICES GRANTHAM and CHANNELL. 13th June 1900.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, sec. 2.—“Apply a false trade description.”

The consideration of this case under the above Act (50 and 51 Vict., c. 28) was under the following facts of the case. Some tea was lying in packets on Defendant's counter at his shop, in Clayton Street, Newcastle. They had stamped in ink “the weight of this package including the wrapper is  $\frac{1}{2}$  a pound.” On 2nd December 1899 the Plaintiff called at that shop and demanded two half pounds of tea a salesman took two packets and gave them to Plaintiff who paid £2 6s. for them. On the inspector of weights and measures measuring the contents of the packets at Plaintiff's request they were found to be less than  $\frac{1}{2}$  a pound, one had even a less quantity than the other one. In each case, however, the weight including the paper was more than  $\frac{1}{2}$  lb. Inside the packet was found a ticket with the information that on presentation thereof the person presenting it would receive some article as a present. Upon those facts the information was laid by Plaintiff against the Defendant under the above Act for selling 2 half pounds of tea to which a false trade description as to weight was applied. The Newcastle justices held that a trade description meant some thing written printed or stamped, and that a description expressed in words or implied by conduct was not sufficient to constitute an offence under the Act and so dismissed the information, a case was however stated.

The revisional Court held that there had been no false description the Defendant had applied a description showing that what they were proposing to sell was less than  $\frac{1}{2}$  a pound. It could not therefore be said that they had applied a description to the effect that what they were selling was half a pound. Cooper v. Moor (1898, 2 Q. B. 300) was referred to as showing that the enactment did not apply to verbal descriptions.

Mr. Robson, Q. C., and Mr. Jacobs for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Joseph Watson, Q. C., and Mr. C. Williams for the Defendant, Respondent.

The facts of this case will fully appear from the report of the hearing published in this volume, 5 C. W. N., at p. xxviii (28).

LORD HOBHOUSE in delivering their Lordships' judgment on the 8th of December last observed that though there might have been an intention to transfer the property, it never was effected in the mode required by law; and that the intended transferee could not call for implement of the intention, because he failed to show any contract founded on valuable consideration and that their Lordships therefore advised Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Secs. 108, 595 (a), 594, Civil Procedure Code—Remand—Order final or interlocutory.

The facts of this case will fully appear from the report of the hearing of this appeal before the Board, published in this volume, 5 C. W. N., at p. xxix (29).

LORD ROBERTSON in giving their Lordships' judgment said the Appellant represented that by the High Court's order the decree in the suit had been set aside and the case remanded to be disposed of on its merits. The Respondent disclaimed any such sweeping effect, and held that what was remanded was merely the application immediately before the Court, namely, the application to set aside the decree, and that it was that application which the Subordinate Judge would, under the remand, proceed to dispose of, by allowing the Respondent to endeavour to satisfy him of the conditions specified in sec. 108 and then, if that be done, by setting aside the decree. Their Lordships were clearly of opinion that the Respondent's was the just construction of the order of the High Court. The next question was whether an appeal lay to Her Majesty in Council, and that depended on whether the order was a final order in the sense of sec. 595 (a) as modified by sec. 594 of the Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships considered that the order was in no sense final; it was a purely interlocutory order directing procedure. Accordingly their Lordships would humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal. The Appellant must pay the costs.

Special leave—Value of appeal and Appellant's interest.

The present suit was brought against the Petitioners for cancellation of certain deeds of conveyance on the allegation that the properties the subject-matter thereof were endowed properties of the Temple. The Plaintiffs also prayed for the removal of Basant Das one of the Petitioners owing to alleged breach of trust and the appointment of a new trustee to succeed him.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, on the ground that the properties were not trust properties.

On appeal of Plaintiffs to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, that Court on 27th June 1899 held that it was trust property and that the transferees were not bona fide purchasers for value without notice of the trust. Therefore that Court cancelled the conveyances, removed Basant Das and appointed the Plaintiff Jamna Das as trustee.

The value of the subject-matter of the suit and that in the Court of Appeal was Rs. 17,000, but the direct and separate interest of each of the Petitioners was of less value than Rs. 10,000.

The application for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council in India was made by only one of the Petitioners; that application was dismissed by the Judicial Commissioner on 8th June 1900, on the ground that the separate interest of the applicant was below the appealable value; that the decree did not involve, so far as he was concerned directly or indirectly, any claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 and that the case was not otherwise a fit one for appeal.

Mr. Degruyther for the Petitioners submitted that the appeal did involve a claim or question respecting property over Rs. 10,000 in value because a finding in favour of the applicant before the Judicial Commissioner would practically reverse the whole decree.

Their Lordships granted leave to appeal.

BANARSI PARSAD

v.

KASHI KRISHEN NARAIN

and another.

Appeal below value, when allowable.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Allahabad High Court reversing that of the Sub-Judge of Bareilly.

The suit was brought to recover from the Respondents the sum of Rs. 14,332 as due on account of mesne profits and interest thereon. The Sub-Judge gave the Plaintiff a decree for Rs. 13,975-1-9. On appeal by the Respondents to the High Court the decree was varied reducing the amount of mesne profits awarded to Plaintiff from Rs. 13,975-1-9 to Rs. 10,066-15-2. So that the matter involved in the appeal to Her Majesty in Council was entirely limited to a sum of under Rs. 4,000.

The questions raised involved the interpretation of secs. 43 and 44 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Ross for the Appellant contended that those sections had been erroneously construed by the High Court. That the cause of action for the suit decided on 1st December 1890 was not the same as the cause of action for the present suit. That the cause of action for mesne profits was different from the cause of action for recovery of the land. A separate suit for the recovery of mesne profits lies. Mr. Ross referred to secs. 43 and 44, C. P. C., relying on 19 Calcutta Series, p. 615, he also referred to I. L. R. 11 Madras Series, those being the cases mentioned in the judgment of the High Court, also to secs. 8, 9 and 10 of Act 8 of 1859.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—If you sue for mesne profits must you not sue for the whole amount due.

Mr. Ross.—I did not sue for Wasilat but for 2 years rent.

SIR RICHARD COUCH referred to secs. 211 and 219, C. P. C.

THE COURT.—The appeal is for a sum much under the appealable amount, what power had the High Court to grant leave to appeal.

Mr. Ross.—It involves a substantial question of law and it has come up in the usual way. It was not objected to.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

LORD HOBHOUSE delivered their Lordships' judgment advising Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal and observing that the existence of a substantial point of law was not sufficient to give a right of appeal unless it was of proper value or involved questions of great public or private importance.

RAJA RAMESHAR BUX
SINGH

v.

BABU ARJUN SINGH.

Construction—Grant of villages, if heritable or for life.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reversing that of the Civil Judge of Lucknow.

The Plaintiff, Arjun Singh, sued to recover possession of the villages Sikandarpur and Samnapur making title thereto as next heir to his brother Sheo Narain to whom it was his case these villages had been orally granted by Raja Bisheshur Bux in 1879.

The following pedigree shows the relationship of the parties :—

In 1865 Raja Daljit gave the village of Bankagarh to Arjun Singh and Davindgarh to Shankar Singh, and for his youngest son Sheo Narain, then an infant, he set apart the village Nidhan Kuar Khera. At the summary and regular settlements thereafter the villages given to Arjun and Shankar were respectively settled with them but Nidhan Kuar Khera was not settled with Sheo Narain but was included in village Sheogarh and sanad given to Raja Jogmohan. This was in 1863. In 1868 Arjun and Shankar sued Jagmohan for half the entire estate of Jagdispur which included the said village Nidhan Kuar Khera. The case was referred to the British Indian Association and their award and the remarks thereon of Colonel Barrow, the then Financial Commissioner, were referred to and relied upon for the Plaintiffs.

On the 15th February 1879, Jagmohan died and was succeeded by Bisheshur Bux soon after the last-named under an oral arrangement placed Sheo Narain in possession of Sikandarpur and Samnapur, and on the 2nd May 1879 he signed applications for the record of Sheo Narain's name in the revenue registers. The material portions of these applications are as follows :—

"That, whereas, agreeably to my verbal promise, I have, after the execution of the deed of relinquishment regarding the village Nidhan Kuar Khera, Pargana Kumhravan, District Rae Bareilly, and other properties left by the late Raja Jagmohan Singh, Talukdar of Kumhravan, given the entire village Sikandarpur valued at Rs. 13,500 (thirteen thousand, five hundred), and Samnapur, valued at Rs. 4,400 (four thousand and four hundred), both situated in the Pargana and Tehsil of Mohanlalganj, District Lucknow, and owned and possessed by me, to my own uncle (paternal), Sheo Narain Singh, for his maintenance and placed him in possession and occupation of both the said villages; and whereas owing to the demise of my father, the said Raja Jagmohan Singh, a case for mutation of names respecting the Hakkiat (proprietorship), and Lambardari of village Sikandarpur, Pargana and Tehsil Mohanlalganj, District Lucknow, is pending, therefore submitting this application, I pray that when my name is substituted in place of the deceased Raja, the name of Babu Sheo Narain Singh may, in the terms of this application, be substituted and entered in records in place of my name in respect of the zemindari Hakkiat and Lambardari of the entire village Sikandarpur, Pargana and Tehsil Mohanlalganj, District Lucknow, as its proprietor in perpetuity."

The application for the other village was in somewhat different terms, which was noticed during the course of the argument.

On obtaining the grant of these villages Sheo Narain gave the following deed of relinquishment :—

" . . . . My father, Raja Daljit Singh, had, during his lifetime, given me the muafi village of Nidhan Kuar Khera . . . . valued at Rs. 2,000, for my maintenance. I, however, lived jointly with him, the said Raja, and did not therefore take possession of the Guzara (village). On Raja Daljit Singh's demise the village continued under possession and enjoyment of Raja Jagmohan Singh. It is a small village, and it is not possible for me to maintain myself from the profits thereof. For this reason, Raja Bisheshur Bux Singh . . . granted to me out of his own pleasure village Sikandarpur . . . valued at Rs. 13,500, and village Samnampur, valued at Rs. 4,400 . . . as an exchange for the (Guzara) village Nidhan Kuer Khera, under an oral agreement."

On July 23rd, 1884, Sheo Narain died. His widow's name was thereupon mutated in the revenue register with regard to the 2 villages now in dispute. The widow held for 2½ years until her death in December 1886, after that the name of Bisheshur Bux was placed in the revenue registers.

The last named died in December 1887 and was succeeded by his son the Appellant.

On the pleadings of the parties the substantial question for determination was, "whether by oral grant about May 1872 Bisheshur Bux conferred an absolute heritable estate in the villages in suit on Sheo Narain."

The Civil Judge was of opinion that the surrounding circumstances did not justify the inference that Bisheshur Bux intended to grant an estate of inheritance and therefore dismissed the suit. The Judicial Commissioner held that the intention that Sheo Narain should be granted a heritable estate was sufficiently shewn by the deed of relinquishment, the applications for mutation of names aided by the fact that Sheo Narain had a heritable estate in the village Nidhan Kuar Khera; and by the conduct of Bisheshur Bux in allowing the name of Sheo Narain's widow to be entered in the collector's books. The decree of the Civil Judge was reversed.

In this appeal the arguments were based on the construction to be placed on the abovementioned documents and the acts of Bisheshur Bux.

Mr. Degruyther for the Appellant, having referred to the documents and the judgments, cited.—Moulvi Mahomed Abdul Majeed v. Mussamat Fatema Bibi (12 I. A., p. 159, reading at p. 163). Same volume, p. 205, Toolshi Pershad Singh v. Raja Ram Narain, Anund Lal Singh Deo v. Maharaja Dheraj Gurrood Narayan Deo (5 Moore I. A., p. 82, top of p. 103).

LORD DAVEY.—That decision was passed on an admission made by the parties and has nothing to do with this case, 4 I. A., p. 223 at 225 (Babu Lekraj Roy v. Kenhya Singh). Judicial Commissioner's select case No. 209. The right to maintenance is not heritable. Roshan Singh v. Bulwant Singh (27 I. A., p. 51).

He also urged that assuming that the Judicial Commissioner's decision was correct, still Appellant would not be entitled to the property because Sheo Narain's daughter Mangal Koer would take; he contended that the Civil Judge was wrong in finding that a custom of exclusion of females was proved and the Judicial Commissioner had not determined that point. Moreover even if Mangal Koer was out of the way Appellant would only be entitled to half because his brother Shankar Singh would take the other half.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—Do you want us now to go into the question of custom? We have not the finding of the Judicial Commissioner.

Mr. Degruyther then referred to certain Wajit-ul-ur.

Mr. Mayne referred in the first instance to the Tagore case in Sup. Vol., L. R. I. A., p. 65. Then to Raja Nursing Deb v. Roy Koylash Nath (9 Moore I. A., p. 55 at p. 64).

LORD HOBHOUSE.—You have the very strong words there nasun bad nasun.

Mr. Mayne.—No doubt there are very strong words, but it is the intention that is to be considered and not the words. Bhavya Ardawan Singh v. Raja Udey Pertab (23 I. A., p. 64 at 73) which shows that a permanent grant may be inferred even if there are no words conveying that meaning.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The intention was gathered from the fact that the property was allowed to pass from father to son for two generations.

Mr. Mayne quotes Lallit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkan Lal Roy (24 I. A., p. 76) refers to the word "Malik" as sufficient to create a heritable estate.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—That was not a case of maintenance.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The expression Malik in that case was connected with a reference to a future generation.

Mr. Mayne referred to Maharam Beni Pershad v. Dulh Nath Roy (26 I. A., p. 216) reads last lines of p. 224 where the word Dwami was used.

Mr. Mayne urged that the case cited from 12 I. A., p. 159 had no bearing on this case, referring to p. 163. The passage with the words "always and for ever" "according to several decisions of this Board do not per se extend the interest beyond life," he urged that he did not know what "decisions" were there noticed by their Lordships, he submitted it must be the istemrari mokurari cases. The case cited from 4 I. A., p. 223, was of that nature. We must assume that a grant in substitution of an absolute grant was also an absolute grant.

Mr. Degruyther replied. He referred to Muhammed Imam Ali Khan v. Sardar Husain Khan (25 I. A., p. 1) and to sec. 16, Oudh Land Revenue Act XVII of 1876.

SIR RICHARD COUCH in delivering their Lordships judgment observed that in their Lordships' opinion the decree of the Original Court ought not to have been reversed and that they would humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm it and to reverse the decree now appealed from with costs and costs of the Courts below.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE ARE INFORMED THAT THERE ARE BETWEEN SEVEN hundred fifty to eight hundred cases on the Original Side ready for hearing. The two judges on the Original Side are ordinarily very hard-worked and we do not consider it possible for them in any way to cope with this accumulation. Under the present arrangements, it will take another two years and a half or perhaps longer, to dispose of these cases. But in the meantime new suits will continue to swell the board. Matters have come to such a pass that even simple suits, for liquidated claims, which require a very short hearing cannot be reached. The only way out of the present situation is to have a third Court on the Original Side.

ANOTHER CAUSE OF THE LAW'S DELAYS ON THE Original Side is attributable to the present constitution of the offices connected with the Courts. The present establishment may have been sufficient when there was only one Court on the Original Side but it has for a long time been found insufficient to cope with the business of two Courts. When two Courts for the first time commenced sitting on the Original Side it was not anticipated that both Courts will continue to sit permanently and it was not considered necessary at the time to add to the ministerial staff of the Court. The result has been that an amount of work has devolved on its officers which it is impossible for them to cope with with the present staff. We have no desire to enter into details to-day. We need only say that in case a third Court is found necessary, a corresponding expansion of the offices should not be overlooked.

OUR ATTENTION HAS BEEN DRAWN TO A WANT OF uniformity in the practice on the Original Side with regard to the granting of interest on simple debts during the period that a suit is pending. It was the practice with some judges to allow interest at the contract rate between the period of filing plaint and the passing of the decree, provided the rate of interest did not exceed 9 per cent. As for interest after decree, the Court has always decreed interest at 6 per cent. from the date of decree. Some of the judges adhere to the old practice but some disallow interest altogether pending suit unless there are exceptional circumstances and others allow interest at the contract rate, no matter what that may be, for the whole period up to decree. The Court has, no doubt, an absolute discretion with regard to decreeing interest pending suit at such rate as may seem to it reasonable, but in view of the time that elapses between the institution of a suit and its hearing, we consider it but equitable that the Court should decree interest pending suit at a reasonable rate. It is much to be regretted if from want of sufficient number of Judges on the Original Side people are kept out of their money for an indefinite time and the debtors are made to pay interest for a period for which they cannot be said to be in default.

IT WILL BE NOTICED THAT IN THE CASE OF Empress v. Dolegobind Das, which we report in this issue at p. 169, it has been held, following Opoorba Kumar Sett v. Prabod Kumary Dassi (1 C. W. N. 49), that a Presidency Magistrate is competent to revive a complaint on fresh evidence. The absence of any express provision in the Code in this respect has given rise to some conflict amongst the decisions of the Calcutta High Court. Besides those cases referred to by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment we may refer to two others, which were reported in our last volume: Ram Coomar v. Ranjee (4 C. W. N. 26); Damini Dassi v. Hurry Mohun (4 C. W. N. 46). We note with satisfaction that a similar point recently came up before the Criminal Revisional Bench and that in view of the conflicting decisions the question has now been referred to a Full Bench. The question for the consideration of the Full Bench is:—"Whether a Presidency Magistrate is competent to revive a warrant case triable under Ch. XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure in which he has discharged the accused person."

English Notes.

COURT OF APPEAL.—WHYLER v. THE BINGHAM RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and STERLING. 8th November 1900.

Liability for misfeasance—Distinguished from nonfeasance.

The action was brought by the widow and administratrix of a public hackney cab driver for damages owing to his death which the Plaintiff alleged was caused by an act of misfeasance on the part of the Defendants who occupied the position of surveyor of high ways. In 1877 the Defendants' predecessors had put up a fence between the road and a stream which ran alongside of it, for the safety of wayfairers along that road in times of flood. As a matter of fact the fence so erected existed for 22 years. In 1899 the Defendants' surveyor reported that the fence was in a bad state of repairs that it was not needed and to put it into proper repair would require considerable outlay. The result being that in January 1900 it was taken down, and the posts which the surveyor had recommended should be put up at each end were in course of erection, before that was done Plaintiff's husband on a night while he was driving along the road, which owing to heavy floods was covered with water, drove into the ditch 7 feet deep and was drowned. Mr. Justice Wills before whom the cause was heard left it to the jury to say whether the removal of the fence, under the circumstances, and as it was done, was consistent with proper regard for the safety of persons using the road. The jury answered that question in favour of Plaintiff and damages were awarded by that learned Judge.

On this appeal by the Defendants the Court said, for an act of nonfeasance Defendants would not be liable; but was not this a case of misfeasance which caused the death in question. The object of the enquiry Mr. Justice Wills made of the jury was to see whether what was done was an act of misfeasance or not. It was an active part on the part of the Defendants in pulling down the fence which caused the accident. On the finding of the jury the Court must hold that it was an act of misfeasance. The application for a new trial must be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Young, Q. C., and Mr. Appleton in support of the appeal.

Mr. E. Smith and Mr. Walker for the Plaintiff.

Appeal dismissed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—TAFF VALE RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF RAILWAY SERVANTS. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 5th September 1900.

Trade unions—Consideration of Trade Union Acts, 1871-6.—Liability for wrongs—Injunction.

Plaintiffs took out a summons against two secretaries of the Defendant Society, as also against the Society itself, for restraining them from besetting or watching directly or indirectly any of the Plaintiffs' servants employed by or for them at their works, for the purpose of dissuading or preventing or hindering Plaintiffs' servants from working for Plaintiffs, and so breaking their contract. The Court at the first hearing had granted the injunction sought against the two secretaries of the Defendant Society, the general secretary and the organizing secretary, but it had reserved for consideration, whether an injunction should likewise issue against the Amalgamated Society itself. The latter took out a summons to have their name as Defendants struck out on the ground that they were neither a corporation nor an individual and so could not be sued in a quasi-corporate or any other capacity, contending further that if they were wrong in that ground, yet no injunction should be granted against them.

The learned Judge in delivering judgment alluded to sec. 16 of the said Act of 1876 which defined a trade's union, and said that such association owed its validity to the Trades Union Acts, 1871-6. This was an action in tort. The judgment then proceeds to consider what according to the true construction of the Trades Union Acts the legislature has enabled trades unions to do, and what if any is their liability for wrongs done to others in the exercise of its lawful powers. It states that it was competent for the legislature to give to an association of individuals which is neither a corporation nor an individual a capacity for owning property and acting as agents and that such capacity in the absence of express enactment to the contrary, involves the necessary correlative of liability, to the extent of such property for the acts and defaults of such agents. The legislature had legalized such an association and it must be so dealt with. It cannot be that the legislature had sanctioned the creation of numerous bodies of men capable of owning great wealth and of acting by agents with absolutely no responsibility for wrongs they may do to others; giving them a wide capacity for evil without any liability for it. On the contrary, the proper construction of the statutes was, that in the absence of express intention to the contrary, the legislature intended its creature shall stand on the same footing as the general law would impose on a private individual doing the same thing. For such wrongs arising as they do from the wrongful conduct of the agents of the Society in the course of managing a strike the Court held the Society was liable and they could be sued in their registered name.

Mr. Williams, Q. C., and Mr. Gregory for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Napier and Mr. Evans for the Defendants.

Decision in favour of Plaintiffs:

C. W. A.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Taff Vale Railway Company v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants and Others. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and STERLING. 21st November 1900.

The Court of Appeal as above constituted have on the appeal of the Society, who were Defendants in the litigation, reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Farwell. They decided that a liability to be sued is not a liability which should be created by implication; a trade union cannot be sued as is now attempted. There was no statute empowering this action to be brought against the union in its registered name, it was not maintainable against the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants' co-nominee; the Defendants were to be struck out and injunction against them dissolved.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Rich v. Cook. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORD JUSTICES COLLINS and STERLING. 19th November 1900.

Solicitors and speculative action; dictum of Lord Russell of Killowen in Ladd v. London Road, Car Co. (The Times, 24th March 1900) approved of.

In an action for injury to an infant caused by the negligent driving of the Defendant company's driver, of an omnibus, the jury found for the Defendant, upon which Mr. Justice Darling, before whom the trial had taken place, directed that Plaintiff's solicitor should attend before him. The solicitor did so and was questioned by the learned Judge concerning certain letters which emanated from his office during the progress of the cause under his signature. The learned Judge refused his application for time to enable him to instruct counsel on his behalf and ordered that he should personally pay the Defendants' costs.

On the solicitor's appeal, the Court of Appeal heard his witness and was satisfied that the contents of the letters were satisfactorily explained and the charges formulated on them proved to be baseless. They therefore allowed the appeal and directed the Defendant to pay the costs of it. In the course of the judgment, the Master of the Rolls expressed entire approval of the view which the late Lord Chief Justice in the above case had expressed in summing up to the jury, as regards the duty of a solicitor in a speculative action. There was no impropriety at all in a solicitor's merely conducting a speculative action, otherwise many poor people would be unable to secure their just rights, on the supposition that the solicitor had honestly by careful enquiry satisfied himself that a proper case existed.

Mr. Wilby, Q. C., and Mr. Drury for the Solicitor.

Mr. McCall, Q. C., and Mr. Carrington for the Defendant.

C. W. A.

Appeal Allowed.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Rake v. Hooper. Before Mr. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 6th December 1900.

The Plaintiff, Mr. Herbert Rake, a stock-broker, had married in 1872. In 1875 he had one child, the issue of the marriage living. Being about to enter into a partnership for carrying on the business of a stock-broker, he executed a voluntary post nuptial settlement of certain properties. The settlement was for his wife for life and after her death upon trust for his children. The Defendants were the children some of whom are minors and the trustees of the settlement.

Mrs. Rake died on 23rd September 1899. The Plaintiff stated that it was after the decease of his wife that he discovered that the settlement reserved no life interest for himself, the settlor, after his wife's death, so that quoad the property settled he was dependent on his children. He, therefore, claimed a rectification of the document on the ground that that was not his intention. The Plaintiff and the solicitor who prepared the deed were examined. The learned Judge held that the Plaintiff had not made out a case which would justify him in granting a rectification. It was settled law that the Court could only rectify a settlement, which was a matter of contract, when it was shown that both parties were in error—that something had been inserted or left out which did not express the intention of either party. The Court must be satisfied before ordering the rectification of a voluntary settlement, that instructions were given and having been given were not followed out. In this case the solicitor's deposition proved that the object the Plaintiff had in view in 1875 was to provide for his wife and children in case the risk he was undertaking ran him into bankruptcy and in the draft deed prepared at the time the remainder for the survivor of the wife and husband usually inserted was inserted, but was afterwards struck out. In his opinion the Plaintiff had assented to the omission of the life interest to himself. It would be mischievous to allow such a settlement to be amended.

Mr. Warrington, Q. C., and Mr. Marcy for the Plaintiff.

Gift to a member of joint family, whether gift to individual or family—Burden of proof.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Madras High Court which reversed a decision of the District Court of Ganjam.

The suit was brought by the present Respondent to obtain a partition of two villages in which he claimed to be jointly interested with the Appellant.

The question for decision was whether a grant made originally in the sole name of the Appellant's father, was made and held for the joint benefit of the grantee and his brother, father of the Respondent, or whether it was made and held for the exclusive benefit of the grantee and his descendants.

The following is the family pedigree:—

Defendant, Appellant,
Born about 1850.

Mangata Devan
Plaintiff, Respondent,
Born about 1848.

Kasi
Viswanatha

The property now in dispute consists of two Inam villages of Rajendrapuram and Brundavana Chandrapuram. These villages the property of the Raja of Chikati were assigned by him to Bayana Padhi, who was the senior member of his own family in 1847 and 1848. The original grants were lost. An arzi, dated 23rd July 1847, purporting to be from the zemindar to the Collector was produced informing that officer that he had made certain grants of forest land in those villages to Bayana Padhi.

In 1856 in a suit between the representatives of Bayana and Gurunatha, the Court, as regards the estate of Baruva, held that no division had taken place between the brothers and the property was joint.

The Plaintiffs produced and relied on a power-of-attorney purporting to be executed on 31st August 1858 by the two widows above-named Kesaramani and Basini as mothers and guardians of their respective sons the Plaintiff and the Defendant to certain persons "to look after the whole of the business in respect of our Malukdhari Mokhasas Inams, leasing out lands, etc." This was marked Exhibit A.

The Plaintiff also relied on certain suits brought by the zemindar of Chikati against the parties to this suit for arrears of Shrotrium and road-cess on the two villages now in dispute. These suits were in 1878, 1880, 1882. There were also receipts granted by the zemindar, the last of them being in June 1887 for payment made by Plaintiff.

The Defendant denied joint possession up to 1888, asserted that during his minority the Plaintiff concealed from him the nature of his interest and had been taking a portion of the rents by collusion with the raiyats; that on becoming aware of it he took and retained sole possession since 1878. He claimed sole title under the grant to his father.

The main issues were:—

Whether the grant of the plaintiff villages by Chikati zemindar was to the father of Defendant only, or to the fathers of Plaintiff and Defendant (who were brothers) jointly?

Whether the Defendant has been in possession of the said villages (as he alleges) since 1878, or (as alleged by Plaintiff) only since 1888?

Upon the evidence the District Judge dismissed the suit.

In his judgment he commented on the evidence on both sides and concluded as follows:—

"Finding therefore on the first issue that Plaintiff had entirely failed to make good his contention as to a joint gift of the plaintiff villages originally to his father with the father of Defendant and on the second and third issues that the documentary evidence produced for Plaintiff was on the face of it evidence which had been created for the purpose of this suit and that the oral evidence was under these circumstances worthless, "I did not consider it necessary to call for any evidence for the Defendant beyond what was necessary to render his documentary evidence admissible. For defence therefore only two witnesses were examined whose evidence has been referred to in paragraph 9."

Against this decree and judgment the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court which reversed the decision, the grounds of which they professed themselves unable to understand, and remanded the case so that the Defendant might examine the witnesses whom he had originally named or summoned.

On the further evidence produced on the remand another Judge agreed with his predecessor and came to the following conclusions:—

"On the first issue I find that the suit villages were granted to Defendant's father for his own benefit, on the second issue that the Defendant has been in possession since 1880 on the third issue that Plaintiff never acquired any title by possession and therefore he had no right to sue and (fourth issue) that the suit was not time barred.

"The result is that the suit is dismissed and Plaintiff ordered to bear his own and Defendant's costs throughout."

On the Respondent again appealing to the High Court the following order was passed on the 25th March 1896 :—

"Assuming that the Cowle was made in the name of the elder brother, who was at the time joint with the other members of the family, we think the evidence of the enjoyment of the property is strong to show that the family took, and not the one brother exclusively.

"It is admitted that during the Defendant's minority, that is, before 1870, the Plaintiff was in possession, and if Exhibit A is genuine, joint possession is carried back as far as 1858. This document was accepted as genuine by the District Judge who at first heard the case. It was produced by the Plaintiff, who was not cross-examined about it, and we can see no sign of forgery about it.

"In our opinion the Judge was not justified in finding the document to be a forgery. The letter B is also not altogether without weight. The Defendant was examined as a witness, but he gives no explanation of the Plaintiff's possession. We think that the inference to be drawn is that the Cowle was in fact intended to convey the property to the family, and that it was so understood by the parties. We must reverse the decree, and there must be a decree for partition, and for mesne profits for three years before suit, and subsequent profits up to date of delivery. Amount to be ascertained in execution. Respondent to pay costs of both appeals and in Court below."

The present Appellant next filed in the High Court a petition praying for a review, on the ground of discovery of new evidence, the most important among them being a petition by the said two mothers to the Collector which if genuine would go to show that said power-of-attorney of 31st August 1858, Exhibit A was a forgery.

This application was refused by the High Court on the 2nd September 1896. They said :—

"It is not explained why with reasonable diligence these documents which are said to have been recently discovered were not forthcoming before, especially as some of these were to be found in a public office."

The Appellant obtained from the High Court leave to appeal from the order of 25th March 1896 and by an order of Her Majesty in Council, dated 9th December 1899, special leave was granted to Appellant to appeal from the said order of the High Court of 2nd September 1896.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant contended that the decision of the District Judge was correct, the muk- tiarnamah was not a genuine document, that there was nothing to justify the High Court in drawing the inference that under the conveyance to the elder brother the family took and not the elder brother alone. Mr. Branson also relied on the new evidence discovered since the decision under appeal.

It was conceded that no motive for the gift was disclosed. Mr. Mayne suggested that in all probability the motive was a semi-religious one, the gift being to a Brahmin or a Brahmin family made for the benefit of the grantor in the future world. Mr. Mayne referred to Dhurm Das Pandey v. Must. Shama Soondari Debiak (3 Moore I. A., p. 229 and read at p. 240).

LORD DAVEY.—That is a case of purchase. Is there any authority as to a gift to one member. Is there any presumption that a gift made to one member of a joint family must primâ facie be assumed to be for the benefit of the whole family.

Mr. Mayne.—I have not now in my mind any case in which the question arose as to a gift. How far the fact that one member showing that the gift was in his name alone can change the onus has as far as I know not been decided. He refers to sec. 264 of his book, current edition and sec. 299, p. 353, last edition.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—If the manager is in ownership it is primâ facie of family property. The zemindar's suits in this case for cesses must go on that presumption.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—The normal condition of a Hindu family is joint.

Mr. Mayne submitted that the sequence of documents showed an undisputed joint interest and a joint possession of the two villages up to 1887. He urged that the original grant in the name of the senior member carried with it no presumption that it was intended for his exclusive benefit. The evidence alleged to have been lately discovered should not be believed.

Mr. Branson in reply referred to Fultons' Reports (1843), p. 164, reads p. 174 and 181. That case was referred to in 6 Moore I. A., p. 539.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—In that case the man had obtained large funds by his own personal exertions. The difficulty here is we don't know what the motive was in making this gift.

Mr. Mayne read the paragraph on his book on "Self-acquisition," para. 342, new edition.

Mr. Branson referred to 8 Bom. H. C. R., p. 153 at p. 176, to Badul Singh v. Chutter Dhari Singh (9 W. R. 558), Lala Madan Gopal v. Krishna Kikenda Koer (18 I. A., p. 9 at p. 20), Sheo Gulam Singh v. Baran Singh (1 B. L. R. 164, A. C., top p. 166).

LORD DAVEY.—There being no satisfactory evidence on either side the question is on whom is the burden of proof.

Mr. Branson also noticed Sri Raja Chelikani v. Garu and Appa Ram B. Garu (I. L. R. 20 Mad., p. 207 at p. 220).

HARDOON, Plaintiff,

Appellant,

v.

E. R. BELILIOS, Defendant,

Respondent.

Trust, what constitutes a—Trustee—Cestui que trust—Legal title—Equitable title—Shares.

The question raised in this appeal was whether the Plaintiff, Hardoon, who was the registered holder of some shares in a Banking Company (The Bank of China, Japan and the Straits, Limited), which was being wound up, was entitled to be indemnified by the Defendant (The Hon'ble E. R. Belilios, C. M. G.), who was the beneficial owner of such shares against calls made upon them in the winding up.

The Bank was a registered Limited Liability Company under the Companies Act, 1862, and had capital divided into shares not all called up when it went into liquidation in December 1894. Plaintiff was a contributor for fifty shares of £10 each. He had been sued by the liquidator for the calls made which he had not paid and judgment was recorded for £402 odd. This amount he sought to recover from Defendant under the following circumstances:—Those shares were placed in the name of the Plaintiff in April 1891 by his then employers Benjamin and Kelly, share-brokers. Plaintiff never had any beneficial interest in them, but he was registered as the holder on 3rd April 1891. A provisional certificate of ownership was made out and he signed a blank transfer of them and those two documents were held by Benjamin and Kelly who had paid the application and allotment and first call. That certificate and transfer afterwards came into the hands of one Coxon who acted on behalf of a syndicate formed to speculate in shares in another Company. The Defendant financed that syndicate, and the provisional certificate and blank transfer of the 50 shares in question were with the other securities pledged by Coxon with the Defendant as security for his advances. In October 1891 the Plaintiff's provisional certificate was exchanged for the ordinary certificate which the Defendant had ever since held. In March 1892 dividends were paid on those shares and the Defendant as holder of those shares demanded the dividends from Plaintiff for them and received same. The syndicate operations ended in much loss. Their accounts with Defendant were closed and in October 1892 the Defendant became the absolute owner of the shares. In November 1893 a call of £1 per share was made payable by four instalments of 5s. each. The first three were at the Plaintiff's request paid by the Defendant to him and by him to the Bank. The Defendant said that he was not liable to pay them and in his books he had debited the Plaintiff with those payments.

Their Lordships found that there was no evidence that Plaintiff was informed of that, and the fact that at the time Defendant did not debit Coxon with those calls appeared to their Lordships very strong evidence that at that time Coxon's interest in those shares came to an end and the shares belonged absolutely to Defendant.

Correspondence ensued between Plaintiff's and Defendant's solicitors. Defendant refusing to indemnify Plaintiff against the calls made on him the present action was commenced.

Their Lordships' judgment proceeds as follows:—

"It appeared from the evidence as it stood that the defendant became in October 1892, the sole beneficial owner of those shares, the legal title to which was vested in the Plaintiff; assuming that to be established their Lordships were at a loss to understand what more was required to create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the Plaintiff and the Defendant. The facts that they never stood in the relation of vendor and purchaser, that there was no contract between them, that the Defendant never requested the Plaintiff to become his trustee, were quite immaterial. All that was necessary to establish the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was to prove that the legal title was in the Plaintiff, and the equitable title in the Defendant. That might be proved in many ways. The mode of proof was quite immaterial. Being proved, no matter how, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was thereby established. No one could be made the beneficial owner of shares against his Will. Any attempt to make him so could be defeated by disclaimer. But the moment the Defendant accepted the beneficial ownership of those shares he became the Plaintiff's cestui que trust and the Plaintiff had no option in the matter. The next step was to consider on what principle an absolute beneficial owner of trust property could throw upon his trustees the burdens incidental to its ownership. The plainest principles of justice required that the cestui que trust who got all the benefit of the property should bear its burdens unless he could show some good reason why his trustee should bear them himself. The obligation was equitable and not legal and the legal decisions negating it, unless there was some contract or custom imposing the obligation, were wholly irrelevant and beside the mark. Even where trust property was settled on tenants for life and children the right of their trustee to be indemnified out of the whole trust estate against any liabilities arising out of any part of it was clear and indisputable; although if that which was once one large trust estate had been converted by the trustees into several smaller distinct trust estates the liabilities incidental to one of them could not be thrown on the beneficial owners of the others. That was decided in Fraser v. Murdoch (6 A. C. 855). But where the only cestui que trust was a person sui juris the right of the trustee to be internified by him against liabilities incurred by the trustee by his retention of the trust property had never been limited to the trust property; it extended further and imposed upon the cestui que trust a personal obligation enforceable in equity to indemnify his trustee."

The judgment thereafter referring to a number of decisions continued as follows:—

"The fact that the Defendant did not create the trust on which the Plaintiff held the shares when they were first placed in his name afforded the Defendant no defence to this action. Although the Defendant did not create the trust he accepted a transfer of the beneficial ownership in the shares first as mortgagee and afterwards as sole beneficial owner with full knowledge of the fact that they were registered in the Plaintiff's name as trustee for their original purchasers and their assigns whoever they might be. By that acceptance the Defendant became the Plaintiff's cestui que trust; and the Plaintiff could not prevent it or effectually dispute his trusteeship for the Defendant. By that acceptance the Defendant created the trust, for himself. Having done so the Defendant as the beneficial owner of the shares demanded from the Plaintiff and obtained dividends declared in respect of them. The Defendant also paid calls made upon them although he attempted to protect himself from any admission of liability by entering those payments in his books as made on behalf of the Plaintiff. Lastly, when asked by the Plaintiff to procure a transfer of the shares out of the Plaintiff's name the Defendant refused to do so, and thereby compelled the Plaintiff to continue to hold them as his trustee. It was idle after that to rely on the fact that the Defendant did not create the trust in the first instance; and idle to talk of renunciation or disclaimer of those shares by the Defendant. He could not now get rid of the trust for himself which he created by becoming beneficial owner of the shares and which trust he had recognized since as subsisting."

In the result their Lordships advised Her Majesty to allow the appeal and reverse the judgments appealed from with costs and with costs of this appeal. Owing to the judgment appealed from being a judgment of non-suit only, their Lordships were unable to advise Her Majesty to order judgment to be entered for Plaintiff with costs. The Defendant was entitled to a new trial at the risk of costs. But how in the face of his own books and conduct he could reasonably hope for ultimate success their Lordships were at a loss to conceive. If he insisted on his rights he was entitled to have the action remitted to Hong Kong for retrial.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., and Mr. R. J. Parker for the Respondent.

and

v.

UMA CHARAN GHOSH.

Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 50—Name, description and place of residence.

Plaints were presented in these two cases. In the first the Christian name of the Defendant was not given, only the initial.

In the second only the Defendant's name and address were given. There was no description.

In consequence of a direction given by order of Mr. Justice Sale that the provisions of sec. 50 of the Code should be strictly followed, these two matters were pointed out by the officer of Court.

STANLEY, J., held that in all complaints the provisions of sec. 50, C. P. C., must be complied with, that is to say, the name, description and place of residence of the Plaintiff must be given and the name, description and place of residence of the Defendant so far as the Plaintiff has been able to ascertain.

That giving the initials of the parties is not a sufficient compliance with the section.

If the Plaintiff after enquiry is unable to ascertain these particulars fully, he should at least include a paragraph in the plaint stating this. There would then be something on record to show that the plaint was admitted after consideration and not per incuriam.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. MIS. No. 98 OF 1900.

AMEER ALI, J.

STEVENS, J.

1900.

3, January.

In the matter of RADHA KRISTA

BARAT, Complainant,

v.

GOKULA NUT, Accused.

Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), secs. 8, 9, 16—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 379—Theft—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 439—Revision, power of, of an order passed for detention of a youthful offender in a Reformatory School—Sentence when not passed for offence or when conviction or sentence improper—Legality or propriety of conviction, sentence, or order other than those enumerated in sec. 16.

This was a rule issued on the 14th of December 1900, against the order of B. C. Sen, Esq., District Magistrate of Bogra, on the 23rd of July 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The complainant, Radha Krista Barat, missed his umbrella valued at 12 annas in a haat (market place). On search it was found in the possession of the accused Gokula Nut, a boy of ten years of age. About that time a gang of Nuts had come and encamped in the neighbourhood. The accused admitted that the umbrella was in his possession but said that it had been purchased by his father for him. Thereupon the accused was prosecuted and placed on his trial before Babu Mahendra Chandra Mozumdar, Deputy Magistrate of Bogra. The Deputy Magistrate on the 23rd day of July 1900 found that the accused was a boy of ten years of age, that the identity of the umbrella with that of the complainant's stolen one had been clearly proved and that he was guilty of an offence under sec. 379, I. P. Code; but instead of passing any sentence upon him the Deputy Magistrate forwarded and submitted the proceedings to the District Magistrate under sec. 9 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), he being of opinion that the boy was a proper inmate of a Reformatory School. There was, however, no evidence to shew that the accused either stole the umbrella, or that he knew that it had been stolen.

The District Magistrate on the same day made an order directing the accused to be detained in the Alipore Reformatory School for a period of seven years, without himself passing any sentence on him.

Then the present rule was obtained against that order of the District Magistrate.

Held—That sec. 16 of the Reformatory Schools Act does not affect the High Court's jurisdiction to consider the legality or propriety of the sentence or of any order other than that mentioned in sec. 16 nor the legality or propriety of the conviction.

That the law requires that the Magistrate trying the case or to whom the proceedings are submitted under sec. 9 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897) should in the first instance, sentence the prisoner to a term of imprisonment or transportation which he may commute into detention in a Reformatory School for such period as he thinks proper.

That no sentence having been passed in this case the order for detention in a Reformatory School is bad in law.

That there being no evidence to shew that the boy either stole the umbrella or that he knew that it had been stolen he was entitled to be acquitted.

Sheikh Reasat v. T. Courtney (unreported, decided by Ameer Ali and Stevens, JJ., on the 28th November 1900) referred to.

No one appeared in this case.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NQ. 417 OF 1899.

GHOSE, J. PRATT, J. 1901. 2, January.	}	UDAY KUMARI GHATWALIN, Judgment-debtor, Appellant, v. HARI RAM SHAHA and others, Decree-holders, Respondents.
--	---	--

Ghatwali tenure—Attachment of future rents and profits of a Ghatwali estate—Receiver, appointment of, to collect rents and profits falling due.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of December 1899 from an order of C. Fisher, Esq., Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Pergunnahs, dated the 12th of September 1899, confirming an order of F. E. Piffard, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, dated the 20th of July 1899.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The decree-holders, Hari Ram Shaha and others, obtained a decree for money against the Ghatwal and in execution of that decree they prayed that the rents and profits that might be due to the Ghatwal minus the wages payable to chowkidars and other outgoings should be attached and placed in the hands of a Receiver. The judgment-debtor filed a petition of objection in which she took several objections to the execution of the decree, the principal objection being that the rents and profits could not be attached. The Subordinate Judge in rejecting the petition of objections held that such profits were attachable, and made the following order:—“Let a prohibitory order issue to the Ghatwal not to collect any rents and profits from the raiyats and also to the raiyats not to pay their rents to the Ghatwal.” On appeal the Deputy Commissioner relying upon the case of Rajkeshwar Deo and another v. Bunshidhur Marwari (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 873) held that the plea that the proceeds of the Ghatwali were not attachable was untenable and dismissed the appeal of the judgment-debtor, and ordered the attachment of the rents and profits due to the Ghatwal, judgment-debtor, on account of his Ghatwali estate.

Against that order the judgment-debtor preferred this second appeal and on her behalf it was contended that what was done by the Subordinate Judge and affirmed by the Deputy Commissioner was to attach future rents and profits; and that that could not be done under the law.

Held—That future rents and profits, as such, cannot be attached.

Hari Das Acharji Chowdhuri v. Baroda Kishore Acharji Chowdhuri (4 C. W. N. 87) and Rajkeshwar Deo and another v. Bunshidhur Marwari (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 873) referred to.

Semle—That a Receiver might be appointed to collect rents and profits of a Ghatwali estate as they fell due.

Babu Lal Mohan Das and Babu Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukkerjee for the Respondents.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE DEEPLY REGRET TO RECORD THE DEATH OF Mr. Justice Ranade of Bombay. His life-work was not confined within the hide-bound pages of the law-reports but extended to a wider circle of usefulness. He rose to his position from the ranks of the Subordinate Judicial Service by a method which is well worthy of emulation by members of that service in these Provinces. It was not by a record list of convictions when sitting as a criminal judge or practising little tricks in shutting out appeals, when acting in a civil capacity that secured him success in life. It was the breadth of his views, the width of his sympathies, his constant solicitude for the good of the people amongst whom he lived and worked that secured him the respect both of the Government and of his own people. He was a man of character and culture and was always zealous in the cause of progress and reform. He was a sound economist, an author of merit, thoroughly independent and public-spirited and his death leaves a gap in society which it will not be easy to fill.

NOW THAT THE QUESTION OF FARM-BURNING IN South Africa is engaging the attention of the leading legal and non-legal journals in England it may be interesting to note the practice in this respect prevalent in the ancient days of Hindu civilization. If we were to recite the laws of war from the Mahabharata to shew how much more in advance they were in point of humanity and fair play than even the Geneva and Hague conventions, modern critics will perhaps put it down as fiction. But when the testimony on this identical question of incendiarism comes from a soldier and a scholar who accompanied Alexander the Great's expedition to India, modern critics will, perhaps, bow their heads in silence.

* * *

MEGASTHENES RECORDS THE INVIOIABILITY OF FARMS and farmers in time of war in the following words :

"Among the Indians, by whom husbandmen are regarded as a class that is sacred and inviolable, the tillers of the soil, even when battle is raging in their neighbourhood, are undisturbed by any sense of danger, for the combatants on either side in waging the conflict, make carnage of each other, but allow those engaged in husbandry to remain quite unmolested. Besides, they neither ravage an enemy's land with fire nor cut down its trees. Nor would an enemy coming upon a husbandman at work on his land do him any harm, for men of this class, being regarded as public benefactors, are protected from all injury."

This is why the bulk of the people of India always lived in peace in spite of all civil wars, revolutions and invasions.

* * *

IT IS, A PITY, HOWEVER, THAT WHENEVER WE HEAR of a European army engaging in war with people whom they regard as uncivilized, they consider it within the legitimate limits of warfare and as a civilized mode of coercing the enemy to submission to set fire to their villages. We would have hardly heard any protest with regard to incendiarism in South Africa had not the Boers been Christians and European by birth. There can be no doubt that when farms are used by the enemy for military operations they cease to become inviolable. But on no principle the practice, common amongst British generals, of firing enemy's villages whenever they are sent off on any expedition against semi-savage tribes can be justified. The Government of India ought to issue orders prohibiting such practices since these make even the aborigines of the East believe that civilization is capable of committing worse barbarity than they can conceive of.

* * *

INTERNATIONAL LAW IS SAID TO BE BASED ON principles of public morality. But we have seen a cynical smile lighten up the soubser faces of the Orientalists at the seats of Western learning when a learned professor solemnly stated that such moral laws are limited in their operation amongst the civilized nations of Europe. Japan by virtue of her power of offence and defence has only recently been admitted to the comity of nations. But her civilization has not yet risen to that pitch when conscience becomes callous and morality, a mere matter of convenience. Japan still labouring under pristine prejudices, originally imbibed from this country, was very much shocked at the conduct of the European troops in China. But we are afraid Japan will be losing her international prestige by being so squeamish about matters which, by the common consent of the European nations, have the sanction of their moral laws (public or international) so long as the enemy is an Asiatic. Is it not a war in the cause of Christianity and are not the Chinese, Heathens? Japan has yet to be civilized but the Indian troops under European lead seem to be on a fair way towards it, since they freely pilfered private property although they stopped short when it came to committing murder or outrage on women. It is no wonder that the Dowager Empress did not wish that China should join the general march of modern civilization and desired that her people should go back to the learning of Confucius. But international morality would not permit such retrogression and has, since, left nothing undone for the salvation of China.

WE HAVE REMARKED BEFORE THAT THE GOVERNMENT commenced judicial reform at the wrong end. Before restricting the right of second appeal the Government ought to have taken care to secure efficiency of the lower Courts. Otherwise the restricting of civil appeals by reference only to their money value will amount to denying justice to the poor. It is only upon questions of law that second appeals are preferred. And these are preferred against decisions of judges who cannot be said to have received any legal training. Under the present system members of the Civil Service with only some experience as magistrates are at once appointed to be District Judges and as such they have to discharge the duties of a Court of Civil Appeal in intricate questions of civil law of India. It is absurd to invest such Courts with final authority as an appellate Court. The Subordinate Judges who also have to discharge a similar function cannot be said to be more happily situated. No doubt they begin life as Munsifs but it is well known that persons who get on in the practice of law do not seek such appointments and the result often is that men, who fail in the profession often get it. With such beginning it cannot always be expected that they would turn out uniformly satisfactory as Civil Judges. Under such circumstances any measure calculated to restrict the right of civil appeal would work positive mischief. Further under the existing weakness of the first appellate Court it is most undesirable to deprive such Courts of the sense of responsibility under which they at present dispose of first appeals in view of the fact that their decisions are open to appeal. We are very much surprised to find that the commercial community of Calcutta, who in common with us some time ago opposed the measure, concede to it a qualified approval, on the very high moral principle that it does not affect their own interests, although there can be little doubt that it would those of people who are less fortunately situated. They say that they do not mind the measure so long as the right of Reference to the High Court from the Presidency Court of Small Causes is not interfered with.

THE MOST RATIONAL WAY OF SETTING ABOUT ON THE path of judicial reform would be, as we have said, to secure in the first place efficiency of the lower Courts and when that has been accomplished then to consider the question of the shortest way to justice. The first object may be very easily gained by recruiting the judicial officers from amongst the practising members of the profession. Such was the recommendation of the Public Service Commission. The Civil Service need have no grievance if the District Judgeships are filled up in this manner. As it is, members of the Civil Service who may select the judicial line are a much less favoured class of public servants than those who continue in the executive line. When selecting the judicial line they have no doubt, in view the prospect of one day becoming a High Court Judge but how often do we hear of capable men after a career of hard and conscientious work and drawing a less liberal salary retire with a pang for having been mistaken in their choice. On the whole we think it will be a more satisfactory arrangement to put the judicial service on an altogether independent footing. Or if the interests of the Civil Service be in any manner at stake, we think, an early separation of the executive and judicial branches and a longer and uninterrupted training of the judicial officers, commencing life as judges of first instance and of the lowest jurisdiction, with better opportunities of working up their way to the High Court, after a varied experience in the Civil and Criminal Courts of all jurisdictions, will be found more satisfactory. People may then have a sufficient confidence in the first Court of Appeal and Government may then consider if second appeals are but a surplussage. The present proposal of the Government to restrict second appeals in a manner which leave ample temptation to people to go into the expense of preferring them without being afforded any corresponding opportunity of even a patient hearing, is liable to very serious misinterpretation. Anyhow, the bill shows more concern for guarding the revenue derived for the administration of justice than justice itself. The practice of making administration of justice a source of revenue has met with universal condemnation amongst economists.

A CHAT ABOUT BARRISTERS.

By ONE OF THEM.

THE English Law List discloses the fact that there are over eight thousand gentlemen now living who have been "called to the Bar." Of these, two hundred and twenty-three are Queen's Counsel, the rest being ordinary barristers, known variously as "juniors" or "stuff-gownsmen." The Q. C. wears a silk gown, somewhat plainly made, with a broad and deep collar. Hence the saying that so-and-so "has taken silk." The junior is distinguished by a gown which, though it is made of a less expensive material, is much more elaborately fashioned—reminding one of the old-time smock-frock.

Of late years, the proportion of foreigners appearing in the list has considerably increased, gentlemen bearing the most unpronounceable names (one rejoicing in a string of seven such), and hailing from India, Persia, Egypt, and other parts of Asia and Africa, figuring to about eight per cent. Most of these after being called, return to their native country—for its lasting good, we may reasonably hope.

The number of barristers available for actual work is greatly reduced when we excise those whose practical acquaintance with the Bar ended on their being called. These represent probably one-half of the gross total. Various are the reasons which lead gentlemen to study for the Bar, without any intention of gaining a livelihood by practicing at it: the two most salient being—(1) to thereby fit themselves for Government and other appointments at home or abroad; (2) the desire to advance their social position.

With regard to the first, these gentlemen may be found dispensing justice, according to our ideas, or administering affairs in the name of the Queen, wherever the British flag is unfurled; and a glance at the list of Magistrates for almost any county, shows that many of these names appear also in the bar list. As to the second, the fact of being a barrister is the open sesame to society which would be closed to the man who without it is, say, only a retired tradesman's son.

Not so long ago an officer came to a Police Court to conduct the case on behalf of two of his men who were charged with some civil offence. He was informed that, not being a solicitor, he was debarred from so doing. "But," said he, "I am also a barrister. I was called to the Bar before entering the army, and I appear in that capacity;" and he succeeded in getting the case dismissed.

Those who do intend to practice, choose a circuit at the outset and generally adhere to it. England and Wales comprise seven circuits, and the question of which shall be adopted depends greatly upon circumstances. It is usually considered that a man has a good chance if he or his family is well known to the solicitors in one or more of the towns on his prospective circuit. Marriage with a lady related to an influential solicitor is also a good source of hope; but, as a Lord Chancellor once put it, the man had the best chance who, with brains and an infinite capacity for hard work, had nothing else to rely upon for the necessities of life—which was his own case.

At assizes, to bring in a man from another circuit involves the payment of a heavy additional fee—quite out of proportion to the needs of an ordinary visi prius case. This regulation very much narrows down the area of choice to the provincial solicitors; and occasionally the barrister who is supposed to be the best man of the circuit for the particular case in hand, is retained as soon as it is seen that the action is imminent. On our own circuit, there is one gentleman who figures in almost every criminal case of any importance—and nearly always for the defence.

He has the reputation of making a "rattling good speech," and that is always left to him, whatever other part he may or may not be called upon to take. Many a man has he pulled out of the fire by a good speech at the end, attacking and criticising the points urged by the prosecution, and trusting to the effect of his speech on the mind of the twelve good men and true. If he calls no witnesses, he deprives the prosecution of the opportunity to reply; thus securing the last word—often of the greatest importance in jury cases.

A fact not generally known, is that, as Queen's Counsel are officers of the Crown, it is necessary, before they can appear for a prisoner against the Crown, to obtain a permit, which is, however, always granted, and costs half a guinea.

It is only the bare truth to say that the really leading men can command their own prices, and even then are pelted with work which it is sometimes impossible for them to properly attend to, notwithstanding the assistance of clerks, pupils, and the system known as "devilling." Like other human beings, they cannot attend to two things at one time.

The Parliamentary Bar suffer terribly in this way. The working days in a year are fewest with them, and in their effort to make their hay, the pressure is felt severely by both themselves and the people (mostly public bodies) who seek their services. It is a common practice to retain three counsel to pilot a private Bill through Parliament. You may then hope to secure the corporeal presence of one or other of them throughout, and perhaps two for the greater part of the time. In connection with one Bill in which I was concerned, we briefed three. The leader came and "opened" and we never saw him again during the five days the committee sat, until the favorable decision was given (for which he, with becoming modesty, took the credit); and he was only once at the daily conferences. Frequently we only had one present, and twice was our counsel's bench empty. Needless to say, they all drew their heavy fees regularly, and with as little diffidence as if they had each and all been in close attendance the whole time.

What can you do? Pay, and look as pleasant as possible. There is nothing else for it.

As in other professions, there are specialists at the Bar. A famous Q. C. (now retired) was related to a well-known musical family, and in consequence, for a generation he appeared in nearly every case involving musical or dramatic copyright.

Not long ago, a county counsel proceeded against a manufacturer for alleged pollution of a stream. The Defendant could not afford a fancy fee. Yet, to lose the case meant ruin to him. He must have a first-class speaker and cross-examiner, and—more important still—one well up in that branch of chemistry associated with sanitary and public health was. So far from being able to pick and choose a man who possessed these two qualifications, he had first to be discovered. Eventually he was found—at a handsome fee; but he justified his reputation, and succeeded—which is the main thing. It pays to be a specialist.

Years ago, there was an agitation inaugurated against the practice of charging a fee for the clerk on top of that paid to the principal. This fee is an additional half a crown upon any fee up to five guineas, five shillings up to ten guineas; and so on up to fifty guineas, upon and above which it is two and a half per cent. Many hard-worked counsel have more than one clerk; while, with the briefless crowd, one boy frequently does duty for several, and his almost nominal services (so far as briefs are concerned, that is) are considered adequately rewarded by ten shillings a week.

From what the reader knows now, he will be prepared to hear that the agitation dropped through. Leading counsel don't sit at their chambers waiting for work, and willing to chaffer about fees. Rather, you have to go cap in hand, and await their pleasure—or run the risk of having your paper returned on any sign of impatience.

It is safe to say that it would be a revelation to those who may wonder at these things, could they but attend a few consultations at the chambers of one of the leading men. To save time, the solicitor will perhaps have prepared a short epitome for present use, in addition to the more or less lengthy "instructions" which were delivered days ago. As likely as not, this will never come out of his pocket, a casual observation from the great man showing that he "knows all about that," and more—knew it, in fact, before the case began. The all-round knowledge of the world which is stored up in the mind of a leading Q. C. is an eye-opener: it is that which you have to pay so heavily for.

No article on this subject would be complete without a reference to the peculiar—probably unique—relations subsisting between barristers and those whose interests they represent.

You may take papers to “a gentleman of the long robe,” and obtain his opinion—and then you may snap your fingers at him, and refuse to pay. He has no remedy at law. Of course, you would not do it again, either with him or any one of his fraternity—you wouldn’t get the opportunity. Except with a well-known firm of solicitors, or one with whom counsel may have a running account, with half-yearly settlements, the money is left with the papers. Should the amount tendered be considered inadequate, the clerk intimates the fact to the solicitor. Often enough, the fee is not marked by the solicitors, but left to the barrister’s clerk. One never corresponds with the principal about fees. He, theoretically, is quite above such mundane matters—merely working from platonic motives; his sordid clerk is there to protect him from being plucked, and to collect a commensurate honorarium.

To maintain an equipoise in this otherwise very one-sided arrangement, an effectual, though refreshingly simple, law exists, that a barrister is under no obligation to attend to any work which you may take to him—and pay for in advance. He may return your papers, and pocket the fee; or, worse still, he may go into court, and make the most fatal and idiotic arrangement binding upon your client—and you have no legal remedy, such as a layman has against a solicitor. But here, too, the case is highly hypothetical, and in an experience of twenty years, I have never known real harm to ensue from it. The laws of business and common-sense in effect govern this, as all other professions; and a barrister who sought to take advantage of his theoretical rights, would doubtless have but little possibility of repeating it. The whole thing seems absurd; but it works well in practice, and probably neither barristers, solicitors, nor clients, if canvassed, would care to alter it.—The Green Bag.

English Notes.

COURT OF APPEAL.—McCALLUM v. McCALLUM. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY and WILLIAMS. 4th December 1900.

Concealed fraud—Real property—Limitation Act, 1883.

The 26th section of the above Statute 3 and 4, William IV, C. 27, sec. 26 provides: “In every case of concealed fraud the right of any person to bring a suit in equity for the recovery of any land, or rent of which he or any person through whom he claims may have been deprived by such fraud, shall be deemed to have first accrued, at and not before the time, at which such fraud shall, or with reasonable diligence might have been known or discovered.”

In 1884 General McCallum made over the house he was residing in with his wife and daughter at Cheltenham to his wife. The conveyance was a voluntary one. A very few days after that the wife conveyed it to the daughter, the Plaintiff in this action. This fact was not known either to the General or to the daughter. The wife sent the two conveyances in a sealed envelope and requested a London solicitor not to open it until after her death and the death of her husband when it was to be made over to Plaintiff.

The wife died on 1888. The General lived in the house after his wife’s death until 1899 when he died. Shortly before his death he had left the house, but received its rent. By his Will he devised the residue of his estate to the Defendant his niece. The house in question was not specifically mentioned in the lease, but Defendant assumed it passed to her and retained possession of the title-deeds. After his father’s death the solicitor in accordance with his instructions from the mother delivered the said envelope to Plaintiff when she for the first time became aware of her title to the property.

In her present action to recover it the Defendant set up the statute of limitations.

Mr. Justice Kekewich had held that the conduct of the mother in wilfully secreting from Plaintiff information regarding her conveyance amounted to a concealed fraud within the above section and the statute did not begin to run until after the death of the mother and so decided on favour of Plaintiff.

The Defendant appealed.

Lord Justice Rigby agreed with Mr. Justice Kekewich that the words of the statute were applicable to every case of a concealed fraud which deprives the owner. The other two learned Judges were of the contrary opinion; they held that fraud contemplated by the section must be fraud of the person setting up the statute or of some one through whom that person claims.

In accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Court the appeal was allowed. In the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice as also in that of Lord Justice Rigby many authorities are mentioned.

QUEEN’S BENCH DIVISION.—BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (LANCASHIRE) LIMITED AND OTHERS v. GRUNDY AND OTHERS. Before JUSTICES BIGHAM and PHILLIMORE. 21st June 1900.

Rival traders—Combination—Conspiracy.

The Plaintiffs and Defendants were both in the same trade; sellers of etchings and engravings. The Plaintiffs complained of a circular marked private and confidential published by the Defendants in combination with others (the circular containing twenty-one signatures) thereby maliciously and without just cause inducing customers not to deal with them.

The defence was that the statement of claim showed no cause of action.

The learned Judges differed in opinion.

MR. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE in the course of his judgment said: “I should hold that all confederacies to injure a man by committing torts, which would be actionable against individuals committing them separately, become indictable by reason of the combination. It seems further that confederacies to injure without committing actionable torts but by doing acts punishable only in the ecclesiastical Courts are also indictable conspiracies . . . . . If the confederacy in this case for the motives and purposes alleged in the statement of claim were proved as laid it would be indictable and at least equally if not a fortiori actionable; in other words given the confederacy, the motive and the purpose make all the difference."

MR. JUSTICE BIGHAM whose judgment prevailed concludes it as follows:—"In the present case I can find no act alleged against the Defendants which amounts to a violation of any right in the Plaintiffs, nor can I find any act alleged against the Defendants which is unlawful as against any other individual or against the public at large. I therefore come to the conclusion that the statement of claim discloses no cause of action." The keynote to the decision appears in the following sentences:—"No conspiracy can give rise to a civil action unless it violates or threatens to violate the rights of an individual as distinguished from the rights of the public at large. If it does violate the rights of an individual, he may sue for damages; if it threatens such a violation he may sue for an injunction. But before any action can lie a right in the individual must be violated or threatened."

Among the cases considered by the learned Judges were those of the Mogul Steamship Co. (1892, A. C. 25), and Allen v. Flood (1898, I. A. C. 1)

Leave to appeal was granted to Plaintiffs, but the action was dismissed.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Colefax for the Plaintiffs.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—THURSBY v. ECCLES. Before MR. JUSTICE BIGHAM. 8th December 1900.

Thursby had let a flat to Eccles. The latter agreed to rent same at £4-10 per week for a certain time. On the day the agreement was entered into Eccles paid down one week's rent. There was no memorandum of agreement. The parties fell out. Defendant never took possession and repudiated the contract.

The question was whether the payment of the week's rent in advance was sufficient part performance of the contract so as to take it out of the statute of frauds, rendering the written memorandum unnecessary.

The learned Judge held that the mere payment of rent did not take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Maddeson v. Alderson (8 App. Cas., p. 479) showed that a payment of part of the purchase money in a contract of sale of lands was not such a part performance of the contract as will take it out of the statute and the learned Judge could see no distinction in principle between that and a payment of rent. The action therefore failed.

Divorce—Conduct after suit, evidence of.

This was a husband's suit for divorce by reason of wife's adultery with co-Respondents.

Mr. Knight for the Petitioner, in course of proving his case, offered evidence that one co-Respondent, on a date after suit was brought, was found at 7 A.M. sleeping half-naked outside the open door of Respondent's bed-room.

Mr. Knight. It was after suit. Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 295—Money realised after discharge—Rateable distribution.

An application for distribution under sec. 295 of the money realised by attachment of salary of this Defendant, after his personal discharge, standing to the credit of this suit.

The Defendant obtained his personal discharge on the 7th April 1897, the order being not subject to any condition that this insolvent, who was a Government officer, would pay any portion of his salary to the Official Assignee. Subsequently he again contracted debts and several decrees (which cannot come under his schedule) were made against him: in execution of one of those decrees the moiety of his salary was attached and the money so realized stands now to the credit of this suit.

Mr. Sinha applied on notice to all parties concerned for an order that a rateable distribution be made of the money standing to the credit of this suit. He said that he could cite many authorities in support of his contention that the Official Assignee as assignee of the estate of the insolvent is not entitled to the money but that the same should be distributed amongst the holders of the subsequent decrees, but as the Official Assignee is not going to oppose or claim the money under sec. 27 of the Insolvent Act he would be content with citing only Kristo Komul Mitter v. Suresh Chandra Deb (I. L. R. 8 Cal. 556).

Held—That the subsequent creditors are entitled to have the money rateably distributed among themselves and that the attaching creditors' costs of references are to be added to their respective claims.

No. 1384 of 1898.

GHOSH, J.	UMESH CHUNDER DEY and

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13—Res judicata—Judgment in previous suit between the same parties, whether operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit, if all the issues in the former are not decided.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of July 1898, against a decision of H. R. H. Coxe, Esq., Judge of Midnapur, dated the 25th of April 1898, confirming a decree of Babu Girish Chunder Chowdhury, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 17th of June 1897.

The question for decision in this appeal was whether the suit out of which the present appeal arose was barred by res judicata by virtue of a judgment in a previous suit between the parties.

The present suit was one for an account and for recovery of such sums of money as upon taking of such accounts may be found due to the Plaintiff from the Defendant, the latter being regarded as the Plaintiff's servant. The judgment, by virtue of which it was said that the present suit was barred, had been passed in a suit in which the Plaintiff claimed, in the first place, the winding up of the partnership business, the Defendant being regarded as a co-partner in the business which was being managed by him; in the second place for an account being taken from the Defendant, he being regarded as the managing partner; and, in the third place, for the recovery of such sums of money as might upon the taking of an account from the Defendant be found due to the Plaintiff. The following issues were raised in the previous suit:—

First.—Whether the Plaintiff and Defendant were members of a partnership? If so, what were the terms of the contract of the partnership business, and whether the plaint has been properly drawn up?

Second.—Whether the Defendant is liable to the Plaintiff for accounts?

Third.—Whether the Defendant was as the Plaintiff's servant remunerated by a share in the profits?

Fourth.—What payments, if any, have been made by the Defendant for which the Plaintiff has not given him credit?

Fifth.—What amount, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled to from the Defendant?

Sixth.—What other relief is the Plaintiff entitled to?

Seventh.—Is the suit barred by limitation?

The Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiff and Defendant were not partners and that the Defendant could not be sued in the capacity of a partner and he therefore dismissed the suit; at the conclusion of the trial the Plaintiff asked that an account might be decreed against the Defendant he being treated as a servant; but the Court did not allow the Plaintiff to change the character of the suit which was accordingly dismissed.

The judgment in the previous suit was held by both the lower Courts to operate as res judicata in the present suit.

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Their Lordships were of opinion that it was perfectly clear that in the previous suit the Subordinate Judge meant to deal with the first issue only and not with any of the other issues, he being of opinion, that to regard the Defendant as a servant and to call upon him to render an account in that capacity would be to convert a suit of one character into a suit of a wholly different character; and that the matter involved in the present suit not having been really dealt with and decided in the previous suit, the present suit was not barred.

Babus Lal Mohun Das and Sarat Chandra Dutt for the Appellants.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2087 of 1899.

GHOSE, J. SADAI NAIK, Plaintiff, Appellant,
 PRATT, J. v.
 1901. SERAI NAIK and another, Defendants
 9, January. and Objectors-Respondents.

Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (X of 1859), sec. 161—Rent suit, where claim is for amount less than Rs. 5,000—Second appeal, against judgment of District Judge, if lies—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 584—Practice. Inferences from facts—Second appeal, grounds of—Lease, termination of, on death of grantor, of itself—Voidable or void.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th of November 1899, against a decision of W. B. Brown, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 14th September 1899, reversing a decision of Babu Nayaranjan Bhuttacharjee, Sub-divisional Officer and Deputy Collector of Bhadruck, dated the 13th May 1899.

This appeal arose out of a suit for rent instituted under Act X of 1859. The claim was in respect of rents for the year 1305 (Uriya style 24 Bhad. 1304 to 12 Bhad. 1305, B. S.). The suit was contested by the Defendants, the tenants, upon the ground that the Plaintiff had no right to recover it and they were supported in that respect by a third party, who had intervened under the provisions of sec. 77 of Act X of 1859.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

It appears that a certain zemindari belonged to three ladies Adhoremoni, Giribala and Nistarini, each being entitled to a one-third share thereof. Nistarini executed an ijara pottah in respect of her one-third share in favour of Adhoremoni and Giribala, and it was for a period commencing from 1289 and ending with 1304, B. S. Nistarini died in Falgoun 1303, B. S., corresponding to some date in February 1897, and Matungini, the intervenor Defendant—the daughter of Nistarini—succeeded to the estate. In the meantime Adhoremoni and Giribala had sublet their ijara interest in favour of the present Plaintiff. Shortly after the death of Nistarini the revenue payable on account of her share in the zemindari fell due, and it was paid by the Plaintiff in April 1897, and not by Matungini.

That one of the terms of the ijara lease was that out of the rent payable by the ijardars to the lessor, the former should pay the Government revenue on account of the lessor's share in the zemindari, and apparently, it was with reference to this condition in the ijara pottah that the payment in April 1897 was made by the Plaintiff.

In Kartik 1304, B. S., corresponding to some date in October 1897, two notices were issued by Matungini one of the notices being to the tenants on the property, and the other to Adhoremoni and Giribala.

No allusion was there made as to the ijara having either expired or been brought to a termination; and there was nothing in either of these notices indicating that Matungini had determined the ijara.

In the next month, November 1897, another kist of Government revenue fell due, but Matungini took no steps to pay the kist, just in the same way as she had made no payment in respect of the April kist.

The Deputy Collector who tried the suit was of opinion that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover the rent, and accordingly passed a decree in his favour. On appeal the District Judge reversed the judgment of the Deputy Collector upon the ground that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover the rent claimed. He held that upon the death of Nistarini the ijara came to an end by itself, and that the failure on the part of the intervenor to pay the revenue either in April 1897 or in November 1897 could not and did not indicate that it was her intention to allow the lease to run on until the year 1304, B. S.

The Plaintiff thereupon preferred this second appeal, and at the hearing a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondents-Defendants—upon the ground that no second appeal lay to the High Court against the judgment of the District Judge, the suit for rent being for an amount less than Rs. 5,000.

Held—That a second appeal lies to the High Court against a judgment and decree of the District Judge passed on appeal in a suit for rent under Act X of 1859, when the amount claimed is less than Rs. 5,000.

Hallodhur Biswas v. Mahesh Chandra Halder (Sudder Dewany Decisions for the year 1861, Act X of 1859 Rulings, p. 8) followed; Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo Bahadur v. Tara Nath Mukerjee (I. R. 9 I. A. 174) referred to; and Khedon Mahato v. Bulhun Mahato (4 C. W. N. 333) distinguished.

That the lease could not and did not come to an end by itself upon the death of Nistarini. Modhu Sudan Singh v. E. G. Rooke (I. R. 25 Cal. 1).

That the lease was voidable and the intervenor was at liberty to bring it to a termination but neither by the notices nor by any other act or conduct on her part she having done so, and she having allowed the ijardars to pay the Government revenue on more occasions than one, the legitimate inference is that the ijara was not brought to a termination but was allowed to run on.

Balu Boinya Nath Dutt for the Appellant.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee, with Babus Jnanendra Nath Bose and Biraj Mohan Morumdar, for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2457 OF 1898.

GHOSE, J.
PRATT, J.

PURNA CHANDRA SARKAR,
Plaintiff, Appellant,

1901.

10, January.

NILMADHUB NANDI, Defendant,
Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 375, 426, 429 (c)—Compromise decree, jurisdiction to pass, when the compromise relates to matters outside the scope of the suit—Review, admission of, presented out of time—Reasons, sufficient for admission—Review, granting of, on ground not taken in the application and upon ground untenable—Registration Act (III of 1877) sec. 77.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of December 1898, against a decree of Babu Chandi Charan Sen, Additional Subordinate Judge of Burdwan; dated the 29th of September 1898, passed on appeal from the decision of Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, Additional Munsif of Ranigunge, dated the 31st July 1895.

The suit out of which this appeal arose, was brought by one Srimanjuri Dassi, for registration of a kabuliyat under sec. 77 of the Registration Act. The Plaintiff stated in her plaint that there was a dispute between her and the Defendant Nilmadhub Nandi; that the Defendant afterwards proposed to settle the matter amicably and promised to pay Rs. 100 as compensation and to execute a kabuliyat for enhanced jama of the lands held by him under the Plaintiff; that the Defendant then executed the kabuliyat in suit in her favour on the 16th Kartick 1301, B. S., and promised to register the same after payment of the compensation which was to be paid after the paddy was reaped; that the Defendant not having registered the kabuliyat at the appointed time, she presented it for registration at the Sub-Registry Office when the Defendant denied execution of the document and the Sub-Registrar refused to register the same; she thereupon appealed to the Registrar and her appeal was disallowed on the 3rd June 1895. Then Purna Chandra Sarkar and Uttam Chandra Sarkar, on the death of their mother Srimanjuri Dassi, were substituted in her place as Plaintiffs in this suit for registration of the document.

The Defendant contended that he did not execute the kabuliyat in suit and did not agree to pay enhanced jama; that he did not consent to pay Rs. 100 for compensation; that he did not promise to register the kabuliyat as stated in the plaint and that he did not settle the dispute amicably as alleged in the plaint.

The first Court decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. While the appeal was pending, the parties came to a compromise and filed a petition of compromise on the 31st January 1898. In that petition it was set forth that the kabuliyat in suit would be upheld; that the Plaintiffs would withdraw certain pending suits; that they would grant a settlement to the Defendant of certain Noabad lands and waste lands, and would admit him as the holder of certain other mal lands. A decree was passed in accordance with the compromise on the 3rd February 1898, the terms of the Solenamâ being embodied in full in the decree. On the 8th June 1898, the Defendant presented an application for review after 90 days. The application which was based on the ground of fraud, deceit, coercion and failure to carry out the terms of the compromise, was admitted on the ground that both parties misunderstood the terms and meaning of the Solenamâ and ultimately the compromise decree was set aside and the appeal reheard, the result being that the decree of the first Court was reversed, and the suit dismissed.

Then this second appeal was preferred by the Plaintiff, and the principal grounds urged before the Court were:—(1) That the review was admitted after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor, and without sufficient cause, and (2) that the review was admitted on a ground not stated in the application.

Held—That a review presented after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor cannot be admitted when no sufficient reason is alleged and found for presenting the review out of time.

That a Court is not competent to admit a review upon a ground not expressly taken in the application for review nor when the ground is clearly untenable.

That a decree upon a compromise cannot be regarded as ultra vires simply because the deed of compromise referred also to matters outside the subject-matter of the suit.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babus Lal Mohan Das and Debendra Chandra Mullick for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed: Compromise decree affirmed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE DEEPLY MOURN TO RECORD THE DEATH OF Her Gracious Majesty, Victoria, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India, which sad event took place at Osborne, at 6-30 P.M., on Tuesday the 22nd of January last. It is not for us to recount all the virtues that God had blessed her with, or record the blessings of her reign. It will suffice to say that both in her private life, and in her public duties she had lived, and acted up to the ideals of the people over whom she had been called upon to rule. She was devoted as a wife, loving as a mother, simple, frugal and virtuous in private life and the very ideal of a constitutional monarch. The Victorian period occupies a position in history, which for the growth and progress of philosophical thought, scientific skill, commercial activity, enlightened legislation and the reformation of the Courts and the institutions of Government has, perhaps, never been surpassed in the history of the world. That she directly and indirectly contributed a great deal towards the progress and prosperity of her people cannot be gainsaid. Progress in its true sense is only possible under peaceful and moral conditions of society, such as she throughout endeavoured to maintain. India came under her direct rule in 1858 and she ever since evinced a personal solicitude for her welfare and sorrow in her sufferings.

ON RECEIPT OF THE NEWS OF HER MAJESTY'S DEATH the Lords of the Privy Council and others assembled at St. James's Palace and declared the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to have rightly come to the High and Mighty Prince Albert Edward and proclaimed His Most Gracious Majesty, King Edward VII, King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and Emperor of India. The Governor-General in Council announced this proclamation by notification in the Gazette of India of the 26th of January 1901, and on that day in the afternoon, at 5 P.M., the Sheriff of Calcutta read the proclamation and the declaration made by His Majesty subsequent thereto, from the steps of the Town Hall. The proclamation is identical in form with that made at the accession of the late lamented Sovereign and the most important announcement in His Majesty's declaration is his determination to be a constitutional monarch in the strictest sense of the word. The importance of this assurance we shall explain below.

IT MUST NOT BE SUPPOSED THAT THE KING OF England is by law a constitutional monarch. Under the laws of England, the King up to this day enjoys very high privileges and prerogatives. Under the written constitution, the King is the Chief Executive. He has co-ordinate powers of legislation and can veto the Bills passed in Parliament. He can call, prorogue, dissolve Parliament. He can appoint or discharge Ministers at his will. He can raise or disband the army and navy and holds supreme command over them. He is the "Fountain of Honour," and can create Peers and confer titles, dignities and offices of all kind. He is the head of the National Church and controls the clergy. He is the only legal Sovereign known to the Foreign powers and has the sole right of accrediting or receiving ambassadors, of entering into offensive or defensive alliances of making treaties or of declaring war or peace. In contrast to these direct statutory powers there are but a few indirect statutory limitations to them. Of these latter kind the most prominent are that he cannot keep a standing army in time of peace without consent of Parliament or suspend laws or dispense with their operation. These were the only limitations imposed by the Bill of Rights. To these the Act of Settlement only added the independence of the Judges by making them removeable only by a vote of both Houses of Parliament and not at royal pleasure, as before. The Act of Settlement further settled the succession to the throne of the Hanoverian Kings but in no other respect imposed any limitations on the royal prerogatives, the abuse of which had brought about the Revolution of 1688. The process by which the prerogatives of the Crown have, since the Revolution, been brought under constitutional control is matter of long history. But without entering into any details it may safely be said that the most effective of this control is financial. The King has since the Revolution been deprived of the power of appropriation or expenditure of revenue and is now dependant on an allowance called the Civil List for his personal expenses and the expenses of the royal household.* He has no power to maintain the army or navy except by the annual vote of the House of Commons, nor can his officers maintain discipline in the army or navy except under the Mutiny Act, passed annually by Parliament. These are no doubt very effective checks over the high privileges and prerogatives of the Crown enumerated above. But still experience has shown how a monarch like George III, determined to rule as a King, could set the authority of the Parliament at naught and played with the ministers and the political parties as he liked. With another monarch, the means to an end, may not be a wholesale corruption of the Commons but it may be some pretence for the glory of national arms which has, at all times and ages, paid with the populace. The rights of the Sovereign to dissolve Parliament, to discharge Ministers, to create Peers, are such potent factors in the constitution of England that they may any day be exercised, for good or evil, by an ambitious King to establish a personal rule. Mr. Gladstone with all his regard for the constitution was conscious of the rocks ahead and observed in his Gleanings of Past Years:—"It will be an evil and a perilous day for the monarchy were any prospective possessor of the Crown to assume or claim for himself final, or preponderating, or even independent power, in any one department of State." But it may equally be a perilous day for the constitution of England. But England has been singularly fortunate in her late lamented Sovereign and to have now in Her successor a King whose ambition it is to be a constitutional monarch in the strictest sense of the word. His Majesty has watched the working of the constitution and the political life of his people during the better part of the last half century and his determination is, no doubt, the dictate of his wisdom. He is sure to be as good a King as his mother was a Queen.

DEATH OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HIGH COURT.

To-day on the reopening of the High Court after the Sri Panchami holidays the Full Court assembled at 11 A.M., in the Chief Justice's Court. The Chief Justice and the judges were all robed in scarlet and were in full mourning. All the branches of the profession were strongly represented and the Court room was filled long before 11 o'clock and many had to wait outside for want of room. The Chief Justice, referring to the death of Her Majesty, spoke with great feeling and all the judges remained standing while his Lordship spoke.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE addressing the Bar said:—

MR. ADVOCATE-GENERAL AND BABU RAM CHARAN MITTRA.—We are assembled to-day in the gloom of a great national sorrow, the death of our great, good and most beloved Queen, the mighty monarch of a mighty Empire. Our grief, genuine and spontaneous, will be shared not only by those who owed allegiance to Her Royal and Imperial sway, but by every nation of the civilized world.

The reign of Her late Most Gracious Majesty was unsurpassed, in point of length, in the annals of the British Crown: it has become identified, with the march of progress, of civilization, and of social advancement: it has been signalized by the ever-increasing power and prosperity of the British Nation. The events of the last trying, and to many, most distressful year, have displayed to the world how united was our Empire in the assertion of its rights: I am satisfied that to-day that Empire will be equally united in its expression of heartfelt grief at the death of the Most Illustrious and Gracious Lady, so recently our revered and beloved Queen.

Historians have written of great Kings and of great Queens, but the Historian of to-day will have to chronicle a reign conspicuous in the feature of the deep love of a Queen for her people, and of the equal love and reverence of that people for their Queen. Years, as they have rolled swiftly onward, have tended only to strengthen and to intensify that sense of mutual attachment and of affection, but it was the ever womanly sympathy of Her late Majesty which inspired this feeling in the beginning, and caused it to become national in the end. Truly did this Most Gracious Lady share with her people their joys and their sorrows, as they, in all loyalty, sympathised with her many trials and bereavements. Whenever calamity befel them, whether in England or in India or in the Colonies, a Royal message was at once flashed along the wires, replete with the expression of Her Royal condolence and womanly tenderness. It was this manifestation of Her late Majesty's most sympathetic nature which went so direct to the heart of the nation.

To the people of India the news of Her late Majesty's death will be inexpressibly sad, for there was, perhaps, no portion of Her vast dominions which attracted more closely Her Royal regard, whilst again and again she has evinced her deep and gracious interest in the welfare of its people, and unstinted sympathy with their many troubles. The highest and the lowest in India, the Ruling Prince and the toiling peasant, will mourn alike the loss which the nation has sustained.

I must detain you no longer. I might, perhaps, have paid a most respectful tribute, one of true admiration, to the remarkable qualities which distinguished Her late Most Gracious Majesty as a constitutional Sovereign, and as the fountain-head of Justice, to her uncompromising championship of its purity and impartiality. But at this moment such reflections would be somewhat out of place. I would prefer to hope, weak and ineffective as my words may have been, that I have at least illustrated how deeply rooted, during her life, was the love and affection of her people towards our late Gracious Queen, confident as I am, that, after her death, there will ever remain enshrined in their hearts the memory of Her unrivalled public and private, Queenly and womanly, virtues, the recollection, of her long, her glorious and most beneficent reign.

THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL, then addressing the Bench on behalf of Bar said:—

MY LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, MY LORDS THE JUDGES OF THIS COURT,—The death of our lamented Queen-Empress has plunged her people into grief. There is in the hearts of all, who but lately owned her beneficent sway, a deep and ever-abiding sense of that irreparable loss which the Empire has sustained by her departure. In that deep, that widespread grief, India largely shares. India, as my Lord has most truly observed, has ever been the special object of Her late Majesty's most sincere concern, Her most sympathetic interest, and in her sorrow we too, who have, some of us for many years, been privileged to practise in this High Court, Her Majesty's own foundation—so long the supreme interpreter of Her laws and the guardian of the liberties of Her subjects on this side of India—have our share and desire to testify to its sincerity.

My Lord, during Her reign, the longest perhaps known to history, as it is to the annals of England, the Indian Empire, of which she was pleased graciously to assume the title of Empress in 1877, has been greatly augmented and wisely consolidated and what is perhaps of greater import to those more immediately concerned, the condition of the people of this country, be they Hindus, Mahomedans, Buddhists or Christians and of the various towns and tribes that owned Her sway, has, by good Government, equal laws and impartial administration of justice, been immeasurably improved. But over and beyond the great debt of gratitude which India owes on this account to Her late lamented and Most Gracious Empress, there is the deep bond of sympathy arising out of Her late Majesty's heartfelt concern for the welfare of Her subjects. From that great, that womanly virtue, queened in her, she has never swerved. She has shared in all the sorrows and calamities which have from time to time befallen Her Indian subjects. It is fitting, therefore, my Lord, I crave leave to say, that in this Court there should be expression given to the keen sense of bereavement with which the whole Empire is inundated. You, my Lord, have, may I be permitted to say, well and nobly voiced the feelings of us all. You have in fitting words given utterance to the sorrow of the Bench. I would fain express the sorrow of the Bar and of the Vakeels and Attorneys of this Court on whose behalf and at whose request, I speak. Of very truth, my Lord, as your Lordship has so well observed, the reign of Her departed Majesty, coeval with the larger part of the greatest century of the Christian era, has been one of progress, progress upon progress in every direction that made for the greatness, the glory and the good of the Empire. Upon Her tomb, there may in justice be inscribed—“She wrought Her people lasting good.” Nor were the private virtues of that Most Gracious Lady, whom we mourn, unequal to the greatness of Her public record. Nay, rather their effulgence bathes it in inextinguishable light. Her life was pure. She made Her royal residence a model home. Her charity was instituted in all her people's trials. Victoria the Great and Good, as to future ages she will be known, has with the large heart of a mother shared in all the sorrows in all the trials and calamities that have befallen Her people and they, in their turn, have shared in such measure as they might, in the trials which have befallen that Most Gracious Lady and witnessed that every sad stroke of sorrow but brought Her into nearer relation with themselves, into most assiduous concern for the well-being of the Empire. And so she reigned in the hearts of Her people and established in reverential love, the broad foundations of that throne to which the King, Her son, has succeeded. Now she rests from Her labours and has, as we trust, for a temporal obtained an eternal Crown. But for us, for Her sorrowing subjects, throughout the length and breadth of Her great Empire, aye, and for many more who have not owned Her sway, there remained but sorrow, a sorrow heartfelt and sincere, “for Her in whom a thousand claims to reverence closed as mother, wife and Queen.”

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The Court will now adjourn.

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—COOKE v. CHARLES VOGELER & Co. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD MACNAGHTEN, LORD DAVEY, LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD, LORD BRAMPTON and LORD ROBERTSON. 14th December 1900.

Bankruptcy Court—Jurisdiction over foreigners residing abroad but trading in London.

The Respondents' firm was constituted of two partners named Devries, citizens of America, residing in Baltimore where the principal business of manufacturers of Patent medicines was carried on. A branch business was carried on in the Farringdon Road, city of London, by their manager, one Geddes, under a power-of-attorney. The Manager at Baltimore was one Dularey. There were other branches, one at Paris, one at Sydney and elsewhere. In carrying on the London business the Company had contracted debts in England, and they had assets in England. On December 18th, 1899, the Company made a conveyance and assignment of all their property wherever situated to Dularey as trustee for the benefit of the creditors generally. On January 6th, 1900, they gave notice to a creditor that they were about to suspend payment of their debts.

Immediately after two of the English creditors of the Company filed a bankruptcy petition against the Company in the High Court alleging that within 3 months from the date of the presentation of the petition the firm had committed two acts of bankruptcy, viz., the assignment and the said notice.

The debtors opposed the making of a receiving order, mainly disputing the jurisdiction of the Court.

The Registrar following Ex parte Blain (1879, 12 Ch. D. 522), Ex parte Crispin (1873, L. R. 8 Ch. 274) and In re Pearson dismissed the petition on the ground that the objection against the jurisdiction was sound.

The Court of Appeal affirmed that decision (1900, 1 Q. B. 541) deciding that the Company was not a debtor within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act and following the ruling of In re Pearson.

The House of Lords now unanimously affirmed that decision. The Lord Chancellor in his judgment, inter alia, referred with approval to the decision, given in Ex parte Blain, he said:—"The question in debate came before a Court consisting of Lord Justice James, Lord Esher and Lord Justice Cotton and upon principles which I think were established by Ex parte Crispin they held on terms that an act of Bankruptcy must be a personal act or default, and it cannot be committed through an agent, nor by a firm as such; and that the English statute could only affect English subjects or foreigners who came either permanently or temporarily within the allegiance of the English Crown."

Then referring to In re Pearson, the Lord Chancellor said the Bankruptcy Act of 1883 made no difference in the law. As Lord Justice Fry had pointed out the word "debtor" in sub-sec. 1 (g) of sec. 4 did not mean a debtor all over the world, but only a debtor who is subject to the law of England and such a debtor must be found before an act of Bankruptcy can be committed.

Lord Davey pointed out that in Ex parte Crispin it was laid down that a foreigner trading in England is subject to the Bankruptcy law, but that it is the act of Bankruptcy which gives the Court jurisdiction, and that in the case of a foreigner that act of Bankruptcy must be committed in this country, or be an act intended to operate according to the law of this country. The principle enunciated is equally applicable whether the foreigner be brought within the reach of the Bankruptcy law by his residence in this country, or from the fact of his trading here. In the present case the only act which could be relied on as an act of Bankruptcy was the assignment, but that was executed at Baltimore and was intended to have effect according to the law of Maryland and not of this country. There was no evidence of any authority from the Respondents to Dularey, to give notice of suspension. Dularey's instructions to Geddes, from whom notice was given to creditors, must be taken to have been given by Dularey as assignee and not as agent of the Respondent Company.

Sir Robert Reid, Q. C., and Mr. Herbert Reid, Q. C., and Mr. Muir Mackenzie for the Appellants.

Mr. Russell, Q. C., Mr. Danckwerts, Q. C., and Mr. Carrington for the Company.

C. W. A.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED.—REGINA v. LUDWIG KANE. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE BRUCE, MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY, MR. JUSTICE BIGHAM and MR. JUSTICE DARLING. 20th December 1900.

Larceny Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 96, sec. 75)—Interpretation of "or other agent."

THE QUEEN v. PORTUGAL (16 Q. B. D. 487) followed.

The question in this case which was reserved by Mr. Justice Ridley at the trial of the prisoner, on the 13th December 1900, at the Central Criminal Court, was whether the prisoner who was found guilty by the jury, was an agent within the meaning of the first part of sec. 75 of the Larceny Act; a question was also raised whether the cheque and receipt hereinafter mentioned constituted such a direction in writing as to come within its intent. This last point was not decided.

One Mrs. Williamson and the prisoner were both guests or lodgers at an hotel in London. The prisoner was a conjurer and thought reader. On the 13th of last November he drew Mrs. Williamson's attention to an advertisement regarding the projected Baker Street to Waterloo Railway and induced her to consent to take shares therein. He told her that he was himself going to apply for shares amounting to £60. Mrs. Williamson fell in with his suggestion and forthwith drew a cheque for £60 in the prisoner's favour in order that he may apply on her behalf for shares of a like amount.

He also suggested to her not to cross the cheque because the list of applications was closing that afternoon. She did as was desired by him. It was proved at the trial that the prisoner cashed the cheque that afternoon and made no application for the shares. At her request that afternoon prisoner gave her a receipt as follows:—"Received of Mrs. Williamson £60 for the application of 60 shares in the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway to be returned if those shares are not obtainable." Professor L. Kane, 13th November 1900."

At the trial the question for consideration was whether the prisoner was an agent and it was urged for the prosecution that the cheque and receipt together, indeed that the latter alone, contained such a direction in writing as to bring his offence within sec. 75 of the above Act, The Queen v. Christian (L. R. 2 C. C. R., p. 94). Those were the questions argued. The learned Judge told the jury that on both points the case fell within the meaning and intent of the said section. The prisoner was convicted, but admitted to bail, the points being reserved. Upon the cause coming up before the Court for Crown Cases Reserved as above constituted, it was admitted by the counsel for the prosecution, that in the said case of Regina v. Portugal it had been decided, that a person must be one who follows the vocation of an agent, that is, one whose occupation is similar to those enumerated in the section in order to be an agent within the purview of that section. The prisoner could not, therefore, be brought within its meaning and so the conviction could not be supported.

THE COURT quashed the conviction in accordance with the ruling in the last-mentioned cases, observing as regards the second question that it will have to be argued out when it arose again.

Mr. W. C. Mathews for the Prosecution.

Mr. Humphreys for the Prisoner.

C. W. A.

Conviction quashed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—WETT v. VAN TRAMP. Before Mr. JUSTICE BYRNE. 31st July 1900.

Voluntary settlement—Rectification at the instance of a volunteer.

In this case a niece sought the rectification of a voluntary settlement made by a Mr. Peter Stewart MacIver in 1891 by which a large sum of money was settled on the settlor's grandson and his issue. The grandson died in 1898 a bachelor, having by Will left him property including the voluntary settlement funds to his mother who had after the death of his father married a Mr. Broadley.

The law upon the matter was considered by the learned Judge who referred to Thompson v. Whitmore (J. & H., sec. 273) as an authority for the right of a volunteer to have an error rectified. In

Lester v. Hodgson (L. R. 6 Eq., see p. 34) it was laid down that if a voluntary settlor died and it was then discovered that beyond all doubt the deed was not prepared in the exact manner which the settlor intended, the deed may be reformed or those particular provisions needful to bring it into accord with his intentions may be introduced. Upon an examination of the evidence Mr. Justice Byrne did not find any sufficient intention contrary to that actually expressed by the deed. The Court should not act upon any but the clearest and most certain demonstration of error and actual intention.

Mr. Eady, Q. C., Mr. Rowden, Q. C., and Mr. Shelford for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Warrington, Q. C., Mr. Levell, Q. C., Mr. Drace and Mr. Boroll for the Defendants.

Action failed: Suit dismissed with costs.

C. W. A.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—WHITTAKER v. PALMER. Before Mr. JUSTICE COZENS HARDY. 31st July 1900.

Administration of insolvent estates—Rules of Bankruptcy—Judicature Act, 1875, sec. 10, voluntary debts.

This matter was before the Court by way of summons and raised the question whether in the administration of an estate which is insufficient for the payment in full of all debts, those which are voluntary should be postponed to those for valuable consideration. The claimants were the trustees of a voluntary settlement made in favour of a lunatic son; they urged that they were entitled pari passu with the creditors for value.

The learned Judge after a consideration of sec. 10 and various decisions on the subject held that by the authorities he was bound to find that voluntary debts must rank with other debts precisely as they would do in bankruptcy, and that the old rule of the Court of Chancery whereby such debts were deferred must be regarded as abrogated by the section under consideration.

Mr. V. Smith, Q. C., and Mr. Druce for the claimants.

Mr. Capron for the testator's personal representatives.

Mr. Eve, Q. C., and Mr. Ford for the creditors for value.

C. W. A. Decision in favour of claimants.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—MOHROS DE ARROZ v. MUMFORD. Before Mr. JUSTICE BIGHAM. 28th June 1900.

Marine Insurance—Loss caused by war owing to being "requisitioned."

Plaintiffs were owners of two rice mills in North Manila. The Defendant Mumford is an underwriter. In August 1898 Manila was captured by the Americans during their war with Spain and they took possession of the Philippine Islands. During the war the natives of that Island led by Aquilando had assisted the Americans. In December 1898 at a time when the relations between the Americans and the natives of that Island were in a very unsatisfactory condition, the policy on which this suit was based was executed for a limited period of 12 months on the Plaintiffs' said two Mills. The Phillippinos in their struggle with the Americans were thereafter driven back in the direction of Luzon where the mills in question were situate, which necessitated the managers of the mills vacating them in May 1899; they cleared out under orders of Aquilando, the Commander, and by whom the produce was "requisitioned."

The present action was brought under the said policy to recover the value of a large quantity of produce in the mills so "requisitioned" by Aquilando. The claim was for £16,219 as loss caused by war. The main defence was that the loss was not "directly" caused by the war and therefore not covered by the policy. The learned Judge on a consideration of the policy held that the loss was directly caused by the war within the meaning of the policy. Judgment was given for Plaintiffs for £15,000 owing to the loss caused through the taking away of the rice, but the claim for loss owing to deterioration by reason of its having been kept too long in the mills was not allowed.

Sir R. Reid, Q. C., and Mr. Scrutton for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. J. Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Hamilton for the Respondent.

C. W. A.

Judgment for Plaintiffs.

Practice—Costs—Infant Defendants.

The first was a suit against four persons carrying on business in co-partnership. Two of the Defendants being infants, a guardian ad litem was appointed and the suit was placed on the defended board. Decree was made but the question as to the scale on which costs should be given was reserved, as it had been in the other suits, his Lordship expressing a desire to look into precedents in order to have a uniform practice in the matter. In some of the other suits the guardian ad litem had filed written statements submitting the infants to the protection of the Court.

On this day his Lordship delivered judgment and

Held—That where there are infant Defendants and there is no contest in the suit, costs should be allowed on scale No. 1.

That the guardian ad litem is entitled to file a written statement submitting the infants to the protection of the Court. In that case also costs should be awarded on scale No. 1, but costs of filing the written statements should also be allowed.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 17 OF 1898.

HARRINGTON, J.	}	SIDDESSURY DASSEE
1901.		v.
15, January.	}	JANARDAN SIKKAR.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 131, 132—Notice under sec. 131, Civ. P. C.—Documents, right to use, not disclosed.

This suit came on for hearing on Friday the 11th January and evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff was gone into. On Saturday the 12th, notice was given by the Defendant to the Plaintiff's attorney that he intended to make use of certain account books from 1292, B. S., to 1297, B. S., and that the Plaintiff could have inspection thereof on Monday the 14th at 10-30 A.M. On Monday the suit was not reached. On the suit being called on this day,

Mr. Knight (with him Mr. S. R. Das) for the Plaintiff.—We received this notice only on Saturday. I ask for a direction of the Court now, either that the Defendant is precluded by sec. 131, Civ. P. C., from using these books now or that, if he is entitled to make use of them, the case should be adjourned and time given to us to inspect them. The Defendant filed his affidavit of documents on the 4th May 1898, but did not disclose any books of account. On the 9th June 1898 we asked him to produce his books of account for our inspection. On the 10th he replied that he had no books of account. On the 5th January 1899 we served upon him a notice under sec. 131, Civ. P. C. On the 30th January he writes to us another letter which, I submit, shows that he had some books, but did not choose to disclose them. On the 1st February he wrote to us to say that he had no books of account and if there were any books we were not entitled to see them. On the 15th March 1899 they served us with a reply under sec. 132, Civ. P. C., to our notice. In that they again repeat they have no books. Under these circumstances the Defendant is not entitled to use these books.

Mr. R. Mitra (with him Messrs. Sinha & H. D. Bose) for the Defendant.—I had no notice that this application was going to be made now. The books we are producing are not covered by the notice under sec. 131, Civ. P. C. Under that section, the books required to be produced must be specified, but in the notice served upon us, the only books that are specified are those for the years 1295 to 1300. The 2nd para. of the schedule to that notice "all books of account and documents relating to matters in this suit" does not comply with the terms of this section. The necessity for producing these books now has arisen from the evidence given by the Plaintiff. Till her evidence was given these books were not necessary. It is only to contradict her that we require these books.

Mr. Knight.—These books ought to have been produced before. We could have supported our allegation from these books if we had inspection of them. They cannot now use these books without giving us an opportunity of using them also and they must make a further and better affidavit. For all we know they may have other books.

THE COURT held that the Defendant not having disclosed the books before were not entitled now to make use of them.

Babu N. C. Ray, Attorney for the Plaintiff.

Babu R. C. Mitter, Attorney for the Defendant.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 291 of 1899.

BANERJEE, J. UMESH CHANDRA PRAMANICK and BRETT, J. others, Plaintiffs, Appellants, 1901.
15, January. MATHUR MOHAN HALDAR and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Suit for recovery of money due under a mortgage deed—Usufructuary mortgage—Mortgage security impaired by decree obtained by third party—Personal decree—Succession certificate, if necessary—Debt due to the estate of the deceased or to the heirs—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), sec. 4—New objection taken in appeal for the first time.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of February 1899, against the decree of C. P. Caspersz, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 2nd of September 1898, reversing a decree of Babu Bulloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Alipur, dated the 11th of November 1897.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Appellants to recover money due under a mortgage deed executed by the Defendants in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the Plaintiffs, and for certain other sums of money claimed as damages, on the allegation that the mortgage security has been impaired by reason of a decree obtained by one Bhagaban Chandra Naskar against the Plaintiffs, and that the Plaintiffs had to incur expense in the litigation with Bhagaban Chandra Naskar.

The defence, inter alia, was a denial of liability, on the ground of no money having been borrowed on the mortgage deed, and also on the ground that the Plaintiffs' prayer for foreclosure and sale was illegal, and on the further ground that the mortgage security was not impaired by any wrongful act on the part of the Defendants.

The first Court held that the mortgage was a usufructuary one and that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree for sale of the mortgaged property, but that they were entitled to a decree making the Defendants personally liable for the amount claimed by reason of the mortgage security having been impaired through the wrongful conduct of the Defendants.

Against that decree the Defendants preferred an appeal, and they were allowed by the Appellate Court to take the objection, not raised by them either in the first Court or in their memorandum of appeal, that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree by reason of their not having taken out a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889); and the lower Appellate Court gave effect to that objection and dismissed the suit under sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act.

Then the Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal and on their behalf it was contended that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was a bar to the maintainability of the suit, and that the Court of Appeal below was further wrong in allowing the objection under that section to be raised in the appellate stage of the case, without giving the Plaintiffs an opportunity of producing a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act.

Held.—That the money for which the suit was brought was not a debt due to the estate of the deceased mortgagee within the meaning of sec. 4, sub-sec. 1, cl. (a) of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

Their Lordships observed as follows:—

That the mortgage being a usufructuary mortgage and the case being one in which if the security had remained unimpaired, the right to demand payment of the money would never have accrued to the mortgagee or his legal representatives, and the right to obtain a personal decree against the mortgagors arising only upon the happening of a contingency which might never have happened, viz., the obtaining of a decree by Bhagaban Chandra Naskar which deprived the mortgagees' heirs, the Plaintiffs, of part of the mortgaged property, and the decree having been obtained not against the original mortgagee but against the Plaintiffs themselves, the right to demand payment of the money accrued for the first time to the Plaintiffs and that sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was no bar to the Plaintiffs obtaining a decree in this suit.

That it is doubtful if the District Judge was right in allowing the objection under sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act to be taken in the appellate stage of the case, when the objection was not raised before the first Court, without giving the Plaintiffs an opportunity of meeting it by producing a succession certificate.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerji and Babus Jnanendra Nath Bose and Biraj Mohun Mojumdar for the Appellants. Babus Saroda Charan Mitter and Dasarathi Sanyal for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1928 of 1899.

GHOSE, J. GOPI NATH BISWAS and ors., PRATT, J. Defendants, Appellants,
1900. v.

Heard, 21, December. RADHA SHYAM PODDAR, Judgment, 10, January.] Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, B. C.), secs. 159, 161, 164, 165, 167—Sub-division of tenure by act of parties—Decree in rent suit embodying terms of sub-division—Purchaser in execution of such a decree, right of—Mortgage created by some of the tenure-holders—Annulment of incumbrance, not registered and notified—Notice of such incumbrance—Right of action—Subsequent knowledge of incumbrance.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

One Lakhan was the holder of a separate 8 annas share of a mokurari tenure under Kailash Misra, the rent-free proprietor. Lakhan had two sons, Goday and Becharam, the interest of the latter being inherited by his four sons. Kailas sued Goday and his nephews for arrears of rent of the 8 annas mokurari in question; and a compromise decree was passed whereby it was agreed that the half share of Goday should be separated from the other half share of Becharam's sons, each moiety being deemed an independent tenure. That decree was dated the 23rd March 1889. In execution of the decree the 4 annas share belonging to Becharam's sons was put up for sale and was purchased on the 21st June 1890 by Surja Narain Gossain. Subsequently Kailash sued Surja Narain for arrears of rent, and in execution his 4 annas interest was purchased by the Plaintiff on the 22nd January 1894.

The Plaintiff brought this suit, out of which this appeal arose, for possession of the 4 annas interest on the allegations that he had been put in possession by the Court in May 1894 and dispossessed by the Defendants in the subsequent month of August.

The principal Defendants, Appellants in this appeal, had in April 1876 obtained a mortgage from three of Becharam's sons of their interest in this tenure and recovered a mortgage decree on the 4th September 1890 against two of these sons (neither Surja Narain nor the Plaintiff being made a party to the suit), and in execution thereof on the 23rd May 1894, themselves purchased the interest of these two sons representing one-fourth of the original 8 annas mokurari tenure. The Defendants pleaded that the Plaintiff was not entitled to deprive them of the interest thus acquired because he had, not annulled the incumbrance in the manner and within the time required by law. They also contended that the rent decree in execution of which the Plaintiff purchased the property was a decree in respect of only a share of the tenure, and had therefore only the effect of a money-decree, the sale in execution of which would pass no more than the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor.

Both the lower Courts held that these pleas were invalid and gave the Plaintiff a decree.

Thereupon this appeal was preferred by the principal Defendants and on their behalf the same contentious as were raised on the lower Courts were urged in the High Court, as also this that the solenamah decree, so far as it went beyond the scope of a rent decree and recited a separation of shares between the Defendants was invalid.

Held—That the landlord and the tenure-holders were at perfect liberty to divide the tenure by mutual agreement, and they having done so, the agreement was a binding one between the parties and its validity was not impaired by its being incorporated in the decree; and the separated share in the tenure having been duly and effectively recognised by both landlord and tenants, the Plaintiff's purchase must be regarded as that of an entire tenure.

That the Plaintiff, not being aware of the incumbrance until it was pleaded in the written statement in this suit, and neither he nor his predecessor in interest being made a party to the mortgage suit, and the Plaintiff having been put in possession of the property under his purchase, had a good cause of action and was entitled to recover the property from the Defendants, subject to the condition that the incumbrance would stand good if not annulled within one year if the Plaintiff becoming aware of its existence.

That the Plaintiff's right of action having been good and valid when the suit was brought it could not be taken away by what was brought to his notice for the first time in the Defendants' written statement.

Babu Digam'bur Chatterjee for the Appellants.

No one appeared at the hearing for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY, ON THE 26TH OF January last, sent the following message to the Secretary of State for India for submission to His Majesty the Emperor of India:—

"The Government of India have heard with profound sorrow of the death of Her Majesty the Queen-Emress. From every quarter of India news continues to arrive of unaffected grief and lamentation among all races and creeds. The Government, the Princes, and the people, are one in mourning the death of a Sovereign who was revered here as no previous monarch has been, and to whom loyalty had merged in love. The feeling is that India has lost not merely a Queen, but a mother. On behalf of all classes we beg you to convey to His Majesty the King-Emperor assurance of these sentiments, and to offer to him our respectful homage upon his accession to the throne of the British Empire."

The Secretary of State communicated in reply the following message from the Emperor, dated the 29th of January 1901:—

"I am commanded by the King-Emperor to transmit to your Excellency the following answer, which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to make to the address communicated to me by Your Excellency for submission to His Majesty on behalf of the Government, the Princes, and the people of India:—

I recognise in Your Excellency's message the affection and loyalty inspired by the Queen-Emress Victoria throughout all classes of her subjects in India by the wisdom and justice of her long reign, and by her earnest personal solicitude for their welfare, and I am deeply touched by this expression of their universal sorrow for her death. I desire that my acknowledgments of the homage tendered to me on my accession may be made known to the Chiefs and people of India, whose country I have seen, in whose attachment to my throne I have full confidence, and whose prosperity and happiness will always be to me of the highest interest and concern."

WE INVITE ATTENTION OF THE LOWER COURTS TO the observations of Ameer Ali and Brett, JJ., in the case of Surjmoni Dasee v. Kali Kanta Das, reported in our last issue (5 C. W. N. 195), in connection with the practice, not uncommon amongst Subordinate Judicial Officers, of examining only one or two witnesses a day in heavy contested suits and thus protracting the proceedings or what is, perhaps worse cutting them short on some supposed default of the parties. The practice disapproved of by the learned judges is highly inconvenient to the parties and is often a source of great hardship to them. To keep on a number of witnesses in attendance for any length of time means heavy cost to the parties. Witnesses who come from a distance or have other businesses to attend to, cannot, even with the best efforts of the parties, be persuaded to stay on. The compensation that witnesses ordinarily get, is not sufficient to recompense them for loss of business. Under such circumstances it is not right that Courts should refuse reasonable adjournments and proceed to dispose of cases in the absence of witnesses.

Their Lordships in delivering judgment in the above case (5 C. W. N. at p. 205) remarked:— "This may occasionally suit the convenience of the presiding officer of the Court or may seem to him to be necessary having regard to the other current and possibly urgent work of the Court. But it is a course which this Court has always discouraged, and amongst its other and many disadvantages, it has the effect of leading the parties to believe that not more than one witness or possibly two witnesses if their evidence is likely to be short, will be examined in a day and so to lead them, in order to save expense, not to keep all their witnesses in attendance but to bring them up day after day as it seems likely that they will be examined."

We are sure these observations of their Lordships will have a great salutary effect on the Subordinate Courts. But we may be permitted to point out that it is not always the Subordinate Judicial Officers who are at fault. The system under which they have got to submit periodical returns to the High Court and the fact that their work is often estimated by its quantity and not the quality, are responsible for many of the shortcomings of the lower Courts, of which we have to complain from time to time. The return and its dreaded consequence is always uppermost in their mind and whenever a heavy case comes up before them they are in mortal fear that it will perhaps take up the best part of their time and energy and yield a poor return and in the result, perhaps, merit the censure of the authorities. This, we are sure, will at once give an insight into the practice complained of and will account for the reason why the Subordinate Judicial Officers always take care to dispose of short cases during the best part of the day and take up the heavy ones at its sag end. If the judges would go on circuit and sit with the officers, they would know all the weak points in our system of administration of justice and then be able to suggest considerable improvements in it.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

Notwithstanding the observations of learned judges as regards suits for restitution of conjugal rights being repulsive to civilized notions, (see per MELVILL, J. in Ardesir v. Avabai, 9 Bom. H. C. 293; and per MARKEY, J. in Gatha v. Mochita, 23 W. R. 182) and the fact that the Hindu law books do not recognise a compulsory discharge of marital duties, it can hardly be gainsaid, after a perusal of the careful and elaborate judgment of Ameer Ali and Brett, JJ., in Surjiamoni Dasee v. Kali Kanta Das, reported in our last issue, that such a suit lies between Hindus. It is interesting to note that the practice of allowing suits for the restitution of conjugal rights is peculiarly of English origin and is a transplantation from England into India. A suit for restitution is not a creature of the English Common Law or the English Court of Equity but owes its origin to the Ecclesiastical Courts. The principle on which the Ecclesiastical Courts proceeded was that it is the duty of married persons to live together, and that this duty should be enforced by the decree of the Court. In this connection, the words of Blackstone may be appropriately quoted:—"The suit for restitution of conjugal rights is brought whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason, in which case they will be compelled to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other." Mr. Justice Pinhey, in Dadaji v. Rukhmabai, 1, L. R. 9 Bom., p. 534, traces the process by which gradually such suits were introduced into the Courts in India. In America, however this practice of the English Court did not find favour, as will appear from the following observations of a learned American writer:—"Over England, but not over this country, walks still that spawn of a dark age whose mission it was to keep conjugal sinners in the strait performance of holy matrimonial duties, termed the suit for the restitution of conjugal rights" (Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, 4th Ed., Vol. I, p. 30). In India such suits are very rare [1 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 318]. Still it may now be said to be settled law supported by a long series of decisions ending with the case reported in our last issue that there is no legal bar to the maintainability of such a suit between Hindus. The only point about which there was some doubt and divergence of views was as to the mode in which the decree in such suits should be enforced. (See Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 6th Edition, p. 117). In England the practice till 1884 was that the decree was enforced by attachment and the case of Weldon v. Weldon, L. R. 9 P. D. 52, was the last instance where an order for attachment was granted, Sir James Hannen regretting that the law did not allow any exercise of discretion to the Court. The pressure of public opinion however had begun to be felt and soon after, the Statutes 47 and 48 Vic., Cap. 68 abolished the old practice of enforcing the decree and confined the consequence of disobedience of such a decree to an order for periodical payments in lieu of attachment. In India, the legislature instead of progressing with the times seems to have moved in the opposite direction. The Civil Procedure Code of 1859 did not contain any express provision for making the Court's decree in such cases obeyed. But the idea, peculiar to English Law, that woman may be classed with goods and chattel, furnished perhaps the excuse for the Courts in this country to make such decree obeyed under sec. 200, which related only to immoveable property. In the Code of 1877, however, remedies were expressly provided against the disobedience of decrees for restitution and they were made enforceable by attachment or imprisonment under sec. 260. The Code of 1882 made no alteration in the law in this respect. The procedure followed in the Calcutta High Court for the enforcement of decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights will appear from the case of Troylako Nath Dutt v. Radharani Dasi (3 C. W. N., pp. xxxix and lxxxviii) and the cases referred to therein.

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WALLASEY UNITED TRAMWAYS COMPANY v. WALLASEY DISTRICT URBAN COUNCIL. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD MACNAGHTEN, LORD SHAND and LORD ROBERTSON. 13th December 1900.

Effect of a private statute on a public one. The General Tramways Act is one of 1870. Wallasey has a local Tramways Act of 1878.

The question for consideration was whether this private Act operated to override the provisions of the said General Act of 1870. The General Act, 1870, sec. 43, empowered the local authority at the end of 21 years to purchase on terms therein stated the undertaking of a Tramway Company after serving proper notices. For the Appellants, the United Tramways Company, who sought a declaration that they were not compelled to sell their undertaking, it was urged that the terms of the local Act were very different from and opposed to the provisions of the General Statute of 1870.

Mr. Justice LAWRENCE had on such application granted an interim injunction which was continued by Mr. Justice RIDLEY until the trial of the action.

Two Judges of the Court of Appeal, who heard it by consent, arrived at the conclusion that the injunctions should not have issued and therefore reversed the orders of the Court of first instance.

The United Tramways Company appealed. The House of Lords dismissed the appeal. It was held that the provisions of a public statute could only be varied by clear and express enactment or clear implication in a private Act. There was no real variance between the two statutes, no inconsistency between them, and the well settled principle must prevail.

STANLEY, J. } SARAT CHANDER DAWN and others,
1901. } v.
11, January. } KRISTO DHONE DAWN and others.

Change of Attorney on behalf of infant—Practice—When application should be granted.

Mr. Shelley Bonnerjee, instructed by Babu Sarat Kumar Sircar, Attorney, applied on behalf of the Plaintiffs, who are infants for change of Attorney from Mr. N. C. Bose, the Attorney on the record for the infants.

The application was supported by an affidavit of one Kristo Dhone Kundu, the brother of Sm. Saroda Sundary Das, the next friend of the Plaintiffs. The affidavit alleged amongst other things that the present Attorney did not take his instructions from the next friend but from a person who was a near relation of one of the Defendants and that certain necessary proceedings had not been taken and that the conduct of the suit should be taken off his hands.

Mr. Bonnerjee referred to the case mentioned in Belchambers' Practice, p. 263, and the case of Ram Chander Roy v. Poorno Chunder Roy, decided by Sale, J., and reported in 4 C. W. N., p. cxxxv, in which the former case was followed and contended that a case for change had been made out on the grounds which he had placed before the Court.

Mr. N. C. Bose contra.—I appear to place the facts of the case before the Court and have an affidavit of myself, which I propose to read. It is the settled practice of the Court that a change of Attorney on the application of the next friend of an infant party would be granted only when the Court upon consideration of all the facts is satisfied that the order sought for should be made in the interests of the infant.

Reads affidavit traversing allegations made against him and says he leaves the matter in the hands of the Court.

Held—An application for change of Attorney by next friend is not granted as a matter of course. Good grounds must be shown. As no valid ground has been shown, application refused.

Babu S. C. Sircar, Attorney for the next friend.

Mr. N. C. Bose, Attorney on the Record.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 553 of 1899.

HARINGTON, J. } JADU NATH GHOSH
1901. } v.

19, January. RADHA RAMON MUKERJEE.

Practice—Taxation of costs—Application to make second mortgagee party, costs of—Notice—Registration.

On the application of Babu Kally Nath Mitter, on Thursday, the 17th instant, this case was set down this day for argument on the exceptions to the bill of costs allowed by the taxing officer.

Babu Kally Nath Mitter, stated that his client as the first mortgagee filed this suit for recovery of the mortgage money. He subsequently came to know that there was a puisne mortgagee and accordingly applied to bring him on the record which was granted and the suit was heard in due time and decided. Now in taxing his bills the taxing officer disallowed the costs of this interlocutory application apparently on the authority of Jankiprasad v. Kishen Dat (16 All 478) on the ground that inasmuch as registration of document amounts to notice to the people at large the Plaintiff ought to have searched the Registration office and made the puisne mortgagee a party at the first instance and that if his costs of and incidental to that application were allowed then the Plaintiff would be allowed to reap the benefit of his own laches.

He then argued that registration does not amount to notice, though different High Courts in India have taken different views; for instance, the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts take the American view, viz., that registration is notice and the Madras and the Calcutta High Courts take the English view, viz., that registration is not notice. He referred to Churaman v. Balli (I. L. R. 9 All. 591), Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (I. L. R. 13 All. 432), Jankiprasad v. Kishen Dutt (I. L. R. 16 All. 478), Lakshman Das v. Darrat (I. L. R. 6 Bom. 168), Narayan Lakshman v. Bapu Valad Hasbatarav (I. L. R. 17 Bom. 741), and to Doorga Narain Sen v.

He submitted that notice as defined in sec. 3 of the Act does not make it obligatory on the 1st mortgagee to search the Registration office, for in that case sec. 81 as to marshalling of securities would be entirely meaningless. He argued that if it were so then the costs of the first mortgagee, of properties situated in different parts of the country, in searching the records of the various registration offices would be immense, to allow which would be very hard against the mortgagor. The table of fees provides for no such costs.

He further argued that when the application was made this Court thought it proper and made no order as to costs which means that the costs will be the costs in the suit. He referred to Morgan, on Costs, p. 47, Gay and Johnson, Vol. II, p. 458, Dalings' Report, p. 418.

Held—That the whole question turns upon the question whether registration of a document amounts to notice to all concerned. The application being ex parte, in the absence of the argument on the other side and upon the authority of Inderdewan Pershad v. Gobind Lall Chowdhry (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 790) which held that Registration did not amount to notice of mortgage. The Court is not prepared to bind the Plaintiff with notice.

Registration of itself is not notice, under sec. 85 of Act IV of 1882, to the mortgagees of the existence of subsequent encumbrances and consequently the costs of and incidental to the application under reference will be allowed.

Costs allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL SIDE

No. 11 of 1900.

MACLEAN, C. J. THE ROYAL INSURANCE CO.,
PRINSEE, J. Defendants, Appellants,
HILL, J. v.

1901.

OKHOY COOMAR DUTT and others,

8, January. Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Practice—Report of Registrar, Exceptions to—Exceptions to report—Time for giving notice of motion—Belchambers' Rules and Orders, Rule 615 (565, 1st Ed.)—Belchambers' Rules and Orders, Rule 615 (567, 1st Ed.)—"Fraud, surprise or mistake or such other special ground," meaning of—Appeal.

This was an appeal from an order of Sale, J., refusing to make absolute a rule, which had been issued by him under circumstances mentioned below to shew cause why the filing of certain exceptions to a report of the Registrar should not be taken and deemed to be due notice of motion to discharge or vary the report or, in the alternative, why the report should not be re-opened on the ground of surprise or mistake or such other special ground as may appear.

The suit was instituted against the Defendants to recover certain sums secured on various fire policies. On the 8th April 1899, an order was made in the suit referring it to the Registrar to ascertain the value of certain things therein mentioned with other directions. The Registrar made his report on the 8th October 1899 and the same was filed on the 2nd March 1900. On the 9th March the Defendants' solicitors were informed of the filing of the report, and on the 15th March they filed certain objections, but they did serve any notice of motion to discharge or vary the report. It was alleged by the Defendants' solicitor that this was due to a bonâ fide mistake on his part, as he was not aware till the 27th March 1900, when he became aware of the decision in the case of Lutchmee Narain v. Burjath Lohia (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 437),* to the effect that it was necessary to give notice of motion within the time allowed by Rule 565 (Rule 615, Belchambers' Rules and Orders, 2nd Ed.). On the 28th March 1900, the Defendants applied before Ameer Ali, J., for further time within which to apply by motion, upon notice to discharge or vary the Registrar's report. The application was refused on the ground that it was made too late. No appeal was filed against that order. On the 5th April the Defendants applied before Sale, J., for a rule in the terms above stated, but their application was refused. Subsequently however, it being pointed out to Sale, J., that by refusing to grant a rule the Defendants might be prejudiced, if they wished to take the opinion of a Court of Appeal on the point, the learned Judge granted a rule but refused to make it absolute. Hence this appeal.

Messrs Hill, Henderson and Knight for the Defendants Companies.

Messrs. Garth and Chackerbutty for the Plaintiffs.

Held—That the filing of the exceptions cannot be taken or deemed to be notice under Rule 615 (565, 1st Ed.).

That Rule 615 must be strictly followed if it is desired to discharge or vary a Registrar's report.

That the words "fraud, surprise, mistake or such other special ground" in Rule 617 (1st Ed.) refer to fraud or surprise or mistake or some other special ground, incident to or connected with or which has resulted in the making of the certificate or report itself, and not to something which has occurred quite outside and independent of the certificate or report.

That a mistake in not complying with the procedure laid down in Rule 615 might have been rectified by the Court allowing further time to apply by motion under that section. Such a mistake, however, is not a special ground for re-opening the report under Rule 617.

Quære—Whether an appeal lies from an order refusing to make absolute such a rule.

Messrs. Watkins & Co. for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. D. Dutt and Gupta for the Plaintiffs.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

No. 510.

Calcutta, 5th February 1901.

HIS MAJESTY THE KING, EMPEROR OF INDIA, has been pleased to send the following letter to the Princes and People of India:—

"TO THE PRINCES AND PEOPLE OF INDIA,—Through the lamented death of my beloved and dearly mourned mother I have inherited the Throne which has descended to me through a long and ancient lineage. I now desire to send my greetings to the Ruling Chiefs of the Native States, and to the inhabitants of my Indian dominions, and to assure them of my heart-felt wish for their welfare. My illustrious and lamented predecessor was the first Sovereign of this country who took upon Himself the direct administration of the affairs of India, and assumed the title of Empress in token of Her closer association with the Government of that vast country.

"In all matters connected with India the Queen-Empress displayed an unvarying deep personal interest, and I am well aware of the feeling of loyalty and affection evinced by the millions of its peoples towards Her throne and person.

"This feeling was conspicuously shown during the last year of Her long and glorious reign by the noble and patriotic assistance offered by the Ruling Princes in South African War, and by the gallant services rendered by the Native Army beyond the limits of their own country.

"It was by Her wish, and with Her sanction, that I visited India, and made myself personally acquainted with the Ruling Chiefs, the people, and the cities of that ancient and famous Empire.

"I shall never forget the deep impressions which I then received, and I shall endeavour, following the great example of the first Queen-Empress, to work for the general well-being of my Indian subjects of all ranks, and to merit, as She did, their unflinching loyalty and affection.

(Sd.) EDWARD, R. AND I."

WINDSOR CASTLE;
4th February, 1901.

QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION OF 1858.

We are happy to have the King's message of good-will towards his Indian Empire. His Majesty has, no doubt, inherited the English Throne through a long and ancient lineage but the Crown of India has descended to him from his illustrious mother.

His Excellency the Viceroy opening the proceedings of the Legislative Council on the 1st of February last and alluding to the death of our late lamented Sovereign rightly said that the Proclamation of 1858 is the "Magna Charta of India."

This Proclamation is not merely the great charter of Indian citizenship, but is also the first and the foremost title of the British Crown to the supreme sovereignty of this country. It followed the removal of the last vestige of that waning sovereignty from which the East India Company had, in the course of a century, acquired a derivative title to the government of their growing Indian possessions.

We need not here enter into the intricate question of the territorial rights of the East India Company or their title to the sovereignty of this land. The sovereignty of the British Crown over the Indian Empire was only expressly established after the removal of the last shreds of Mogul sovereignty after the Mutiny and Revolt of 1857 by the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 to the Princes and People of India and by the appointment of the first Viceroy in Her name to administer on Her Majesty's behalf the territories so long governed by the East India Company. Those who may be disposed to disregard this constitutional aspect of the Proclamation need only go through the charters, statutes, treaties, firmans, grants, judicial decisions and other records of the East India Company, to be convinced of the chaotic foundation of the Company's rights, titles and jurisdictions in the acquired possessions.

While on the one hand the Proclamation of 1858 established finally and for good the sovereignty of the British Crown over the people of India: on the other hand, it conferred on them in the fullest measure the rights of British citizenship. The Proclamation says in the most unequivocal terms:

"We hold ourselves bound to the natives of our Indian territories by the same obligations of duty which bind us to all our other subjects, and those obligations, by the blessing of Almighty God, we shall faithfully and conscientiously fulfill."

It went further. Over and above this equality, it guaranteed to the children of the soil non-interference in all that they had inherited from their ancestors, be that religion, laws, customs, usages or land.

The Proclamation was issued in times of trouble for the pacification of the country. The restoration of peace and order with the aid of the Princes and People amounted to a most active acquiescence on their part to this declaration of sovereignty by the British Crown.

The Proclamation may thus be regarded as the corner-stone of our constitution on which the superstructure of the sovereignty of the British Crown and the allegiance of the Indian subjects may be said to rest.

It is binding on the successors and representatives of the Crown and the Viceroy rightly said that it was the "golden guide to their conduct and aspirations."

COURT OF APPEAL. BARNETT v. THE CORPORATION OF ECCLES. Before LORDS JUSTICES SMITH WILLIAMS and ROMER. 25th June 1900.

Public Health Act, 1875 - "Full compensation."

In this appeal the Court of Appeal agreeing with the Divisional Court held that "Full compensation" to which a person is entitled under sec. 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, who is damaged by the exercise of the powers of the Act, did not entitle him to recover as part of that compensation the difference between taxed costs and costs as between solicitor and client in the proceedings before the petty sessions, quarter sessions and the Queen's Bench Division. That "Full compensation" only entitled him to what the law allowed and not to what the law did not allow. The case of Barter v. Birkenhead Corporation (1893, 1 Q. B. 679) did not apply. The complaint of the Appellant Barnett was that his actual expenses reasonably and properly incurred largely exceeded the amount allowed on the taxation as between party and party.

Mr. Danckwerts, Q. C., for the Respondent.

COURT OF APPEAL. --GORDON v. FOWLER. Before LORDS JUSTICES A. L. SMITH and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS. 19th July 1900.

Unconscionable bargain--Leave to defend under Order XIV.

In this matter Leopold Gordon, the administrator of the deceased well-known money-lender Isaac Gordon, was the Plaintiff, and the Defendant was Charles Fowler, a farmer. The action was brought on two promissory notes given by Defendant on which Plaintiff claimed a balance of £300 as due. From an affidavit of Defendant it appeared that he had in all received £510 from Plaintiff and had repaid £915 in cash in little more than 3 years time.

This was an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Bucknill at Chambers directing that Plaintiff was at liberty to sign final judgment.

Defendant appealed and asked for directions to be allowed to defend the action on the ground of unfair and unconscionable dealings on the part of the money-lender with one not in a position from weakness or ignorance to cope with him.

The Court of Appeal arrived at the conclusion that the affidavit disclosed a case of abominable and gross extortion which was sufficient for the Court to allow under Order XIV leave to defend. The decision of Mr. Justice Bucknill was reversed with costs.

Mr. Shearman for the Plaintiff.

PROBATE COURT.--IN THE GOODS OF EMMA ALDERSON SHAW. Before MR. JUSTICE BARNES. 30th July 1900.

Presumption of death.

This was an application to swear the death of Mrs. Shaw under the following circumstances which were somewhat peculiar. The last that was heard or known of her was on 19th August 1898. On that day, having written a letter to her husband with whom she was on affectionate terms and having telegraphed to her solicitors to destroy her Will, she had driven from Kensington, where she had been staying at an hotel, to a hospital at Fitzroy Square with the object of consulting one of the resident medical men. The man she wanted to consult was not in; she made enquiries as to where to dine and then drove to Charing Cross station. Enquiries made on the Continent and elsewhere failed to find any clue about her. The matter was also advertised but without leading to any discovery concerning her movements since she was at the last-named station. She was married to Mr. John Shaw in April 1889 and there were two children born, one in 1890 and the other in 1894. On each occasion she was seriously ill after child birth and suffered from hysteria. For cure she went in November 1897 to Wiesbaden, returning to London in June, 1898. At this time Mr. Shaw was in Derbyshire. The letter of 19th August, which, as aforesaid, she wrote to Mr. Shaw indicated that she was tired of life: she said she craved for death with passionate hope of peace. "If there is a God at all I refuse like Lord Sherbrook to believe he is infinitely worse than I am; one would not torture poor souls, would one?"

Mr. Shaw had on hastening up to London ascertained that his wife had wired to her solicitor to destroy the Will as she said she had done in her letter to him. He also ascertained that on that day she had sent a doll to one of the children.

MR. JUSTICE BARNES was satisfied from the affidavits that leave to swear the death on or since August 19, 1898, should be given and ordered accordingly.

Mr. Willcock appeared in support of the application.

Application allowed.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—WILLIAMSON v. TIERNEY. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE KENNEDY and MR. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE. 19th December 1900.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1887—Watch described as "English Lever."

This matter came up upon a case stated by Mr. Chapman, one of the Metropolitan Police Magistrates. Informations were preferred against certain persons, of whom the Appellant was one, charging them with having unlawfully and with fraudulent intent sold certain watches described as English Lever and enclosed within cases which bore on them the English hall-mark. That description was alleged to be false and contrary to the provisions of the above statute. Those watches were made under Appellants' orders; various component parts of the watches were manufactured abroad and sent over to Appellants in an unfinished condition. These had to be finished and worked precisely so as to fit in with other parts of the watch, which were wholly made in England.

The mounting and adjusting the watches and making them complete articles took place at Appellants' factory at Coventry; upon such facts the Court as above constituted decided as follows:—If the Magistrate has held as a matter of law that because some parts of the watches other than the main-spring, hair-spring and screws, were partly manufactured abroad, he was bound to convict the Appellants of applying in the term "English Lever" a false description, his decision cannot be supported. If on the other hand he has arrived at his conclusion as a determination of fact upon evidence of the meaning of "English" in the watch trade, or upon any other facts what that term as applied to watches denoted, then his finding could not be reversed; for the ascertainment of what his decision was based on, the case was remanded before its final determination. At the same time the learned Judges would not countenance the argument for the Appellants, that the watch never existed until the several parts were adjusted and put together in the case and therefore the conviction should be quashed. They held that such argument could not be sustained.

Mr. Moulton, Q. C., and Mr. Thomas for the Appellants.

Mr. Lawson Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Bodkin for the Respondents.

Application for change of attorney by a next friend on behalf of an infant Plaintiff—Grant of such application as a matter of course.

On the 19th September last an application was made to the Vacation Judge, Mr. Justice Pratt, on behalf of the Plaintiff, who is an infant, for change of attorneys from Messrs. Wilson, Chatterjee and Mitra to Babu Preo Nath Sen.

When the Registrar's summons for the application was served, it was not accompanied by any grounds. On the returnable date of the summons, the applicant's counsel obtained an adjournment in order to put in grounds. Later on an affidavit was filed by the next friend making certain allegations against the infant's attorneys on the record. The attorneys filed an affidavit in reply to meet these charges. Mr. Justice Pratt held, that the charges made against the attorneys had been satisfactorily answered and following a case mentioned in Belchambers' Practice, p. 283, held that no case had been made out for a change and refused the application with costs; against this order the Plaintiff through his next friend appealed.

Mr. Garth (with him Mr. A. Chaudhuri) for the Respondents.—The appeal is wrongly entitled; it should be headed, In the matter of an application in the suit. Besides there is no appeal from such an order, which is a mere matter of procedure.

Sir Griffith Evans (Mr. Knight appearing with him) for the Appellant contended that there was an appeal under cl. (15) of the Letters Patent. (See 8 B. L. R. 433 & 13 B. L. R., p. 91). The decisions, following which the order appealed against was made, were unsound in law. No practice of the Court can override the right which every suitor has to change his attorney when he desires so to do, and the position of a next friend is not different from of an ordinary suitor.

Mr. Garth.—There has been a series of decisions of this Court from the time of Norman, J., that the next friend is in a fiduciary position and cannot be allowed to change from one attorney to another without sufficient cause. See Ram Chunder Roy v. Poorno Chunder Roy (4 C. W. N., p. clxxv), Sarat Chunder Dawn v. Kristo Dhone Dawn (5 C. W. N., p. lxxxiii). Leave of the Court is necessary under the rules to obtain a change of attorney, and any order asked for in an infant's suit should be shown to be for the benefit of the infant. Here the charges made against the attorney have been proved to be without any foundation. They are merely colorable. The attorneys on the record do not want to continue, but they are anxious that they should be discharged of the imputations made against them.

Held.—That the decisions above referred to were not well founded in law. A next friend was in the same position, as regards this particular matter, as an ordinary suitor who was sui juris. It was difficult to hold that there were no appeal from such an order. The charges made against the present attorneys of the next friend were merely colorable. Having regard to the series of decisions on the question, the costs of all parties ordered to be paid out of the estate of the infant. The appeal should have been entitled as in the matter of an application in the suit.

Security for costs of reference to High Court—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), sec. 70—Time within which such security must be furnished—Rule 36 of the Rules of Court.

This was a reference made by Mr. Ormond, the Officiating Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, at the request of the Attorney for the Defendant under sec. 69 of the above Act. The suit was decreed in favour of the Plaintiff contingent upon the opinion of the High Court. The decree was passed on the 28th May 1900 for Rs. 1,578-4-6 and costs amounting to Rs. 231-15. The reference to the High Court was signed by the Officiating Chief Judge on the 13th July 1900, and was received at the High Court on the 16th July 1900.

On the 30th May 1900, Defendants deposited Rs. 1743-2-6 in Court as in full under Rule 47.

On the 23rd June 1900, the balance of the decretal amount and costs, viz., Rs. 66-1 was deposited in Court, but not the costs of the reference.

On the 14th November 1900, it was ordered by the Chief Judge, on the ex parte application of the Defendant, that the costs of the reference to the High Court be received subject to any objection that might be taken by the Plaintiff. Accordingly Rs. 323, being the costs of the said reference, were deposited in Court.

Mr. W. Garth (with him Mr. A. Chaudhuri) for the Plaintiff took the preliminary objection, that the reference could not go on, inasmuch as the Defendants had not deposited the costs of the reference until about six months after the date of the judgment, and that they must be treated as having submitted to it under the provisions of sec. 70 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), 14 B. L. R. 180. He referred to and contended that the old Act XVI of 1864 did not contain the proviso which the present Act contained in the last para. of sec. 70 and that the present was a much stronger case. The Small Cause Court had no power to extend the time to furnish the requisite security, and no application was made to it to extend such time. Rule 36 fixes the amount to be deposited.

Sir Griffith Evans (with him Mr. J. G. Woodroffe).—The delay was due to the Small Cause Court officer having taken a long time to calculate the amount to be deposited. No notice was given to us of this objection. The delay has not been the Plaintiff's.

Held—That the preliminary objection must prevail. The section requires security to be furnished "at once." This was not done. The reference cannot be proceeded with. Defendants should pay Plaintiff the costs of the reference.

Messrs. Wilson, Chatterjee and Mitra, Attorneys for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Pugh & Co., Attorneys for the Defendants.

Suit No. 880 of 1899.

STANLEY, J.	}	BHUGWAN DAS SUREKA
1901.		v.
4, February.		HEERA LAL.

Administration suit—Receiver—Discharge of Receiver pending administration suit.

This was a suit instituted by the next friend of the Plaintiff, who was then a minor, for the construction of the Will of his grandfather Sewbux Sureka and to have the validity of certain trusts under the Will, and the rights of the parties ascertained and declared. The plaintiff also asked for an inquiry as to what the estate of the grandfather consisted of, for the appointment of a Receiver and the usual relief sought for in an administration suit.

On the 28th January 1897 a Receiver was appointed by the Court of the moveable properties, of the rents issues and profits of the immoveable properties and of a certain business carried on by the grandfather.

On the 16th March 1899, a preliminary decree for administration was made and it was further directed that the Receiver should be continued; the Court reserved consideration of all further directions and costs till after the Registrar's report.

The Plaintiff, who had subsequently attained majority, now applied for an order that the Receiver do pay to the Petitioner's attorneys their costs not otherwise disposed of and after making certain other payments mentioned in the petition, that he should be directed to make over the properties including Government securities of the value of over a lakh of rupees to the Plaintiff and that he should then be discharged upon passing his accounts. Plaintiff urged that there was no contest in the suit that he was the sole beneficiary under the Will and that he was therefore entitled to all these properties. It appeared that the accounts directed by the preliminary decree had not yet been taken, and no advertisements had been published in the papers for the creditors to come in, but the Plaintiff and the Defendant, the surviving executor, put in affidavits stating that there were no debts due from the estate.

Mr. Pugh for the Plaintiff.—There being no debts and no contest as to the Plaintiff being entitled to estate, his application should be granted.

Chief, J.—There being an administration decree, can I discharge the Receiver? I don't ask the Court to touch the decree. The Receiver holds for the parties and not creditors, see Kerr on Receivers, 2nd Ed., p. 187; Davis v. Duke of Marlborough (2 Swanston 176); Bainbridge v. Blair (3 Beav. 421, 423), and Hoskins v. Campbell (W. N. for 1869, p. 59).

Mr. Sinha for the surviving executor left the matter in the hands of the Court.

Held—That the administration decree not having been completed, the Plaintiff's title has not yet been declared by a Court and he is not entitled to the order asked for.

THE EMPRESS.

Accomplice—Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 114, ill. (b), 133.—Admissibility of the evidence of accomplice—Corroboration, when and in what way necessary—Principles underlying the law of corroboration—Primary and secondary accomplices, distinction between—Amount of corroboration necessary in each case—Conviction based upon testimony of secondary accomplice when not in expectation of reward or punishment.

This was a rule issued on the 13th November 1900, against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 6th of September 1900, confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Gaya on the 11th of September 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly these:—On the night of Monday, the 26th March 1900, there was a burglary of a serious character in the house of one Brindabun. A box or trunk was taken out of the house. It was afterwards broken open and a considerable amount of money in cash and gold and silver ornaments and clothes were abstracted therefrom. Information was given to the Thana on the 27th with a list of the articles missing. The Police took up the enquiry, and the steel trunk was found broken in a corner of the garden towards the north of the house. Suspicion, naturally, fell upon the servants of the house, but the Petitioner Kamala Prasad was not suspected. His position in the house was one of some trust, he being a sort of mohakeb to the complainant who used to take his meals with him. On the 29th March, Dosain's house was searched and two silver bangles were found in his house and identified as part of the articles stolen. The enquiry into the case proceeded for some time with the object of discovering more articles and connecting the different people whose names Dosain gave as having been perpetrators of the burglary. The case was sent up on the 18th of April and on the 19th Dosain was convicted under sec. 411, I. P. Code, and sentenced to imprisonment and a small fine of Rs. 5. On the 20th April, warrant was issued against Kamala Prasad. Dosain's statements were taken on two previous occasions and after he had served out his period of imprisonment his evidence was taken afresh regarding the facts to which he had deposed. His evidence in substance amounted to this, that on the night in question, he went out of the house of Brindaban, where he used to sleep and, hearing some trampling on dry leaves, went towards the spot and found the Petitioner engaged either in opening a box or standing near the box which had been apparently broken open. Two of his companions had gone a little distance on hearing Dosain's footsteps. He enquired what they were there for, and the accused in order to obtain his silence, gave him the two bangles which he produced or which were found in his house on the 29th of March. On trial, Kamala Prasad was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya under sec. 381, I. P. Code, and sentenced to undergo 2 years' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, or, in default of payment, to undergo six months' further imprisonment. On appeal, the Sessions Judge of Gaya confirmed the conviction and upheld the sentence.

The Petitioner then applied for and obtained the present rule to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground that the evidence of the accomplice Dosain, upon which the judgments were based, had not been sufficiently corroborated in law and also on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence to support the conviction. It was argued on behalf of the Petitioner that the matters which had been used for the purpose of holding that the evidence of the accomplice had been corroborated did not in law amount to corroboration.

Held—That although a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the evidence of an accomplice, ordinarily speaking, should be corroborated in material particulars, and such evidence should be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny.

That the amount of criminality is a matter for consideration, and when a person is only an accomplice by implication or in a secondary sense, his evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of a person who is an actual perpetrator with the principal offender.

That in dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Court must exercise careful discrimination and look at all the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion, whether the facts deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice are borne out by those circumstances or whether the circumstances are of such a nature that the evidence purporting to be given by the alleged accomplice should be supported in essential and material particulars by evidence aliunde as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice.

That Dosain, the receiver of the stolen property, who had already suffered imprisonment and had now no hope of reward or expectation of punishment, was an accomplice in a secondary sense and that there was no reason shown to disbelieve his direct testimony.

Mr. P. L. Roy (with him Babu Dasarathi Sanyal) for the Petitioner.

Mr. Leith for the Crown.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193—False evidence—Contradictory statements in cross-examination—Evidence, absence of, to support commitment—Commitment, powers of High Court to quash—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 215.

In these cases rules were issued on the District Judge of Rungpore to show cause why the proceedings for perjury and the commitments should not be quashed, or in the alternative why the cases should not be transferred to some other Sessions Court.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

Ram Gopal Byragi complained to the Police against Samiruddin Nasya, Kefaitulla Nasya and others, alleging that while he was taking his wife Genda Dasya in a cart from her father Nabu Mistry's house to his own house, 10 or 15 persons (including the accused) stopped the cart and forcibly carried off Genda Dasya.

Charges were framed under secs. 366, 147, 343 and 379, I. P. C., and the case was committed to the Sessions. At the Sessions trial the Sessions Judge concurring with the assessors acquitted the accused.

The Sessions Judge thereupon framed proceedings against the Petitioners under sec. 477, Criminal Procedure Code, and committed them for trial under sec. 193, I. P. Code, at the next Sessions.

In No. 952.—Mr. C. P. Hill (with him Babus Sarat Chandra Khan and Manmatha Nath Mukherjee) contended that there was no contradiction on the face of the statements and therefore there was no case to go to a jury so far as his client was concerned.

In No. 968.—Babus Sarat Chandra Khan and Manmatha Nath Mukherjee argued upon the same lines.

In Nos. 1034, 1035.—Mr. Caspersz (with him Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarti) for Nabu Mistry and Ram Gopal Byragi referred to In the matter of Munni Buksh (3 C. W. N. 81) and argued that regard should be had to the fact that these statements, though confused and apparently inconsistent, were made under the stress of cross-examination and that no intention to commit perjury was made out. The Court should therefore quash the commitments.

Held—That absence of evidence to warrant a commitment is a point of law and may furnish a good ground for the quashing of a commitment.

That under the present Code of Criminal Procedure a Court of Session does not possess the power to withdraw a case from the jury on any ground whatsoever.

That where the case is such that the Sessions Judge would, if he possessed the power of withdrawing the case from the jury, exercise that power, the High Court will exercise its powers of revision.

Rules made absolute: Conviction set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 71—Mortgage—Sale proceeds at Revenue Sale—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 120, 132—Interest—Damages.

This was an appeal proffered on the 27th November 1897, against a decree of Babu Gopi Nath Mettay, Sub-Judge of Chapra, Zillah Sarun, dated the 28th of August 1897.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought for the recovery of Rs. 6,000 principal and Rs. 6,200 interest, due on a mortgage bond executed by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the mother of Defendant No. 3 in the name of the furzidar of the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 16 and 17. The Plaintiff alleged that the bond had fallen to his share by private partition. The Plaintiff's mortgage bond was dated the 3rd February 1888, the due date specified for payment was the 20th September of the same year; after the execution of the bond the property mortgaged was sold for Rs. 6,200 for arrears of Government revenue and was purchased by one Rajendra Pershad. The sale took place on the 29th of November 1899; after deducting the Government demand, Rs. 6,175 remained in the collectorate as sale proceeds. Defendants Nos. 4 to 6, who were certain creditors of Defendants, the mortgagors, in execution of a decree for money obtained by them withdrew the sum of Rs. 1,367-12 from the collectorate on the 4th of July 1890, and the Defendant No. 7 who was another creditor similarly withdrew Rs. 289-4 on the 18th of October 1892. The present suit was brought on the 5th of October 1896.

The present appeal was preferred by the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and the Defendant No. 7 against whom decrees for part of the sale proceeds were made; the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 were made liable for Rs. 1367-12 which they had taken out of the collectorate in execution of their money decree; and the Defendant No. 7 was made liable for Rs. 289-4 which he similarly had taken from the collectorate.

The following were the contentions of law raised on behalf of the Appellant:—First, that the suit was barred by limitation, and that Art. 120 and not Art. 132 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act was applicable and therefore the suit at least against Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 was barred; secondly, that the Plaintiff was not entitled to interest; thirdly, that the claim for interest was barred.

Held—That Art. 132 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act was applicable. [Their Lordships observed:—It is true that the property has been converted into cash owing to its having been sold for arrears of Government revenue, but under sec. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, the charge which attached to the property now attaches to the sale proceeds.]

Kamala Kant Sen v. Abdul Bahul alias Habibulla (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 180 at p. 184) referred to.

Held—That the Limitation Act should be interpreted liberally so as not to curtail or restrict rights unless it is clear that the Legislature intended that this should be done.

That Plaintiff is not entitled to interest but entitled to damages for the acts of the Defendants which have deprived him of the use of the money, and although the Plaintiff did not expressly claim damages, the same may be awarded instead of interest.

Lala Chhajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (22 I. A. 199).

That under Art. 120 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act Plaintiff cannot claim damages for more than six years previous to the institution of the suit.

Dr. Asutosh Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Babu Joges Chandra Ray for the Respondent.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DEORNE

No. 2037 of 1898.

BANERJEE, J. } RAMMOY HAZRA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
 BRETT, J. } v.
 1901. } PREM CHAND NASKAR and 21, January, } others, Defendants, Respondents.

Mortgage—Transferres from mortgagor—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) sec. 85—Parties—Contribution.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of October 1898, against a decree of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 22nd of July 1898, affirming a decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Mitra, Officiating Munsif of Alipur, 2nd Court, dated the 2nd of April 1898.

The facts of the case as disclosed in the plaint are thus stated by the first Court:—One Behary Lal Ghosh since deceased, executed a mortgage bond for Rs. 200 on 8th Kartick 1294, B. S., in favour of the Plaintiff creating a charge on his properties described in schedule (ka) and (kha) of the plaint and subsequently sold the properties described in schedule (kha) of the plaint to one Raj Krishna Mondal free from Plaintiff's mortgage on payment of Rs. 100 to him with Plaintiff's concurrence, in Bysack 1306, B. S. After the death of Behary Lal this Plaintiff instituted suit No. 791 of 1894 against Noni Lal Ghose, the son and heir of Behary Lal and Srimonto Bachareh and Prosunno Moyi Dassi, the purchaser of certain portions of the mortgaged property, and got a decree on this mortgage bond. In execution sale under that decree, the Plaintiff purchased the properties described in schedule (ka) for Rs. 175 on 18th July 1896 and obtained delivery of symbolical possession from Court on 17th December 1896. Thereafter when the Plaintiff went to take actual possession of the land in Choitra 1303, B. S., he was resisted by the Defendants who were the purchasers of lands given in schedule (ga) and (gha) respectively, and by Defendant No. 2 as a tenant of plot 2 of schedule (ga) under Defendant No. 1. The Plaintiff not having known of this alleged purchase of the Defendants from Behary Lal did not and could not make them parties in that case. Hence the Plaintiff instituted this suit for declaration of Defendants Nos. 1 and 3's rights of redemption to the properties described in schedules (ga) and (gha) of plaint and for declaration of Plaintiff's absolute right over those properties on the failure of Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to pay off the whole mortgage money within a fixed time, and for khas possession of these properties.

Both the Courts below dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit in the form in which it was brought was not maintainable, that the suit was bad as neither the heirs of the original mortgagor nor the purchaser Raj Krishna by whom the (kha) lands which formed a part of the original mortgaged premises were purchased subsequent to the purchase of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 3, were not made parties, that the provisions of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act were imperative and it was therefore obligatory on the mortgagee in a suit relating to mortgage to join the mortgagor and all subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers as parties. It was further held that both the portions of the property (ka), which was held by the Plaintiff in right of purchase, as well as the portion of (ka) which was specified in schedules (ga) and (gha) should contribute to the mortgage debt payable to the Plaintiff, and which was claimed in suit No. 791, and that the suit was not framed on that line.

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Two questions were raised on behalf of the Appellant, first, whether the Court of Appeal below was right in dismissing the suit on the ground of defect of parties, and, second, whether that Court was right in dismissing the suit on the ground of its having been wrongly framed.

Held—That there was no defect of parties.

That as regards the heirs of the mortgagor it could not be said that they were necessary parties, as the Plaintiff had already obtained a decree on his mortgage against them, and had, in execution of the mortgage decree, already sold the mortgaged property and purchased it himself; as regards Raj Krishna, he too, was not a necessary party as he purchased a portion of the mortgaged property with the consent of the Plaintiff.

With regard the second point their Lordships observed:—The learned vakil for the Appellant freely admits that the only relief that the Plaintiff can be entitled to in this suit will be a decree for an apportionment of the mortgage debt on the property purchased by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, account being taken in that apportionment as well of the property purchased by Raj Krishna as of the portion of the mortgaged property purchased by the Plaintiff himself. The prayers in the plaint are not very distinct in asking for this relief, though at the same time we cannot say that they are incapable of being viewed as seeking for any relief of the sort we have indicated above.

The case was, therefore, remanded to the Court of first instance with reference to the points indicated above.

Dy. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Bhuban Mohun Das for the Defendants.

Case remanded.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The constitution of the Division Courts, to take effect on and from Monday, the 18th February 1901, and until further orders, will be as follows:—

PRESIDENCY GROUP.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Banerjee and Mr. Justice Brett.

RAJSHAHYE GROUP.—Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Hill.

PATNA GROUP.—Mr. Justice Rampini and Mr. Justice Sale.

BURDWAN GROUP.—Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Stevens.

CRIMINAL BUSINESS.—Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Pratt.

PRIVY COUNCIL DEPARTMENT.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Banerjee and Mr. Justice Brett.

On the Original Side the arrangements will continue as before.

IT IS REMARKABLE THAT THE CALENDAR OF CRIMINAL cases last sessions would have gone blank but for two theft cases by old offenders. This is a better record than that of July last and reflects great credit on the city.

IT HAS BEEN ANNOUNCED THAT A THIRD COURT is going to sit on the Original Side from the 4th of March next. This will certainly relieve the congested state of the board and will be welcomed by the suitors and the profession alike. But the absence of a third Court was not the only grievance with reference to the business on the Original Side. For instance we have had frequent complaints with regard to the delay in the Taxing office. It is said that attorneys have to wait months before they get any chance of getting their bills taxed and then when their turn comes they experience the greatest difficulty in getting the taxation done rapidly. We are told that even the simplest bills take an incredibly long period in passing through the Taxing office. That this is so, is no fault of any particular officer but is due to the disorganised state of the Original Side offices generally. We have already noticed in these columns how with the growth of work on the Original Side, the establishment has not only been not increased but has, in course of time, been considerably curtailed. We have before now given an account how such important offices as that of a Taxing Officer, that of a Master, an Accountant-General and some other important offices came to be abolished and their duties transferred to the Registrar.

NOW IN VIEW OF A THIRD COURT WE ARE COMPELLED to re-open the question of strengthening the staff in the Registrar's office and of a more systematic division of duties. The existing staff is admitted on all hands to be inadequate for the current work of the two Courts now sitting. In the Order Department the men are overworked and the drawing up of orders and other proceedings are unavoidably delayed to the detriment of the business of the Courts and the great inconvenience of suitors. The question also arises as to whether the business of the Registrar himself should not be divided. It is impossible, as we have often urged, for one man to discharge all the duties of that office satisfactorily; a large number of orders and decrees has to be settled in the morning; a whole heap of summonses and subpoenas has to be signed and sealed; urgent references and accounts have to be taken, the accounts in the Accountant-General's Department have to be daily examined and cheques issued; the various departments of that office have to be supervised and controlled and, in addition to all this, a very considerable portion of that officer's time has to be devoted to the disposing of ordinary references. The result of it all is that orders are not settled and signed as expeditiously as they should be; certificates of death duties, which are always very urgent, are delayed to the great inconvenience of the representatives of deceased testators or intestates, as the case may be, and sometimes to the serious loss of the estates concerned; settlement of bills are delayed, and we are told, that there is a growing feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the suitors and the profession with regard to the state of things generally on the Original Side. However much the present Registrar may try to cope with the work, and we are assured that he is a very hard-working officer, it is physically impossible that he should be able to discharge all the duties of his office proper, and those of a Taxing Officer, Master, Official Referee, Controller-General in addition, to the satisfaction of the profession and the public within the ordinary space of time. A third Court will increase all this difficulty, and if a reconstitution of the offices is not taken in hand at once, it will be a further source of embarrassment to the officers and the profession alike. The public look up to the present Chief Justice to carry out the reforms which have been felt to be urgently called for for some time now; and when his Lordship has succeeded in effecting them he will have earned for himself the lasting gratitude of the whole profession and the public of the capital of India.

AMONG THE OTHER COMPLAINTS WHICH FREQUENTLY reach us from the attorneys, one that deserves immediate attention is the inordinate delay in the Translators' Department on the Original Side. The business in this department is said to be in a chronic state of arrears. A practice prevails in this department by which translators are allowed to charge Re. 1 per folio of 90 words as expedition fee. As translations in the ordinary course means always considerable delay, suitors are obliged to pay this expedition fee. As it is, the ordinary fee for translation on the Original Side of the High Court, viz., Rs. 2 per folio of 90 words is very high, and an additional fine of Re. 1 per folio means a great deal to suitors of modest means. The anomaly is all the more curious when we find that on the Appellate Side of the "very same High Court the translation fee is only Re. 1 for 200 words. We are not aware of the suitors on the Appellate Side being required to pay expedition fees for getting the translation done. The practice of levying expedition fees, which go to the officers, is sure to lead on to showing preference for taking work which carries extra gain and to the neglect of ordinary duties. We fail to appreciate why the payment of extra money by suitors for getting any ordinary work done on the Original Side within a reasonable time should be made into a regular institution. With special reference to translation, we may point out that more rapid translation always means more money to Government, out of which extra officers, if necessary, may be paid for or increments, when deserved, allowed. But on no principle can the practice of public officers showing preference for any particular work from a desire for personal gain be supported. In the mofussil and also on the Appellate Side of the High Court expedition fees are sometimes paid for obtaining copies very urgently required. But such fees go to the Government and is not open to similar objections.

THE JANUARY NUMBER OF THE Law Quarterly Review contains an article from the pen of Mr. E. J. Trevelyan, lately a Judge of the Calcutta High Court and at present Reader of Indian Law at the Oxford University. The article is entitled "The Training of District Judges in India." The extract we give below will indicate what the writer considers the shortcomings of the present system. It cannot be denied that, barring a few exceptionally clever men, the District Judges find themselves in an anomalous position when they are promoted to that office from that of a Magistrate and are called upon to hear civil appeals before they have acquired any experience in the procedure or administration of civil law. This fact furnishes the strongest argument against the proposed restriction of second appeals and Mr. Trevelyan is also of that opinion.

A District Judge is the supreme judicial authority in a district. He has power to transfer to his own list any suit pending in his district. He does not try civil suits, as his Appellate work and his work as a Sessions Judge take up most of his time; but, although when he first gets his appointment he has less knowledge of the law than any judicial officer in his district, the cases which he tries as a judge of first instance are of the most important description. He sits on appeals from the decisions of men who have had a thorough training in law and have had great experience in its administration. In such appeals his decision on questions of fact is final, whether or not he differs from the Court below. In questions of law there is a further appeal from his decision, but the fact that there is such an appeal does not excuse the incapacity of the Court from which there is an appeal. It may be noticed in passing that the Government of India now contemplates limiting the right of appeal. It is true that after a time the majority of District Judges acquire a certain knowledge of their work, but this knowledge is necessarily acquired at the expense of many suitors and also at the risk (as will presently be pointed out) of undesirable comparisons.

ON THE 12TH INSTANT THE FOLLOWING QUESTION, which had been referred by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in the case of Khadem Hossein v. Emdad Hossein, was argued before a Full Bench:—"Whether in an appeal against the final decree in a partition sult, it is open to the Appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition, when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law." Their Lordships' judgment was reserved.

English Notes.

COURT OF APPEAL.—THE VALENTINE MEAT JUICE COMPANY v. THE VALENTINE EXTRACT COMPANY. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY and COLLINS. 23rd July 1900.

Established use of a name being same as that of the person carrying on the business.

The distinguishing feature of this case was that the Plaintiffs did not complain that the Defendants had so got up their goods as to resemble that of the Plaintiffs but objected to the Defendants making use of the word "Valentine" in such a way as to deceive the public into believing that the goods sold by them were articles manufactured by Plaintiffs.

Mr. Justice Sterling held that the Plaintiffs had not proved that that was as Plaintiff alleged but being of opinion that there were suspicious circumstances connected with the case, did not allow Defendants their costs.

The Court of Appeal arrived at a different conclusion, relying on the law being well emphasized in Reddaway v. Burhan (1896, Q. C. at p. 204) by the Lord Chancellor and at p. 210 by the late Lord Herschell; they said that the only difficulty was to apply those principles. The distinction attempted to be made by Respondent's counsel between the name used, which was all that was complained of, being the name of the person who was carrying on the business and a case where such name was not of the person carrying on the business, had no foundation in principle. For an exposition of the law on the very point Jameson v. Jameson (15 Pat. Off. Rep., see p. 193) was noticed; all that it pointed to was that in a case like the present it was more necessary than in any other for Plaintiff to establish more clearly the fact that the name in question had come in the market to denote Plaintiff's goods. Plaintiff must establish that the name in question had acquired a "secondary meaning" as denoting his goods. The evidence was overwhelming, supporting the statement that "Valentines meat juice" or "Valentine" alone was used in the market as distinguishing Plaintiff's preparations. The established use of that name was mentioned and consequently that name should be protected as much as any fancy name. The evidence moreover indicated that Defendant was aware of the great reputation the article had acquired in the market and he adopted that name to secure for himself some of that benefit. Held that Plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction extending to the word "Valentine."

Appeal allowed with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—STOHWASSER v. HUMPHREYS. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 21st December 1900.

Validity of patent—What constitutes sufficient investigation—The Puttee leggings.

The question for determination in this litigation was whether Plaintiff's patent was a valid one, and whether it had been anticipated. Plaintiff had derived title from one John Pullman who had taken out Letters Patent No. 24893 of 1896, for Puttee leggings. The complete specification was filed in June 1897. Those leggings were largely used, in fact adopted as the regulation leggings for the British Army; their usefulness was consequently not disputed. Plaintiff claimed merit for improvement into existing leggings, combining the advantages of the legging and the Puttee, a perfect fit with a novel mode of fastening by means of a strap which passed round the leggings several times, doing away with the usual straps and other fastenings formerly used.

For the defence, in answer to Plaintiff's claim for injunction restraining Defendants from infringing their patent for improvements in the manufacture of leggings and for damages, the infringement was not contested, but Defendants questioned the validity of the patent and alleged that it had been anticipated, in other words it was denied that the invention was new, and the result such as would justify the grant relied upon by the Plaintiff.

The learned Judge found that the gaiter, at the time of the grant had not been previously used and in that sense it was new. The large sale achieved was proof that it was useful, but he could not hold that it was an invention. The strap or other band had been for long in common use, and to apply such a thing to a gaiter to hold it in position did not appeal to him to involve a substantial invention. The adjustability of the strap did not make any difference. It was nothing more than using a strap as it was commonly used.

Each case depended on its own facts and therefore previous decisions, several of which had been cited, did not in such a conflict render much assistance in arriving at a right conclusion.

He could distinguish this case from that of Thomson v. The American Braided Wire Co. (H. of L. Patent cases, Vol. VI, see p. 528, decided 3rd June 1889)* which case went as far as any, be-

*Lord Herschell in his judgment said:—"If the demand of the Public for a particular article of dress be better met by a new combination than it has been by the articles previously in use, and if this combination, though in its component parts be not new, required some exercise of the cause the subject-matter of the present patent did not require any exercise of the inventive faculty to produce it and on the evidence the learned Judge also found that the anticipation relied on for the defence was proved.

Mr. Moulton, Q. C., Mr. Bousefield, Q. C., and Mr. Walter for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Terrell, Q. C., and Mr. Salter for the Defendants.

C. W. A. Judgment for the Defendants.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—GORDON v. LONDON and MIDLAND BANK. Before MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL. 19th December 1900.

Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, secs. 82 and 60—Liability of Bank for stolen cheques received by them.

One Alfred Jones was ledger Clerk to Plaintiff Gordon, who carried on business at Birmingham under the name and style of Gordon and Munro. Jones had not any authority from Plaintiff to endorse any cheque sent to Plaintiff by his customers or to deal with it in any way, nevertheless, during Plaintiff's absence from his business, Jones not only opened his letters which he had permission to do, but stole 116 cheques of the value of £2,067. He took these out of the letters for Plaintiff arriving by post and having endorsed them as "Gordon and Munro" took them from time to time to the Defendant Bank's branch at Sparbrook in Birmingham; at this branch Jones, who traded as Jones & Co., had an account. The Defendants used to, when these cheques were paid in with the forged endorsement "Gordon and Munro" also bearing the endorsement "Jones & Co.," place them to Jones & Co.'s credit and at the same time the Defendants crossed them, whether the cheques were or were not crossed previously, "London and Midland Bank Limited to head office London" in order that they may be payable through the head office only. So that the cheques were collected in the London Bank and the amount placed to the credit of their Sparbrook branch.

In this action of the Plaintiff for damages for conversion by Defendants of the above cheques or for their value aforesaid, the Defendants had paid into Court £110 and the jury found that the Defendants in the collection of the above cheques had acted bona fide and no negligence had been established against them.

The learned Judge held that the Defendants had acted as the agent of Jones and had received the stolen cheques to collect as for him on his behalf. The money was received by Defendants not on their own account. He decided in favour of Plaintiff with reference to sec. 82 of the above act, so far as the cheques were drawn on other banks than the Defendant inventive faculty to produce it, I think it can be protected by a patent, though it may be impossible to say that the invention is important or necessary for the public good."

ants in favour of "Gordon Munro and Co., or order" or "bearer" and which were uncrossed when paid in and received by them. Bessill & Co. v. Fox Brothers (51 L. T. N. S. 663), Fine Art Society v. Union Bank (1886, 17 Q. B. D. 705). The claim as to the remaining cheques was rejected under the provisions of sec. 60 of the same Act.

In the result as Defendants had virtually paid in £110 out of the £114 found due to Plaintiff the action was dismissed with costs.

Mr. Lawrence, Q. C., and Mr. Leslie for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Henriques for the Defendants.

Judgment for the Defendants.

[APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

No. 15 of 1900.

MACLEAN, C. J. SREEMUTTY MOKHODA DASSEE, PRINSEP, J. Plaintiff, Appellant,
HILL, J. v.
1901. NUNDO LAL HALDAR, Defendant,
8, February Respondent.

Hindu Law—Bengal School—Maintenance—Daughter, sonless widowed Marriage, effect of, on the status of a daughter.

This was a suit by a daughter, who was a sonless widow, against the heir of her deceased father, for a declaration that she was entitled to separate maintenance during her natural life out of her late father's estate. The facts of the case as well as the judgment of Ameer Ali, J., are fully reported in 4 C. W. N. 669. There was practically no dispute in the case as to the facts except as to the indigency of the Plaintiff. It may here be mentioned that the present representative of her father-in-law's family offered her a home and food and raiment and a similar offer was made, during the trial of the case before Ameer Ali, J., by the Defendant, but what she desired to secure was separate maintenance.

Messrs. R. Mitra and B. C. Chatterji for the Appellant.

Messrs. W. C. Bonnerjee and S. P. Sinha for the adult Respondents.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti and B. C. Mitter for other Respondents.

Held—That the Plaintiff was not bound to reside in the house of her father-in-law.

Rajah Pirthi Singh v. Ranee Raj Kowar (20 W. R. 21) followed.

When a Hindu maiden marries, she becomes incorporated into her husband's family and it is to that family that she must, in the first instance, look for her maintenance on becoming a widow.

She is not, any way, entitled to demand successfully maintenance from her father's heir, who has succeeded to his estate, unless and until it can be satisfactorily shewn that she is unable to obtain maintenance from the family into which she has married; even then, however, it is doubtful if she can succeed as against her late father's estate.

Bai Mungal v. Bai Rukmini (I. L. R. 23 Bom. 291) referred to.

When an offer has been made by her late father's heir to provide her with a home and food and raiment she is not entitled to separate maintenance apart from his house and in a house of her own.

Quære—Whether there is or is not a legally enforceable right by which a widowed daughter's maintenance can be claimed as a charge on her father's estate in the hands of his heirs.

Khetramoni Dasi v. Kashinath Das (2 B. L. R. A. C. 15) and Bai Mungal v. Bai Rukmini (I. L. R. 23 Bom. 291) referred to.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

HARRINGTON, J. In the matter of Malchand Pareck, a 1901. minor under the age of 18 years
31, January. governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Guardian of a Mitakshara infant, appointment of.

This was an application in Chambers on behalf of Balchand Pareck, the only brother of the infant above-named, for an order that a fit and proper guardian may be appointed of the properties of the infant during his minority and to that end an enquiry may be directed as to who would be such fit and proper person to be so appointed with all necessary or proper directions.

The facts of the case as stated in the petition briefly are these:—One Gonesh Das Pareck died some time ago leaving the said infant and his said brother, two sons, and one widow, Sreemutty Parina Bibee and leaving considerable properties the same being the joint estate of himself and his said two sons. On his death Balchand Pareck as karta of the joint estate took possession of the joint estate and has since been carrying on the joint business. The Petitioner alleged that under the evil advice of some designing person the Petitioner's mother, who is an old lady not conversant with business, tried to get possession of the infant's share and accordingly the immoveable properties and some moveables were partitioned amongst the brothers and the infant's share was given over to the mother, the business only remaining joint, but that, not satisfied with that, she was now trying to get hold of the share of the assets of the business, which she is likely to dissipate.

Babu Ashutosh De, who made the application, contended that the case of Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda Sahoy (I. L. R. 19 Cal. 301) which held that a guardian could not be appointed of the properties of a minor governed by the Mitakshara law, could be clearly distinguished inasmuch as here there are properties of the infant which are quite separate and that the principle underlying that case is the apprehension of the interference to the karta's management by the appointed guardian, which is wanting in this case where the karta himself applies.

Held—under the special circumstances of the case such an application is entertainable and notice under sec. 11 of the Act was directed to be issued to the infant and her mother returnable 6 weeks hence.

SUIT No. 823 of 1899.

STANLEY, J. HENRY BIRKMYRE and others,
1901. Plaintiffs,
7, February. v.
DEEP NARAIN SINGH, Defendant.

* Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 363
—Revival of suit—Death of one of several Plaintiffs —Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 171 and 178.

This was an application in Chambers on behalf of Archibald Birkmyre, as executor of the Plaintiff Henry Birkmyre and as administrator to the estate of William Birkmyre, under sec. 363 of the Code, to revive the suit in his name, as such legal representative, and in the names of the two surviving Plaintiffs.

The Plaintiff, Henry Birkmyre died in Scotland on 4th May 1900 and his Will was proved in Scotland by five of the executors on the 23rd of June 1900. The Plaintiff, William Birkmyre, died in France on the 19th of April 1900 and his Will was also proved in Scotland by seven of the executors on the 26th of June 1900.

The applicant who was one of the executors of Henry's Will obtained probate in this Court on the 6th of December last and on the 12th of January last he obtained Letters of Administration with the Will annexed to the property and credits of the Plaintiff William Birkmyre as the constituted attorney of the seven executors who proved the Will in Scotland.

Mr. Sowton for Messrs. Sanderson & Co. submitted on behalf of the applicant that sec. 363 enabled the Court to revive the suit where two of several Plaintiffs have died. Under Art. 171 of the Limitation Act a period of 60 days from the date of the Plaintiff's death was allowed to his legal representative to come in and revive the suit, but this provision in the Limitation Act was repealed by sec. 66 of Act VII of 1888, the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act. The Legislature in repealing Art. 171 of the Limitation Act as applicable to sec. 363 of the Will did not make any fresh provision dealing with cases where two of several Plaintiffs have died and consequently the period of limitation applicable to the case was three years from the time when the right to apply accrued under Art. 178 of the Limitation Act.

THE COURT granted the application.

Messrs. Sunderson & Co. for the Plaintiffs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 7—Executor by implication—Will addressed to applicant—Bengalee Will—Probate.

This was an application in Chambers on behalf of Sreemutty Haridasi Debi, the widow of the deceased above-named for grant of probate of the Will executed by the deceased.

Babu Peari Lal Halidar for the applicant submitted that though she is not expressly appointed an executor to the Will, the fact of the same being addressed to her, as is commonly done in deeds and documents in the Bengalee language, and the fact of the testator bequeathing his immoveable property to her and giving her a right to sell the property in the following terms: "I bequeath the said property to you. You shall be competent to give away sell or mortgage the said property or otherwise deal with (the same) just as you will wish; my sons shall not have any right whatsoever therein" are sufficient to make applicant an executor by implication.

Held—That the language of the Will is not clear enough to make the applicant an executor by implication and the mere fact of the Will being addressed to her does not entitle her to obtain probate; hence Letters of Administration with Will annexed was granted to her.

This was an application on behalf of Srimati Mukhodaini Dassi for grant of probate to her as executrix by implication of a Will in the Persian character executed by the deceased at Brindabun.

The translation of the portion of the Will upon which reliance was placed was as follows: "Mussamut Mokhodaini Dassi shall become the owner and enter upon possession of whatever might be saved after supply of food to and enjoyment by myself (out of) all my aforementioned properties and shall bring the same into her custody and enjoyment and deal with them as she might like and shall cause my funeral ceremonies and the rites at Gaya, &c., to be performed, but out of the estates to be left by me, she shall on my behalf distribute the undermentioned amounts as per details below."

Babu Peari Lal Halidar for the applicant submitted that although the testator did not appoint an executor expressly, yet she having directed the applicant to distribute certain amounts the applicant was constituted an executrix by implication.

Held—That the directions to cause funeral ceremonies to be performed and to distribute the amounts are sufficient to constitute the applicant an executor by implication and accordingly probate should be granted to the applicant.

Messrs. Banerjee and Halidar for the Applicant.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 67, 179—Interest on arrears of rent—Permanent mokurari lease—Effect of sec. 179 on sec. 67.

This was an appeal against the decree and judgment of J. Windsor, Esq., District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 7th September 1898, modifying those of Babu Gobinda Chandra De, Munsif of Katwa, dated the 20th November 1897.

This case was referred to a Full Bench by Rampini and Pratt, JJ., with the following opinion:—

"In this case the question is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to interest on arrears of rent at the rate specified in the ijara kabuliyat executed in his favour by the Defendant, viz., Rs. 3-2 per month or whether he is restricted to the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, allowed by sec. 67 of the Tenancy Act. The lease is a permanent mokurari lease, and it is contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that sec. 179 of the Tenancy Act renders the provisions of sec. 67 inapplicable to such leases. The Judge in the Court below has held on the authority of the case of

Atulya Churn Bose v. Tulsi Das Sarkar, (2 C. W. N. 543), that the Plaintiff is entitled to the rate contracted for with him by the Defendant. The ruling in this case fully supports the view held by him. On the other hand it is urged by the learned pleader for the Appellant, that this case is in conflict with that of Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Promotho Nath Bhattacharji (I. L. R. 26 Cal. 130), in which it has been laid down that a contract by a tenant holding under a permanent mokurari lease to pay interest on arrears at a higher rate than 12 per cent. per annum is not enforceable in law. The rulings in the two cases are in direct conflict. We are therefore bound to refer this case to a Full Bench, which we accordingly do.

We may add that we are of opinion that the ruling in the case of Atulya Churn Bose v. Tulsi Das Sarkar (2 C. W. N. 543) is correct. One of the members of this Bench was a party to the decision in Basanta Kumar Chowdhury v. Promotho Nath Bhattacharji, but he concurs in the opinion that that case was not rightly decided.

We are fortified in the view we take of the question at issue by the ruling in the case of Krishna Chunder Sen v. Sushila Sundari Dasi (I. L. R. 26 Cal. 611), which, though not directly in point, yet lays down that the provisions of sec. 74 do not control sec. 179, but the contrary.

The questions we propound for the decision of the Full Bench are—

First.—Whether the Plaintiff in this case is entitled to interest at the rate specified in the kabuliyat executed by the Defendant, or whether sec. 67 of the Tenancy Act controls the provisions of sec. 179 of the same Act; and

Second.—Whether the case of Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Promotho Nath Bhattacharji had been rightly decided."

Held by Maclean, C. J., Prinsep, J., Banerjee, J., and Rampini, J. (Ameer Ali, J., dissenting)—That the Plaintiff is entitled to interest at the rate specified in the kabuliyat executed by the Defendant.

That sec. 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act controls the provisions of sec. 67 of the Act and is not controlled by it.

That the case of Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Promotho Nath Bhattacharji (I. L. R. 26 Cal. 130) was wrongly decided.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh and Babu Natini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170—
Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 278—
Claim adverse to the tenure whether maintainable when attached in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due thereon.

This was a rule obtained by the decree-holder against the order of Babu Sarat Chandra Pal, Munsif of Baruipur, dated the 21st of April 1900.

The Petitioner obtained a decree for arrears of rent against one Pitambar Chakravarti and in execution of the same attached the defaulting tenure whereupon the opposite party preferred a claim under sec. 278, C. P. C., to the tenure attached. In the first Court a preliminary objection was raised as to whether a claim could be preferred under sec. 278 to a tenure attached in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The Court held that the claimants claimed under an adverse title to the tenure and decided the question in favour of the claimants and relied upon the case of Jagabundhu Chattopadhyaya v. Deenu Pal (Civil Rule No. 1370 of 1886).

The decree-holder made an application under sec. 622, C. P. C., and obtained the present rule.

It was contended on behalf of the decree-holder that under sec. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the provisions of sec. 278, C. P. C., are excluded and declared not to be applicable to proceedings in execution of rent-decrees, and that the recent case of Makbul Ahmed v. Rakhal Das Hazra (Civil Rule No. 201 of 1900, decided by Rampini and Pratt, JJ., reported in 4 C. W. N. 732) was in favour of this contention; and that this case being in conflict with the case of Jagabundhu Chattopadhyaya v. Deenu Pal (Petheram, C. J., Cunningham, J., reported in 4 C. W. N. 734), the question should be referred to a Full Bench.

Rule I of Ch. V of the High Court Rules on its Appellate Side was also referred to.

Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., who heard the rule referred it to the Full Bench. The following is the order of reference:—

In this rule the first question that arises for decision is—

• Whether sec. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars a claim under sec. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon, in all cases, or whether the operation is confined to claims to the tenure or holding and does not extend to claims based on the ground that the property claimed does not form part of the tenure or holding attached.

Upon that question there is a clear conflict between the decisions of this Court in the case of Jagabundhu Chottopadhyaya v. Deemu Pal (4 C. W. N. 734), and Makbul Ahmed and others v. Rakhal Das Hazra (4 C. W. N. 732).

The question must, therefore, be referred to a Full Bench for determination and as the question arises in a rule, the whole case must be so referred.

Held by Maclean, C. J., Prinsep, Ameer Ali and Rampini, JJ. (Banerjee, J., dissenting)—That having regard to the provisions of sec. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a claim under sec. 278, C. P. C., was not maintainable.

Public Demands Recovery Act (VII of 1868), sec. 2—Public Demands Recovery Act (VII of 1880, B. C.), sale under—Civil suit to set aside sale on the ground of irregularity if barred by sec. 2, Act VII of 1868.

This was an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 13th November 1897.

This case was referred to a Full Bench with the following opinion by Banerjee and Brett, JJ., to whom the case was referred under sec. 575, C. C. P., in consequence of a difference of opinion between Rampini and Pratt, JJ., who had originally tried the case. The following was the order of reference:—

"In this appeal, which has been referred to us under sec. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, one of the questions that arise for determination is whether a civil suit lies for setting aside a sale held in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (VII of 1880, B. C.) on the ground that the sale was vitiated by a material irregularity leading to substantial injury, the irregularity complained of being that one property was advertised for sale and a different property sold; or whether the only remedy of the party whose property was sold lies in the appeal to the Commissioner under sec. 2 of Act VII of 1868, B. C.

The cases of Sudhusaran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal (I. L. R. 14 Cal. 1) and Troylukho Nath Moumdar v. Gohar Khan (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 641) are authority in favour of the view that the first branch of the question should be answered in the negative and the second in the affirmative; while, on the other hand, the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhowani Ojha (I. L. R. 14 Cal. 9) is in favour of the opposite view; and the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the case of Chunder Kumar Mukerji v. The Secretary of State for India (4 C. W. N. 586) also supports the same view. In my judgment in this last-mentioned case there is a passage which has been referred to by one of the learned Judges who heard this case in the first instance as being in favour of the opposite view; but that passage, taken with the context, would show that there was no definite expression of opinion on my part on the question stated above, nor was it necessary to express any such opinion in that case, all that was said being to this effect, that even if the Respondent's contention was accepted that would not affect the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain the suit then under consideration.

But quite apart from the last-mentioned case, there is, as will appear from what we have said above, a clear conflict of authority in this Court upon the question stated at the outset. That being so, the question must be referred to a Full Bench. We may add that the inclination of our opinion is in favour of the view taken by Mr. Justice Wilson in the case of Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhowani Ojha (I. L. R. 14 Cal. 9).

There is nothing in Act VII of 1868, B. C., to take away the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain a suit like this; and the only legal provision which takes away the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain a suit for setting aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity leading to substantial injury, namely, sec. 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not applicable to a sale in enforcement of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

Held by Maclean, C. J., Prinsep, Banerjee and Ameer Ali, JJ. (Rampini, J., dissenting)—That sec. 2 of Act VII of 1868, B. C., does not bar a civil suit to set aside a sale in enforcement of a certificate held under the Public Demands Recovery Act on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale leading to substantial injury. Troylukho Nath Moumdar v. Gohar Khan (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 641) overruled.

Dr. Asutosh Mukherji, Babus Gobind Chunder Dey Roy and Tarit Mohun Das for the Appellant.

Babus Ram Chunder Mitter, Lal Mohun Das, Karuna Sindhu Mukherje and Jnanendra Nath Bosa for the Respondents.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE ARE INFORMED THAT GREAT DISSATISFACTION prevails at the manner in which the Criminal Appellate and Reversional business of the Court is being disposed of. People complain of the uncertainty of the procedure and the rulings are also said to be fast becoming chaotic. Even experienced lawyers are finding it difficult to foretell results and are getting tired of having to await them without assurance.

WE ARE GLAD TO FIND THAT THE GOVERNMENT HAS lost no time in appointing a locum tenens to Mr. Justice Banerjee. It is also a matter for congratulation that a vakeel has been appointed in the place of a judge who also belonged to the same Bar. Babu Sarada Charan Mitter is a lawyer of mature experience and of acknowledged ability with even temper and evident judicial temperament. He was on our editorial board and we have special reason to be proud of his appointment. Still, we must point out that he is going to fill a very difficult position where the qualities which go to create public confidence are not precisely those that go to assure success at the Bar. The eyes of the public will now be on him and critically view every action of his by the reflected light of the glorious traditions of the vakeel judges. They will ever be on the watch to contrast him with the two judges now on the Bench, who have, all through their long career, by their great ability and, above all, character, added to the fame and good name of Indian judges. This is a severe ordeal to pass and when the new judge has successfully passed through it unscathed, that will be the time for us to convey to him our sincere congratulations.

WE ARE ALSO GLAD THAT MR. HENDERSON OF THE local Bar has been appointed to officiate for Mr. Justice Sale, who is proceeding home on furlough and will not sit from to-day until November next, when the Courts re-open after the Poojah Vacation. Mr. Henderson has officiated before as a judge both in the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts and in both places he made himself deservedly popular. Mr. Henderson's appointment has, naturally, given universal satisfaction. There was a talk of the appointment of an additional judge and it is said that the appointment has not been made owing to the sanction of the Secretary of State not having been received. It is, however, expected that by the time Mr. Justice Sale returns, the sanction of the Secretary of State will be received and Mr. Henderson will be made permanent. It is a matter of satisfaction to notice that the Elgin-Chalmers theory that no member of the local Bar should officiate as a judge has after all been knocked on the head. We predicted at the time of its promulgation under the seal of the Secretary of State that there was no substance in it, and are glad that after putting it to practical test it has come to be discredited.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE CHANCELLOR'S ADDRESS AT the last Convocation of the Calcutta University was intended as an address to the young men who having completed their academic career were in search of one in the outside world. The Viceroy, as the Indian saying goes, young in age but old in wisdom, took upon himself the task of offering advice all round and in doing so did not forget to apporportion to the lawyer his quota. His words may appear somewhat common-place to the busy lawyer, but those who have yet a great deal of time to spare will, perhaps, find in it matter for meditation and precepts for practice, if only any early chance should present itself to them. But youngsters will be none the worse if they have to wait a long while yet, and forget all about the last Convocation speech. In the profession of law, as in any other business, an ounce of practice is often worth tons of theory. Theories with which we are all familiar, are always entitled to respect and specially so when they are repeated by a Governor-General of India and we need no further apology for quoting his Excellency's words.

In a Law-court the facts are the first thing; the law is the second; and the eloquence of the barrister or pleader upon the facts and the law is the third. Do not let your attention to the third subject obscure the importance of the first and second, and most of all the first. Words are required to express the facts, and to elucidate or to apply the law, but when they become the mere vehicle of prolix dissertation, they are both a weakness and a nuisance. The second danger of the Law-courts is the familiar forensic foible of over-subtlety, or as it is commonly called, hair-splitting. We know what people mean when they say, "That is a lawyer's argument": and although the trunt may often be undeserved, there must be something in it to explain its popular acceptance. Try, therefore, to avoid that refining, and refining, which concentrates its entire attention upon a point—often only a pin-point—and which forgets that what convinces a judge on the bench or a jury in the box is not the adroitness that juggles with minutiae, but the broad handling of a case in its larger aspects.

Mr. Haldane says this was true of lawyers a hundred years ago. As for the undeserved odium referred to in his Lordship's speech we had it recently on the authority of an M. P. that a learned judge once observed that "the House of Commons is a place where, if a man talks common-sense, they call him a lawyer." We wonder if his Excellency had the House in his mind when he delivered his convocation address.

MR. HALDANE, M. P., K. C., SPEAKING BEFORE THE Leeds Law Society delivered, as usual, a very sound and vigorous discourse touching matters which are of common interest to the public and the profession. Referring to the position of a lawyer in our modern polity, he said:—

A learned Judge had once observed: 'The House of Commons is a place where, if a man talks common-sense, they call him a lawyer.' The tendency, however, towards narrow views in the legal profession was one against which they ought all to guard, and it was well that they should try in their contemplation to look beyond the traditions of the past, beyond those even of the moment, and look a little to the future. The watchword of reformers at this time was efficiency—a desire to put the machinery of our Empire upon a better footing; and perhaps the lawyers did well not to leave out of account what was too often forgotten, viz., that in the law they had a potent part not only of the machinery, but of the Empire itself. The lawyer of a hundred years ago was, generally speaking, divorced from human society and human development, as well as from the commercial and business life of the age. They had altered that now. The lawyer had changed (as far as Parliament would let him change), and had become a man of affairs and a man of wider understanding.

Regarding the importance of law, he said:—

He knew nothing so potent, nothing so subtle in its binding effects, as the legal machinery of the Empire. The King ruled over 400 millions of people, and nearly twelve millions of square miles, and in these vast territories there were included people of different races, with different traditions, different ethical standards, different systems of law in which their morals, standards, and principles were embodied.

From this he argued that there should be one Final Court of Appeal for the Empire and observed:—

There was, of course, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a remarkable body, and of high repute throughout the country. But the London policeman would not be able to tell the stray traveller where it was or where it sat. Why were the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council separate bodies? The House of Lords formed the supreme Court of Appeal for England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Privy Council for everywhere else. Originally it was not so. With the Empire where it was we must reconsider these things. A supreme Court of Appeal should be one for the Empire. It should sit in two divisions if necessary, and it should be housed with at least the splendour which pertained to the House of Lords at the present time. Unity of appeal in a supreme tribunal would form a new link which would go towards Imperial Federation, in a sense.

WE HAVE REASONS, HOWEVER, TO BELIEVE THAT IT IS not at all likely that any fresh measures will be taken just at present to reconstitute the Judicial Committee and the House of Lords. However slow and unsatisfactory the latter may be, British public opinion will not easily be a consenting party to any drastic changes in this tribunal. Lord Selborne attempted to abolish the Lord's appellate jurisdiction but was obliged to abandon his attempt. Mr. Chamberlain's recent attempt on the opposite direction, to enlarge it into one great Imperial Court of Appeal failed because the Australian Commonwealth saw no particular advantage in modifying their constitution materially, for the bare honour of having a few representatives in a titular tribunal. The Government would have been better advised if they had accepted Mr. Haldane's suggestions and proceeded to carry them out without binging the whole question of a Final Court of Appeal on a single clause of the Australian Commonwealth Bill.

IT MAY BE STATED ON THE AUTHORITY OF A correspondent of the Times that Russia, with all her net work of foreign policy spread far and wide, not only finds time but, evidently, devotes a great deal of it, in endeavouring to be up to date in matters of legislation as well. It is also remarkable that even the Russian Legislature proposes to do away with the death penalty. As for the Russian process of revision of the Criminal Code the correspondent says.

The Council of State is now engaged in the consideration of the new Criminal Code, which has been drawn up by an expert committee of jurists. The Criminal law at present in force is the old code of 1845 supplemented by various later enactments, and is no longer suited to the requirements of modern Russian life. The committee which is responsible for the new code has devoted some fifteen years to its task. The main feature of the revised code is that it does not seek, as is the case with the one at present in force, to define every separate crime which may be punished, but relies upon broad general definitions. Instead of the 1711 paragraphs of which the old code consisted, the revised one contains about a third of that number, in spite of the fact that it deals with a number of crimes which were, unknown, or practically unknown, in 1894, such as blackmailing, strikes, and many others. It is interesting to note that strikes become criminal under the new code when they are directed against the Government or when they lead to injuries to persons or damage to property. The old "staircase of punishments," to employ a Russian phrase, finds no place in the new code. According to the old law the lowest punishment was a "reprimand," and all other punishments were reckoned as equivalent to so many reprimands. The penal system was very complex, and included punishments of many kinds and grades, ranging from the reprimand to transportation and capital punishment. In the new code all this is done away with, and imprisonment of various degrees of severity becomes practically the only punishment. The committee even recommends the entire abolition of the death penalty. The new code endeavours to deal in a comprehensive manner with the difficult question of the estimation of the extent to which it is possible to hold a person responsible for acts committed in particular circumstances or in particular states of mind. This part of the code, which includes the definition of the principles of the responsibility of minors, is the work of the well-known jurist, Professor Tagantzeff, the president of the department of Criminal Cassation.

Russia is not so un-civilized after all.

It is interesting to notice the following predilection of Boer youths for the profession of law.

Among the new members of the Middle Temple is a native of the Orange River Colony, who happens also to be a nephew of ex-President Steyn. Educated Boers have always been noted for an ambition to qualify as English barristers. Mr. Steyn himself is a member of the Bar, and so, for the present, is Dr. Krause. Several other young Boers are enrolled as students at the different Inns of Court. During the earlier stages of the war some of them went abroad, but they have since returned, and now are quietly pursuing their studies.—Law Times.

AWARD BY ARBITRATORS CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, CH. XXXVII.

The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recently decided case of Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Ahmed (6 C. W. N. 226) will have a most important effect on the decisions which have from time to time been passed by our Courts on questions relating to arbitration.

After entering into a general exposition of the provisions of Ch. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code—their Lordships proceed to distinguish the three classes of references to arbitration provided for by that Code, namely, under secs. 506, 523 and 525. It is pointed out that in the case of a reference under sec. 506, the agreement to refer and the application of the Court must have the concurrence of all parties and the actual reference is an order of the Court. So that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point, whereas in cases of reference under secs. 523 and 525, proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter under the cognisance of the Court.

"This distinction," their Lordships remark, "does not seem to have been always kept in view in India." Their Lordships seem to be of opinion that the conflict of decisions in India on questions relating to the finality of award is mainly due to our Courts not having kept in view this distinction. We shall attempt, therefore, to illustrate their Lordships' meaning by reference to some Indian decisions.

The cases we refer to, all turn on the question, "Does an appeal lie from a decree passed in accordance with an award?"

The decisions of the Indian Courts with all their conflict seem to agree in asserting the following propositions.

That a decree passed in accordance with a valid award is final. But that if the award itself be illegal or invalid, a decree passed even in accordance with it is not and an appeal would lie therefrom.

It is in determining what forms of illegality would be sufficient to lay an award open to appeal that the conflict arises and that because our Courts have not kept in view the distinction between an award given under sec. 506, and those made under secs. 523 and 525.

The forms of illegality which have been uniformly regarded by our Courts as sufficient to warrant an appeal are chiefly two:

(1) That the Court which passed the decree disregarded the objections raised against the award under secs. 520, 521.

(2) That there was no valid reference and that there was no genuine award or that the reference to arbitration and the genuineness of the award were disputed.

The conflict that has arisen in reference to the first point, will appear from the following:—

(a) In Shashih Ch. Chatterji v. Tarak Ch. Chatterji (Full Bench decision, 8 B. L. R. 315), we find the judges divided. Some were of opinion that though it is certainly incumbent on the Court passing the decree on the award to carefully weigh such objections still, should it fail to do so, there would be no remedy against its decision. Others held that such errors would render the decree illegal and void and an appeal would lie.

(b) In Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 213, F. B.) the judges were unanimous that no appeal would lie.

(c) In Kali Prosonno Ghose v. Rajoni Kant Chatterji (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 141), again, it was held that the award would be illegal and an appeal would lie.

The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council may now be taken to have finally settled the question, namely, that a decree passed in accordance with an award made on a reference under sec. 506 is final and is not impugnable either on appeal or revision. It should be remarked that on this as on the other points, their Lordships evidently fully endorse the decision of Justice Subramania Iyer in the Full Bench case of Husananna v. Lingana (I. L. R. 18 Mad. 423) concurred in by the other judges.

On the second point, namely, when the fact of reference to arbitration itself, and the genuineness of the award are disputed, we notice.

(a) In Micharaya v. Sudashiva (I. L. R. 4 Mad. 319) it was held that no appeal would lie. It should be noted that this case arose out of reference made under secs. 525, 526.

(b) In Shashiti Ch. Chatterji v. Tarak Ch. Chatterji (8 B. L. R. 315) it was held unanimously that appeal would lie. This case too arose out of a reference under sec. 327 of the old Code, which corresponds with sec. 525 of the present Code.

(c) In Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 213, F. B.) the judges were divided. This case also arose out of secs. 525, 526.

(d) In Husananna v. Lingana (I. L. R. 18 Mad. 423) it was held that an appeal would lie. This case too arose out of secs. 525, 526.

Now all these cases are cases of reference to arbitration without the intervention of Court—(secs. 525-526). It is in perfect accordance with the views of their Lordships, that questions as to the truth of the fact of reference or the genuineness of the award may arise only in cases falling under these sections. For in such cases, to quote their Lordships, "proceedings described as a suit must be taken in order to bring the matter under the cognisance of the Court. That is or may be a litigious proceeding—cause may be shewn against the application—and it would seem that the order made thereon is a decree within the meaning of the expression as defined in the Civil Procedure Code."

The conclusion we draw from this is (and we have the authority of Justice Subramania Iyer, 18 Mad. 423 in our support) that a decree passed on an award made on reference under sec. 523 or secs 525, 526 need not necessarily be final and an appeal may lie from it.

The confusion which has resulted from not keeping always in view the distinction between the two class of cases was well illustrated in the important Madras decision, Husananna v. Lingana (I. L. R. 18 Mad. 423). In that judgment the cause of the confusion and the way out of it were well pointed out by Justice Subramania Iyer, namely, by thus distinguishing the two classes of awards.

1st. Those arising from a reference made in the course of a suit under sec. 506. The decrees passed on such awards under sec. 523, are unimpeachable except on the ground that they are not in accordance with or are in excess of the award.

2nd. Those arising from references made under secs. 523, 525. The decree, passed on these are decrees in the ordinary sense (sec. 2, C. P. C.) and are open to appeal (sec. 540, C. P. C.).

COURT OF APPEAL.—ADAMS v. CAIRNS. Before the MASTER OF ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS and STERLING. 11th July 1901.

The Defendant was the free-holder of a house at Kilburn in London. He gave a lease of that premises to one Twine for a term which was to expire on 24th June 1901, the lease bearing date, the 9th of November 1897. Twine let a part of that premises to the Plaintiff for his hair-dressing business on 5th January 1900 and under such agreement the Plaintiff took possession. Twine accepted the Plaintiff as tenant at 7/ a week "the rent not to be raised during my present tenancy." Under those words followed the signature of Twine. After this on 27th September 1900 Twine surrendered to the free-holder, the Defendant Cairns, all his interest in the lease of 9th November 1897. In the October following the Defendant after notice to the Plaintiff to quit at once, entered into possession. This action was for such trespass and wrongful entry.

At the trial before Mr. Justice Readly it was held that merely a weekly tenancy was created in favour of the Plaintiff.

The APPEAL COURT being of opinion that the reservation of a weekly rent did not necessarily create a weekly tenancy, that effect must be given to the concluding words, that rent was not to be raised until the 24th June 1901. Held that the meaning of the agreement was that it was to continue until that date and decided in Plaintiff's favour and ordered a new trial.

Mr. Forder Lamparel for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Abel Thomas, K. C., and Mr. Turner for the Defendant.

Decision in favour of Plaintiff: New trial ordered.

COURT OF APPEAL.—HOPE v. I'ANSON AND WEATHERBY. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES STERLING and MATHEW. 17th December 1901.

Libel—Publication in Racing Calendar—Decision of Jockey Club—Committees of Club, duty of—Privilege.

This action was the result of a dispute between the Plaintiff A. J. Hope and one Armstrong. Hope had entered a horse for one of the Edinburgh races, a dispute arose between the two about a certain jockey riding Plaintiff's horse. The libel complained of by the Plaintiff was the communication by I'Anson to the other Defendants, that the Plaintiff had at the Naddock hit Armstrong in the face, and the publication in the Racing Calendar by the other Defendants, that Armstrong had reported the Plaintiff to the stewards for assaulting him, that the stewards having heard the evidence of these witnesses, censured the Plaintiff and had reported the matter to the Jockey Club. There was a further publication that the Jockey Club had referred the matter back to the local stewards and that the Plaintiff was severely censured.

Mr. Justice Darling had found that privilege had not been made out, and the jury had returned £50 damages against P'Anson and £100 against the other Defendants.

For the Defendants in support of their contention for a new trial it was urged that the occasion on which the above libels were published was privileged and that there was no evidence of malice. It was pointed out that the Plaintiff had himself lodged the complaint to the stewards against Armstrong, and had himself against the local stewards' decision appealed to the Jockey Club. The rules of the Jockey Club were referred to, and it was said that it was under those rules that the Plaintiff had lodged his complaint. That the action of the Defendant, P'Anson, who was the clerk of the course at the meeting, was in accordance with those rules. That the Weatherby Defendants were acting as the servants of the Jockey Club, in publishing the decisions arrived at by the local stewards. Plaintiff had invoked the jurisdiction of the Jockey Club and knew the result would appear in the Racing Calendar.

The COURT OF APPEAL dismissed the appeal, holding that even assuming that the decision of the Jockey Club was quasi-judicial, they were not of such general public interest as to make the occasion privileged; with regard to the Plaintiff having consented to the action of the Jockey Club and knowledge that the result would appear in their journal, there was nothing to show that the last point was made out, nor was it proved that all such decisions were printed in the Racing Calendar. There was no inference of law that a person submitting to the decision of certain individuals, thereby submitted to its being published as if it were a decision of a Court of law. On the facts it was not made out that the Plaintiff had consented to the publication. The racing rules did not contain any express provision regarding the publication of a decision like the present.

The Defendant had to establish an admission on the part of the Plaintiff that he had consented to the publication. Then there was the further question whether even if the Plaintiff had submitted to the publication was it not to be understood that the proceedings were to be regularly conducted? Committees of Clubs, although they had not to follow the rules of law, were bound to follow the requirements of natural justice (Dawkins v. Antrobus, 17 Ch. D. 615) one important rule being the accused should be heard. Mr. Justice Darling was quite right on a consideration of all the circumstances in ruling that it was for the jury and not the Judge to decide regarding the Plaintiff's alleged consent and the appeal failed.

Sir Edward Clarke, K. C., and Mr. C. W. Mathews for the Appellants.

Mr. Lawrence, K. C., and Mr. Cantley for the Plaintiff.

Appeal dismissed: Stay of execution allowed on usual terms pending the appeal to the House of Lords.

COURT OF APPEAL—HUNT v. LUCK. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, STERLING and COZENS HARDY. 23rd January 1902.

Conveyancing Act, 1882—Mortgagee's duty of inquiry.

The facts of this case are stated in the report of the litigation in its original state before Mr. Justice Farwell (see 5 C. W. N., p. cli).

This was the appeal of the Plaintiff Hunt from that decision.

The COURT OF APPEAL dismissed the appeal being of opinion that Mr. Justice Farwell's statement of the law was quite accurate. Referring to sec. 3 of the Conveyancing Act of 1882, the Court said the only inquiry which the mortgagees were bound to make was an inquiry to protect themselves against any right which the tenant might have in the property, but that did not extend to any right which the lessor might have. Any reasonable inquiry would not have led to the information regarding the title of Dr. Hunt, the deceased husband of the Plaintiff; in such inquiry what they would have discovered was that the tenant had paid his rent to Woodrow and even if it were assumed that they would have heard that the rent was paid on behalf of Gilbert that would not have given notice of Dr. Hunt's title. The Conveyancing Act did not enlarge the duty of inquiry from the law as it previously stood.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—STEDALL v. HOUGHTON. Before MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN EADY. 28th November 1901.

Negatives of photographs—Implied contract not to use for other purposes—Breach of confidence—Injunction—Costs.

POLLARD v. PHOTOGRAPHIC COMPANY (40 Ch. Div. 345) followed.

The Defendant, a Marriage photographer, had photographed the Plaintiff Stedall's wife (since divorced by him) and their children. The payment for the same was made by her, but she had no separate means. At the time she was photographed she was living in the house with her husband but on bad terms with him, receiving from him money weekly for the usual domestic expenses. The Plaintiff Stedall, having obtained a decree nisi and after it was made absolute, married another lady. He objected to Defendant exhibiting the photograph in his window and an enlargement in his reception room. On his objecting, the Defendant partly acceded to his request, but on the ground that at a further interview the Plaintiff had used strong language towards him, refused to altogether comply with the Plaintiff's request. It was an ascertained fact that the further exhibition of the picture (that which formed the basis of this action) was unknown to the Defendant. The question was whether he had a right to exhibit the picture against the wish of the Plaintiff; whether the action would lie.

The learned Judge held, on the facts, that a contract not to use the photographs for the purpose of exhibiting same was an implied one, the wife was acting as her husband's agent at the time she sat for the photos, and it was a breach of confidence to exhibit same. It was no excuse to say that he was not aware of the subsequent exhibition thereof, he should have taken care to prevent such use being made of the photos after Plaintiff's objection.

The above-mentioned case was followed and an injunction with costs was allowed.

Mr. Eve, K. C., and Mr. Manning for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Mecklem, K. C., and Mr. Solomons for the Photographer.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—TERRELL v. MURRAY. Before JUSTICES BRUCE and PHILLIMORE. 11th June 1901.

Lease—Covenant—Dilapidations—“Reasonable wear and tear excepted.”

The Defendant Lady Murray was the tenant. The lease to her contained no covenant to repair during the term of her lease, but there was a tenant's covenant to deliver up the premises “in as good repair as it now is in, reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire excepted.”

The lessor at the expiration of the term demanded £112 under the above stipulation, and his action to recover same was referred to Mr. Hamming, K. C., the Official Referee.

The learned Official Referee found for Plaintiff for £39. That amount included £14 for painting and painting outside of house and £5 for damage by dry rot to kitchen.

Defendant objected to these items, and this was a motion on her part to set aside that judgment on the ground that she was only liable to commissive waste and not permissive waste. The dilapidations were merely “reasonable wear and tear.”

The Court held that what the tenant was liable for was to deliver up the messuage in as good a condition as it was in when she rented same, but subject to this that she was not liable for dilapidations caused by friction of the air, by exposure and for such as was caused by ordinary use; and outside painting the tenant was not bound to do under her covenant; and as the amount due to the Plaintiff under such decision would be reduced to the amount paid into Court, judgment would be for the Plaintiff.

KING'S BENCH.—THE KING v. DIX. Before JUSTICES DARLING and PHILLIMORE. 14th January 1902.

Extradition—Larceny Act, 1861, sec. 81—Extradition Act, 1870—“Larceny by embezzlement”—Crim within the laws of Washington and England—Crim not called by the same name in the two countries.

The second information on which the prisoner Mr. St. John Dix, was committed to prison with a view to his extradition to Washington U. S. A. by one of the London Magistrates was on a charge described as “Larceny by embezzlement.” The matter now came on on a habeas corpus writ issued on behalf of the prisoner contending that although the evidence had disclosed a prima facie case of that character within the meaning of the American statutes no such case was disclosed according to the law of England. The offence not being a crime within the law of both countries, the prisoner could not be lawfully extradited. Also that conceding that there was an offence prima facie within the purview of the English Larceny Act, it was not the same as that mentioned in the information before the Magistrate, viz., “Larceny by embezzlement.”

The Court decided against the prisoner and refused the writ. The judgment states that the essential thing to find out was whether what the evidence disclosed prima facie was that what the prisoner had done was a crime in both countries; and after a consideration of the statutes named at the head note, the Court arrived at the conclusion that the same thing had been made a criminal offence in both countries, the same facts established that a crime had been committed within the law both of the United States and of England. It was no essential that the offence should be called by the same name. See the decision of the late Lord Chief Justice In re Arton, where it was held that extradition should not be refused on the ground that the falsification of accounts was not forgery according to English law, but fell under that head according to French law.

Mr. Beron for the Prisoner.

The application was opposed by the Attorney-General and Mr. Sutton.

Decision against the issue of the writ.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—LONGMAN v HESS.
Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and a SPECIAL JURY.
28th January 1902

Libel—"Outside broker"—Nominal damages—Costs.

The Plaintiff in this action was one William Longman, an "outside broker." He brought this action against the Defendant Hess, the editor of the financial newspaper called the Critic, and against the British and Colonial Publications Company, the owners of that paper. In that paper in several issues of it there were references to Plaintiff's business, "as the bucket shop dealing under the cover system" warning people not to have any dealings with such people and in particular referring to the Plaintiff's as one of the larger of such establishment. It stated that Mr. Longman "has the misfortune to continually ensnare clients." There was no dispute that all the articles Plaintiff complained of and his counsel noticed in his opening address were prima facie libellous. The question on the defence for determination was whether under all the circumstances the comments made on the Plaintiff's business and the manner of his dealings were substantially true.

Upon such defence the Plaintiff was not examined after Plaintiff's counsel's opening statement. The Defendant's counsel then addressed the jury and called the Defendant and their witnesses.

At the conclusion of the examination of witnesses for the defence, the Plaintiff was called to be examined, and the Lord Chief Justice, overruling an objection from the Defendant's counsel to such procedure, decided that it was quite proper to do so. When the affirmative was on the Defendant to prove, Plaintiff was not bound to call evidence by anticipation he was at liberty to do so by way of reply.

At the conclusion of the examination of the Plaintiff and his witnesses the Lord Chief Justice intimated that the Plaintiff was entitled to his reply.

Counsel for each party having accordingly addressed the jury, the Lord Chief Justice left the matter to the jury, intimating that the business of an outside broker was a lawful business, and no one had a right to speak injuriously of it and that it appeared from the Plaintiff's own statement in his examination that when he gave advice to his clients, it would be unfortunate for him; whenever his advice turned out to be good, that was a feature which must be noticed. The jury must look into all the facts and say whether they were satisfied that the statements made against the Plaintiff were substantially true.

The jury found a verdict for Plaintiff one farthing damages.

On such verdict counsel for Defendants asked that the Plaintiff be deprived of costs.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE after consideration refused the application, the verdict was against the Defendant, it meant that the jury did not believe in the charges and there were special circumstances sufficient for depriving the Plaintiff of his costs.

Mr. Duke, K. C., and Mr. Drake for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hume Williams, K. C., and Mr. Shaw for the Defendants.

Judgment for the Plaintiff with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2614 OF 1899.

RAMPINI, J.	}	CHUNI LAL DUTT, Defendant No. 2,
PRATT, J.		Appellant,
1902		v.
4, February.	}	HIRA LAL DUTT, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Specific performance, suit for—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244—Right of suit—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 113—Estoppel.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th December 1899, against the decree of Babu Mohim Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 27th November 1899, confirming the decree of Babu Bidhu Bhushan Banerji, Munsif, 3rd Court, Howrah, dated the 29th March 1899.

The facts of the case material to this report are as follows:—The Plaintiff sued Defendant No. 1 for khas possession of 3 cottahs of land. The suit was compromised and dismissed, Defendant agreeing to execute a kabuliyat in favour of Plaintiff for a term of ten years at a certain rate of rent. Defendant did not execute the kabuliyat and assigned the land to Defendant No. 2. Plaintiff sued Defendants Nos 1 and 2 for ejectment on the ground that Defendant No. 1 by assigning his interest in the land had forfeited his tenancy; the suit was dismissed. Plaintiff then brought this suit for specific performance of the contract to execute a kabuliyat.

The first Court decreed the suit; upon appeal by Defendants Nos. 1 & 2 the lower Appellate Court upheld the judgment of the first Court; the following two points were urged before the lower Appellate Court: First.—That the Defendant No. 2 being a bond fide purchaser for value and without notice is not bound by the contract. Second.—That the solanamah having been admittedly filed by a pleader who had no authority to file it is not enforceable under the law.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the first point had not been taken before the first Court and could not therefore be allowed to be taken before him. The second point was decided against the Defendants. Defendant No. 2 preferred this second appeal.

In the High Court it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff. (1) That the suit was barred by sec. 244, C. P. C., and that when a decree was passed in the first ejectment suit, Plaintiff could have executed his decree, but was not entitled to bring a separate suit for specific performance. (2) That in suing to eject the Defendant the Plaintiff had acted in contravention of the terms of the compromise which allowed Defendant a ten years' lease and so could not now sue to enforce it. (3) And that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held as to the first objection.—That as the previous suit, which was for khas possession was dismissed and in the decree there was no direction for the execution of any kabuliyat, and the Plaintiff could not obtain the relief he now sought for the present suit was not barred by sec. 244.

Held as to the second objection.—That as in the former suit, Plaintiff had treated the Defendant as a tenant who had forfeited his rights under the compromise, Plaintiff had not acted in contravention of the terms of the solanamah and was not precluded from now suing for a kabuliyat.

Held on the third point.—That the suit was not barred as the refusal by the Defendant to execute the kabuliyat had been made within 3 years of the institution of the present suit.

Mr. Hill, Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Syama Prosonno Mojumdar for the Appellant.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER
No. 22 of 1901.

GHOSE, J. BRETT, J. 1902. 11, February	}	SURJU PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH and others, Plaintiffs, Decree-holders, Appellants, v. L. D. REID and ors., Defendants, Judgment-debtors, Respondents.
---	---	--

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244—Mesne profits—Principle of assessment—Preliminary order—Appeal.

This was an appeal against an order made in the course of proceedings for assessment of mesne profits, in execution of a decree. The Plaintiffs had obtained a decree for possession of certain lands against the Defendants and the decree directed that the mesne profits payable by the Defendants to the Plaintiffs should be assessed in the execution department. The Plaintiffs thereupon applied for assessment of mesne profits and prayed that such profits might be assessed upon the basis of the actual produce of the lands. The Defendants objected that the mesne profits ought to be assessed in the basis of the fair rent at which the lands might have been let out to tenants. The Subordinate Judge held that the principle upon which mesne profits should be assessed ought to be decided before entering into the merits of the case, and without taking any evidence, held upon the authority of the case of Raghu Nandan Jha v. Jalpa Pattap (3 C. W. N. 748), that the proper principle was to ascertain what would have been a fair and reasonable rent from the land if the same had been let out to a tenant during the unlawful occupation of the wrongdoer. The Subordinate Judge then directed the parties to produce evidence as to the rate of rent. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay inasmuch as the order in question was merely an interlocutory order.

Held—That when an order has been made deciding the principle upon which mesne profits should be assessed, the order was one under sec. 244 C. P. C., and is appealable although the amount of the mesne profits recoverable on the basis of such principle has not been actually ascertained.

Held further—That there is no rule of law that mesne profits must in every case be ascertained on the basis of the rent payable in respect of the lands; but the true principle is that the loss of the party wrongfully kept out of possession must be measured by the actual profits arising from the usufruct of the land, in an occupation of the same character as that of the party wrongfully kept out of possession, at the date of his ouster.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE ARE GLAD TO FIND IT ANNOUNCED THAT MR. Justice Sale is going to take up the Suits for Liquidated Claims on and from the 6th instant.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY IN EXPLAINING THE scheme of the Victoria Memorial Hall, and in suggesting that gifts or loans from private individuals or public bodies may be largely availed of for the collection of its contents, said—

We may appeal for some friendly assistance to the Bar Library. There, I believe, are to be found, unless they have already perished, 14 volumes of the manuscript notes of cases in the handwriting of Mr. Justice Hyde. There is his transcript of the evidence of Warren Hastings and Barwell at the trial of Nuncomar, and his entry of the order for the execution of that ill-fated person. I believe that there is also in the High Court the original bond given by Bolagi Das to Nuncomar, which was pronounced a forgery at the trial.

We do not think there will be any opposition on the part of the members of the Bar to lend the valuable manuscripts in their possession to the Trustees of the Victoria Hall. We believe that there are not merely the fourteen volumes of Mr. Justice Hyde's notes, including the famous Indian State Trials, but that there are also fifty-nine volumes more of manuscript notes of the proceedings of the Supreme Court, which although by repulse are known to be fair copies, to all appearance, seem to be in the handwriting of Mr. Justice Hyde and of the other judges of that Court. The designation "rough" and "fair" as applied to the respective sets of these manuscript notes, is said to have originated from their exterior rather than from the contents which cannot lay any claim to be called "fair."

The proceedings are mostly recorded in long hand but occasionally a form of short hand is used which appears to be very different from what is in common use now and is difficult to read except by experts in that art. We are not aware that these interesting manuscripts serve any more useful purpose in the Bar Library than the satisfaction of the curiosity of some occasional visitor. All such treasures ought surely to find place in institutions where they are likely to meet with greater appreciation.

IT IS BOTH INSTRUCTIVE AND USEFUL TO US TO FIND in the State Trials, above referred to, that the Judges of the Supreme Court, even in its early days, put it down as an unconstitutional practice for the Government or its representatives to communicate with the judges by letter on any subject which was engaging their attention judicially and laid it down as a rule that the only legitimate way in which Government can address them on such matters is by instructing its law officers to make applications in open Court. The following rule laid down by them in the case of King, on the prosecution of Warren Hastings, against Roy Radha Charan (1775) and the proceedings bearing upon it may, to this day, be usefully referred to in this connection:—

That it is contrary to the principles of the English constitution, for any person or persons to address a Court of Judicature by Letter missive, concerning any matter pending before such Court; and that the higher the station is, the act is the more unconstitutional.

Although old, this must not be regarded as an obsolete rule or as unenforceable. For, it was only two years ago that Lord Macnaghten, sitting in Her Majesty's Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in answer to a suggested disobedience by a Government officer to a judicial order, said that the remedy for any such defiance was simple enough. "On a proper application and on proper notice being given it would be found that the arm of the Court would be long enough to reach the offender whatever his position might be" (Fischer v. Secretary of State for India, 3 C. W. N. 173).

• NOTWITHSTANDING OUR GREAT MASTERY OVER THE material world, we are at times apt to doubt whether we are any better off to-day than were our ancestors, ages before, when moral ideals had a more complete hold over human actions than they have, perhaps, at the present day. Recent discoveries in Egypt disclose an idea of justice and an ideal of a judge which we wish we could more frequently meet with outside the antiquities of Egypt. The importance of the discovery, noted in the columns of the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, does not comprise in the question whether Rekhmara, the Chief Justice, possessed all the virtues which are inscribed on his tomb, but consists in the fact that people even in that distant age believed to be the ideal virtues of a judge. Nearly four thousand years have elapsed and we may very well pause to-day and enquire whether there is amongst us any higher ideals of justice and judicial duties than what Mr. Newberry's discovery discloses.

Mr. Percy Newberry, the well-known Egyptologist, has lately restored from the hieroglyphics of his tomb an interesting figure—that of Rekhmara, Chief Justice, or in Oriental hypallage, the "Gate of Justice," of Upper Egypt and Governor of Thebes under Thothmes III, circa 1471-1445 B.C. If we may believe the statements concerning the virtues of Rekhmara, he possessed all the good qualities of an upright and honest judge. He "did not lean to one side more than another, nor weigh the truth for exchange," and never accepted a bribe. He was patient with witnesses, "keen in deliberating," and "not passionate." He was learned in the law, "carried the law of the king in his hand," and always discerned clearly what was to be done. With those who offended against the law through ignorance he merely remonstrated, but wilful wrongdoers he imprisoned. He tells us that he kept a careful eye upon the dictates of his conscience, and set up truth as his guiding star. In order that the poor and oppressed might have free access to him, it was his custom to walk abroad in the early morning, accompanied only by a few servants and scribes, so that he might listen to their grievances. "No one who so approached him was repulsed, and there were no fearful eyes among his Petitioners: "I judged the weak," he says, "with the strong. I protected those who were weak, and I punished the evil-doers and violent persons. I encouraged the tearful and helpless. I supported the widow without a husband, and established the son in the inheritance of his father." It was not a fancy justice either that Rekhmara administered. The king, for instance, in installing the Chief Justice instructs him to act strictly according to law, and in one of the scenes depicted on the tomb there are spread in front of the Chief Justice, upon four mats with fringed edges, the forty parchment rolls containing the Books of the Law.

WE RECENTLY QUOTED FROM THE Law Quarterly Review to point out what Mr. Trevelyan regarded as the weak points in our present system of judicial administration. The remedy he suggests for this is no new-fangled scheme, but is one which Sir James Fitz James Stephen intended carrying out and what the Public Service Commission adopted as sound, with but a few minor modifications. This eminent Law Member to the Viceregal Council said—

"I would, on the one hand, encourage civilians to be lawyers, and, on the other, enable lawyers not being civilians to receive judicial appointments. I think that all District and Sessions judgeships, as well as the High Court judgeships, should be thrown open, and that the ablest natives should be appointed to them largely, especially in the quieter parts of the country. I believe that, in this way, it would be possible in the course of a few years to have a thoroughly good judicial service and a regularly organized legal profession, and in particular to make the service a bond of union between the natives and ourselves. The native appointments to the High Court of Calcutta have answered admirably, and I hear on every side excellent accounts of the younger munsiffs and subordinate judges who have been educated in our Universities."

Such were the recommendations by a person in authority in his own legitimate sphere of business, made many years ago, but so slowly does the Government move in the East that we are not much further from where we were then. It is a sad commentary on our judicial system that Mr. Trevelyan after his long career at the Bar and on the Bench should, so soon after his retirement from this country, have considered it his duty to draw public attention to the evil of the present system and suggest a reform which has been pressed upon the Government for many years. Mr. Trevelyan considers that the need for such reform is not a mere matter of judicial necessity but one of political exigency. He says—

In India, where the action and character of a European official is subject to the keenest and most microscopic criticism, and where it is of the utmost political importance that the inhabitants of the country should entertain the highest respect for the decisions of our Courts, the dangers of this comparison cannot be overestimated.

The native judiciary is highly educated and well trained. Moreover, except in very isolated cases, they are now free from the charges which used to be made against them, namely of being wanting in impartiality and judicial purity. The greater number of important civil cases are now tried by native subordinate judges, and the reports of the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council show that frequently the opinion of a single subordinate judge is preferred to that of the judges of the High Courts sitting in appeal from him. What higher testimony could there be to the capacity of the subordinate judiciary?

Mr. Trevelyan does not, however, recommend the subordinate judiciary as the sole recruiting ground for the District Judgeships but considers that, perhaps, still better materials may be available if a judicious selection be made from the Bar and from amongst the vakils practising in the High Courts and the District Courts.

Moreover the selection need not be made entirely from the subordinate judiciary. There is now in India a large and well-educated bar consisting not only of barristers, both English and native, called to the bar in England, but also of pleaders who practice in the High Courts and in the Courts in the districts, and who are required to pass severe examinations, and in some cases to undergo an apprenticeship, before being enrolled.

CRIMINAL CASES OF 1900.

The past year has been somewhat fruitful of criminal cases. The bulk of the rulings relate to Procedure; and in this branch of the law the class of cases under sec. 145, regarding disputes concerning land, forms the largest body of decisions, notwithstanding the curtailment of the High Court's jurisdiction in respect of such matters. The cases under the Penal Code and Evidence Act are not numerous, but some of them are important. I propose to deal first with the decisions under the Penal Code.

I. PENAL CODE.

PUBLIC SERVANT:—A peon in the service and pay of Government, and attached to a Government officer, is an officer of Government, and a public servant, within sec. 21, cl. 9:—Re Nazamuddin, 4 C. W. N. 798. In Empress v. Arayi, 7 Mad. 17, a peon employed by the manager of an estate under the Court of Wards was held not to be a public servant; but Empress v. Mathura, 21, All. 127, while not expressly dissenting from the Madras case, lays down that such manager is a public servant.

CUMULATIVE SENTENCES:—As the offence of rioting is constituted by the acts of being an unlawful assembly and the use of force or violence in prosecution of the common object, both constituent elements amounting in themselves to different offences, it is clear that when the force or violence of which an accused has been separately convicted is the force or violence which converts an unlawful assembly into rioting, the case falls within cl. 3 of sec. 71: See Hriday v. Jagannada, 4 C. W. N. 245. The question has been discussed in Nilmony Poddar v. Queen-Empress, 16 Cal 442, by a Full Bench. See also Empress v. Ram Periah, 6 All. 121.

IMMATURETY:—In a case where a boy under 12 was convicted, the High Court observed that the age of the accused being under 12, the Magistrate should, having regard to I. P. C., sec. 83, have found whether the accused had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his act:—Queen Empress v. Maki-muddin, 27 Cal 133.

ABETMENT:—In Etim Ali v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 500, certain persons of influence who, being aware of the object of an unlawful assembly, had deliberately absented themselves from the locality where the assembly had collected, were held not to have “instigated” the offence under I. P. C., sec. 143, within the meaning of sec. 107. Where a child was kidnapped by persons, some of whom were servants of the purveyor of the accused, and was missed shortly after a visit to the latter, and was found by his servants, the Court held the evidence insufficient to show instigation or conspiracy on the part of the prisoner:—Nogendrabala v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 528. The act of a person receiving an unstamped document might amount to abetment of an offence, having regard to sec. 61 of the Stamp Act, 1879, read with I. P. C., sec. 40:—Queen-Empress v. Somanulderam, 23 Mad. 155. Sec. 108 A was enacted in consequence of Empress v. Gunpatrao, 19 Bom. 105. The section contemplates that the abetment shall be completed in British India. The Illustration to it is not very clear. If A is in British India and B in Goa, A can only abet an offence by him either by letter or some other mode of communication; and though the letter may be written in British India, yet until it reaches B in Goa, it can hardly be said that the latter has been instigated. If the instigation, as a matter of fact, takes place when the letter reaches B, then the instigation has taken place in Goa and not in British India, and this seems outside the scope of the section. The case of Queen-Empress v. Bapu, 24 Bom. 287, does not state whether any acts constituting abetment took place in British India. A minor was taken by the first accused under directions from second accused from Sholapur to Nizam's territory and there dedicated to a goddess. The nature of the “directions” is not stated. If the second accused, while at Sholapur, instructed the first accused to take the girl to foreign territory and to dedicate her to the goddess, the abetment would be completed in British India, and the case would seem to be within sec. 108 A: provided of course the dedication abroad would, if performed in British India, be an offence. Under sec. 114 it is necessary to prove acts which would constitute abetment if the accused was absent, and then to show that the accused was present. This principle, laid down in Queen v. Musst. Niruni, 7 W. R. Cr. 49, was followed in Abhi Misser v. Luchmi, 4 C. W. N. 546; 27 Cal. 566. The case of Empress v. Chattradhari, 2 C. W. N. 49, was explained on the ground of abetment before the actual presence of the accused at the time of the commission of the offence abetted. To support a conviction for abetment of an offence under I. P. C., sec. 408, it must be proved that the accused knew that the act which he abetted was dishonest:—Bal Gobind v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 309. Instigation implies knowledge of the criminality of an act.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY:—Where the common object of the assembly is alleged to be theft, and the facts found do not constitute that offence, the assembly is not unlawful:—Parmeshwar Singh v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 345. Where the accused are acquitted of rioting, they cannot be convicted under secs. 325, 149, where it is not found that accused or any one of them were members of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of which grievous hurt was caused by any other member of the assembly, or that the offence was such that each member of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in pursuance of that object:—Abhi Misser v. Luchmi, 4 C. W. N. 546; 27 Cal. 566. To establish the offence under sec. 154, it is necessary to prove that a riot took place on land owned by accused, that his agent or manager knew that it was about to take place, and did not use all lawful means to suppress the riot:—Tarakant Das v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 691, referring to Brae v. Queen-Empress, 10 Cal. 338.

• CONTEMPTS:—The case of Durga Das Rukhit v. Umesh Chandra Sen, 5 C. W. N. 131; 27 Cal. 985, decides that an appearance by a muktair in a summons case is sufficient obedience to the summons, and default of personal attendance should not have been regarded as an offence under sec. 174. But having regard to Sch. V of the Cr. P. C., if a summons requires appearance in person, the accused is legally bound to attend personally, and cannot appear by agent, (unless he has been exempted under sec. 205, in which case the summons would require appearance by agent) and his failure to appear in person seems to fall within sec. 174. In Queen-Empress v. Sankaralinga, 23 Mad. 514, it was held that a refusal to answer questions put by a police-officer under sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, is not punishable under I. P. C., secs. 176, 179, 187, as under the present sec. 161 the person examined is not legally bound to state the truth. This was the view of the law under the Code of 1872: See Empress v. Kassim Khan, 7 Cal. 121. To constitute the offence under sec. 188, it is necessary to show not only a lawful order promulgated by a public servant and knowledge of, and disobedience to, such order, but also that such disobedience causes or tends to cause certain results. In Brojo Nath v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 226, it was held that the mere holding of a rival hant on the same day near an old hant was not sufficient to bring the case within sec. 188, in the absence of evidence that the act would cause the results mentioned therein: but quære whether such act does not come within the words "tends to cause."

PERJURY:—It is a false statement made under a verification that constitutes the offence punishable under sec. 193, not a verification on oath or solemn affirmation:—Durga Das Rukht v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 820. It was held in Queen-Empress v. Khem, 22 All. 115, that where a witness made a statement on oath or solemn affirmation before a third class Magistrate under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., and an inconsistent statement at the trial before a first class Magistrate, he might properly be convicted under the second, if not the first, para. of I. P. C., sec. 193. In Queen-Empress v. Bharna, 11 Bom. 702, a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held that a statement made to a third class Magistrate, who could not hold the preliminary inquiry, was not one made in a judicial proceeding within sec. 193, I. P. C. The Allahabad case is in conformity with Queen-Empress v. Alagon, 18 Mad. 421. A preliminary inquiry held by a Subordinate Magistrate, under the direction of the District Magistrate, into the circumstances of a "complaint" against the Police is not a judicial proceeding within sec. 193, I. P. C.:—Queen-Empress v. Venkatarammanna, 23 Mad. 223. The head-note to Hari Churn v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 249; 27 Cal. 455, is not quite correct. Where a person apparently after acquittal was examined on oath to enable the Court to take cognizance of an offence under sec. 190(c), Cr. P. C., it was held that though the Magistrate might examine the person for that purpose, yet he could not examine him on oath under the Oaths Act, as he was not a witness in any case at the time, and that such person was not legally bound to state the truth.

FALSE CHARGE:—A false report by a police-officer that a certain case was found true, which the Magistrate found to be false, is not within sec. 211, as the officer did not institute or cause to be instituted any criminal proceeding against any person:—Thakur Tewary v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 347.

TAKING A GIFT:—Where a police-officer demanded money from a person, not in consideration of not proceeding against him, but to obtain his release from illegal custody, it was held that the offence was extortion, and did not come within sec. 213, I. P. C.:—Akhay Kumar v. Jagat Chandra, 4 C. W. N. 755; 27 Cal. 295.

FRAMING FALSE RECORD:—The word "charged" in sec. 218 is not restricted to the meaning of, "enjoined by a special provision of law." So where the D. S. P. usually required a first information and special diary in gambling cases, just as in ordinary cognizable cases, it was held that the accused was charged with the preparation of such record within the meaning of sec. 218:—Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh, 27 Cal. 144.

PUBLIC NUISANCE:—Soliciting for the purpose of prostitution by a woman on a public road is not a public nuisance within secs. 268, 290, as it does not necessarily cause annoyance:—Queen-Empress v. Nanni, 22 All. 113. A prostitute visiting a dak bungalow at the request of a visitor does not commit an offence under sec. 290:—Queen v. Mt. Begum, 2 N. W. P. 349.

WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT:—It was held in Re Randai, 4 C. W. N. cv, that if a guest persisted in remaining in a house and refused to leave it, the locking of the doors against him and confinement of him in a part of the house did not amount to wrongful confinement, and that no one can be said to be wrongfully confined during the time that an escape is open to him if he will avail himself of it.

KIDNAPPING:—The Full Bench ruling of Nemai Chatternoj v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 645; 27 Cal. 1041, lays down that the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from such guardianship, and that it is not an offence continuing so long as she is kept out of guardianship. The principle forms the basis of the decision in Rakhtul Nikari v. Queen-Empress, 2 C. W. N. 81, and the Allahabad cases, Queen-Empress v. Ram Deo, 18 All. 350, and Queen-Empress v. Ram Sundar, 19 All. 109, seem to support the same view. When the guardianship has determined, the offence is complete, and no subsequent removal of the girl can constitute the offence of abetting the kidnapping. If there has been a voluntary abandonment of her home by the minor, and the guardianship has thereby ceased, and some person then obtains possession of her, his act is neither kidnapping or abetment:—Queen v. Gondhur Singh, 5 R. J. and P. J. 151. The offence of kidnapping from British India stands differently. In such offence the taking continues as long as the person kidnapped is in transit in British India, and the case of Reg v. Samia

Kaundan, 1 Mad. 173, falls under sec. 360. Under sec. 368 the offence of detention of a kidnapped person is no doubt continuous with the period of detention—see Queen-Empress v. Ram Deo, supra, but the section refers not to kidnappers but to others who conceal the kidnapped person:—Queen v. Sheik Ozer, 6 W. R. 17.

DISPOSAL OF MINORS*:—Secs. 372, 373 are complementary and refer to the two parties to the transaction of which the minor is the object. It would, therefore, seem that there are three parties to the transaction prohibited by these two sections. In other words, the sale, letting, hiring or other disposal imply three persons to the act. This was the view of Holloway, J., in Dowlath Bee v. Shaik Ali, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 473, and was adopted in Queen v. Nowajan, 6 B. L. R. Ap. 34 (but see per C. J. in Dowlath Bee v. Shaik Ali, and Hardeo v. Emp., Punj. Rec. 5 of 1880). These cases, as well as Queen v. Musst. Bhutia, 7 N. W. P. 295, and Khushala v. Emp., Punj. Rec. 27 of 1880, also lay down that the terms of the sections import a contract or arrangement, and a present giving up of possession of the minor whether by sale, letting, or other mode of disposal. But the class of cases known as “dedication” cases requires neither three parties, nor any delivery of immediate possession of a minor. According to this view a change in the status or position of the minor is a sufficient “disposal” under sec. 372, though the minor may continue in the disposer’s possession, and there is no third person to whom the minor is disposed. This theory is settled in Bombay by R. v. Jaiti, 6 Bom. H. C. R. 60, followed in Queen-Empress v. Tippa, 16 Bom. 737, and now by Queen-Empress v. Bekur, 21 Bom. 287, supra, and in Madras by R. v. Aruma Chillum, 1 Mad. 161, H. C. Pro., 11th April 1881, Weir, 3rd Ed. 215, Queen v. Mara Ratham, lb. 221, and recently by Srinivasa v. Annasami, 15 Mad. 41, Queen-Empress v. Basava, 15 Mad. 75, Srinivasa v. Annasami 15 Mad. 323; but see per Parker, J. The case of Queen-Empress v. Papu Sani, 23 Mad. 159, lays down that the necessary intent may be shown from the circumstances of the sale and from the fact that dancing girls in the neighbourhood were in the habit of obtaining girls and bringing them up as dancing girls who were given to prostitution. See also Dy. Leg. Rem. v. Karuna Baistobi, 22 Cal. 174.

THEFT:—In Abdol v. Khater, 3 C. W. N. 332, the accused claimed to be entitled to the paddy as grown by his uncle, and his cutting it was held not to amount to theft, though the Court found it was not so grown. In Jagat Chandra v. Rakkal Chandra, 4 C. W. N. 190, the land on which the paddy grew was claimed by the accused and not the paddy itself, and the conviction was upheld. So also in Pandita v. Rahimulla, 4 C. W. N. 480;

27 Cal. 501, it was held that if the crops were found by the Court to have been grown by the complainant, the accused could not cut the same though they claimed the right to the land. The accused appear to have alleged that they grew the crop, in which case the principle of Abdul v. Khater would seem to apply. Stanley, J., held that a dispute as to title supported by evidence showed bona fides of claim to the crop itself. Of course, if the crop, though sown by A, is under an agreement the property of B, the latter does not commit theft by cutting and removing it:—Parneshwar v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 345.

EXTORTION:—Where a Sub-Inspector wrongfully arrested a person and demanded money for his release from illegal custody, it was held that he had committed extortion, and a money-lender, who had advanced the money, was not an accomplice in the offence of extortion:—Akhoy Kumar v. Jagat, 4 C. W. N. 755; 27 Cal. 295.

UNLAWFUL ASSOCIATION:—Proof of merely being together at some distance from home, and intimate connection with each other, and habit of visiting melas together, of the arrest of one in the act of picking a pocket, and of giving false names when arrested, held insufficient to show that they belonged to a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft: Mgukura Pasi v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 139. In re Shrivam, 6 Mad. H. C. R. 120, it was held that there must be proof (1) of association, (2) for the purpose of habitual theft, and that habit is to be proved by an aggregate of acts: See on the analogous sec. 400, the cases of Queen v. Kanul, 17 W. R. 50, Queen v. Mookteram, 23 W. R. 18, and Empress v. Naba, 1 C. W. N. 146.

CRIMINAL TRESPASS:—An entry by a person into premises purchased by him at a sheriff’s sale for the purpose of acquiring possession is not unlawful entry within sec. 441:—Charoo Chunder v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 47.

FORGERY:—Where there is evidence that a forged document was used on behalf of the accused with his knowledge or under his instructions or with his approval, which might be proved by the conduct of the party, a commitment may be made:—Empress v. Ananda, 4 C. W. N. cxvi.

INFRINGEMENT OF TRADE MARK:—A mark, to be a trade mark, must be one used to denote that the goods are the manufacture or the merchandise of a particular person. So where a Bank imported gold bars stamped with the name of another Bank which had closed, and there was no proof of transfer or assignment of the mark, or that the new Bank was a continuation of the old Bank, or succeeded to its business, or that such mark denoted in the market importation by the new Bank, it was held that there was no proof that the mark belonged to the new Bank:—Anookul Chunder v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 423; 27 Cal. 776.

DEFAMATION:—It is not necessary, in order to establish the offence, to show that the complainant was injuriously affected:—Gobinda v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. cxxix. The question of privilege is one that must be decided by Indian Law. The criminal law of defamation in India is the Penal Code, and not English law:—Green v. Delannev, 14 W. R. 27, Queen v. Parsaram, 3 W. R. 45, Re Nagarkhi, 19 Bom. 340. The principles of the Penal Code have been adopted by the Civil Courts in Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chand, 3 All. 815, Angoda v. Nemai, 23 Cal. 867. The Allahabad case, Isuri Prasad v. Unwar Singh, 22 All. 234, adopts this view. It was held that the case of defamation in pleadings fell within the 9th Exception, and was not governed by the English law. The case of witnesses has been held in several cases to come within the rule of absolute privilege. In Gunnesh Dutt v. Mugheeram, 11 B. L. R. 321, the Privy Council inclined to the view that a witness should be prosecuted for perjury, and not sued civilly for defamation. This case was not, however, under the Code; but it has been held that no civil suit will lie for defamation by a witness in Bhikumber Singh v. Bechravam, 15 Cal. 264.

* See Article “Unlawful Disposal of Minors” by the writer in 5 Mad. Law Journal, pp. 393, 394.

The same rule has been applied in criminal cases, and Woolfun Bibi v. Jessarat, 27 Cal. 262, follows the Madras and Bombay rulings in Manjappa v. Shesha, 11 Mad. 477, Empress v. Babaji 17 Bom. 127, Empress v. Balkrishna, 17 Bom. 573. But Telang, J., in the last case doubted the correctness of these rulings, and his view was approved of in Re Nagarkhi supra, and in Isuri Prasad v. Unwar Singh, supra. There is thus a conflict of authorities on this point.

English Notes.

COURT OF APPEAL.—GORDON v. FOWLER. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 5th February 1901.

Promissory Notes—Renewals—Fraudulent misrepresentations—Extravagant findings of the jury.

This was the Plaintiff Gordon's appeal from the finding of the jury at the trial of the cause at Birmingham, Mr. Justice Wills presiding. The action was based on two Promissory Notes executed by the Defendant, a farmer in poor circumstances, in favour of the late notorious money-lender Isaac Gordon. The defence was that at the time of the original loans the lender had fraudulently represented that if renewal thereof took place that should be done "on easier terms;" the first of these loans was made in June 1896, £125 was advanced, the Promissory Notes being given for £175. Both the notes (on which action was brought) were from time to time renewed. The jury found that the fraudulent misrepresentation was made when the loans were originally given, that that was the reason for Defendant accepting the terms, that when the time came for payment of the loans the Defendant was not a free agent being pecuniarily heavily pressed, owing to the very high rate of interest charged which was an extortionate rate and that Isaac Gordon had contemplated that such extortionate rate would bring about failure on Defendant's part to satisfy the amounts which would become due. Mr. Justice Wills on such verdict gave judgment for Defendant. The Plaintiff now based his application for a new trial on the ground that there was no evidence to support the finding of the jury that as a matter of fact Isaac Gordon had made the alleged fraudulent misrepresentation.

The COURT OF APPEAL unanimously accepted that view. The undoubtedly hard terms imposed by the notorious money-lender was not a material fact in this case. This was not a case respecting bargains with expectant heirs. The Defendant was of full age and entered into the transactions and the renewals with full knowledge of the facts. There were no grounds for finding that the Defendant was not a free agent, excepting his poverty and indebtedness. There was no evidence whatever that the representations were made by the two clerks of Isaac Gordon, nor was there any evidence of fraud in Isaac Gordon, and even assuming that there was such representation, when the notes first came into existence, renewals on several occasions had taken place without any complaint on Defendant's part, nor was it suggested that there was any evidence produced at the trial that on any of the later transactions there had been any fraud. The Plaintiff must therefore succeed.

Mr. Hugo Young, K. C., and Mr. Disturnal in support of the application for the Administrator of Isaac Gordon's estate.

Mr. Ashton Cross for the Defendant.

Application successful.

PROBATE COURT.—HOFER v. MACKENZIE. Before Mr. JUSTICE BARNES. 22nd January 1901.

Testamentary disposition—"Undue influence"—Costs.

The Plaintiffs propounded the Will and codicils of one William Mackenzie of Dublin and London (as executors) who died on May 1899. The Will was dated in 1897 and the codicils in the two following years. The principal Defendant was the testator's widow from whom he had separated in 1885, fifteen years after his marriage with her, and to whom he made an allowance, but there was considerable litigation between the husband and wife since. Some of the children were also Defendants, but not the testator's eldest son who did not contest the Will. One of the questions raised was that the Will was executed by "undue influence." The testator in failing health had engaged a house-keeper called Mrs. Clarkson. Mrs. Clarkson was the wife of a Mr. Foote, but on his deserting her, she had lived with a Mr. Clarkson as his mistress. This was known to the testator. By his testamentary dispositions he had left a legacy for Mrs. Clarkson or Mrs. Foote, a legacy to his daughter Maude, and the rest and residue to his son.

The learned Judge on his summing up to the jury explained what was "undue" influence; to be "undue" the influence must amount to coercion so that a man's Will is not the true expression of his wishes, but that of the person exercising the influence, superimposing his own mind on that of the testator. Every influence was not undue, some were quite legitimate because the object of making Wills was to benefit others as a return for benefits received or because of the influence of kinship or affection. The evidence disclosed that Mrs. Clarkson had acted with perfect propriety of conduct. The jury having found for the Plaintiffs, supporting the testamentary dispositions, Mr. Justice Barnes pronounced for the Wills and codicils and ordered costs to follow the result, refusing to order costs personally against the guardian ad litem of one of the minor Defendants. (See Morgan v. Morgan, 12 L. T. R. 199, and Reynolds v. Mead, the Times, 6th December 1895).

The application that Defendants should not be condemned in costs on the ground that there were reasonable grounds for enquiry was also refused.

Mr. Deane, Q. C., and Mr. Wilcock for the Trustees of the Will.

Mr. Duke, Q. C., and Mr. Leese for the Defendants.

Judgment in favour of the Will.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.—In re SIRAJUDDIN AHMED. Before REGISTRAR GIFFARD. 6th February 1901.

Bankruptcy.

On this date fixed for the public examination of Munshi Serajuddin Ahmed, a student at Grays Inn, it was intimated by the Assistant Official Receiver that the debtor had left for Bombay, and had not attended under the proceedings.

The receiving order was made on the petition of a claimant for rent of certain apartments in the Regents Park district. The order was dated 18th December 1900. It was alleged that the debtor was now resident in Bombay.

The Registrar directed that the examination be adjourned sine die.

COMMERCIAL COURT.—STEAMSHIP BALMORAL COMPANY v. MARTEN AND OTHERS. Before MR. JUSTICE BINGHAM. 11th August 1900.

Shipowners and underwriters—Practice—Ship insured for a sum less than the amount at which it was valued for salvage action—Admission of evidence of average adjuster.

The Defendants, Marten and others, underwriters at Lloyds, underwrote a policy of marine insurance on the Plaintiffs' ship "Balmoral" for £33,000 at which figure the ship was valued. During the continuance of that policy a general average loss was sustained, and a salvage award was made by the Admiralty Court, against that ship, freight, and cargo. An average statement followed thereon, when the real value of the vessel was taken at £40,000, on the footing whereof the rights of the parties interested in the salvage claim was adjusted inter se. In the present action an average adjuster gave evidence for the Defendants, while the Plaintiffs did not examine any witness. The Plaintiffs now sought to recover from the underwriters on the ship the whole of the ship's proportion of the salvage, and of the general average contribution. The question which the Court had to determine was whether the Plaintiffs' claim was sound or whether as the Defendants urged they should indemnify Plaintiffs only against  $\frac{3}{40}$ ths of the average loss payable by them.

Following a long established practice the Court decided in favour of the Defendants' contention and gave judgment in their favour with costs.

Mr. Leck for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Pickford, Q. C., and Mr. Scrutton and Mr. McKinnon for the Defendants.

Judgment for Defendants with costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—WARREN v. BROWN. Before MR. JUSTICE WRIGHT. 4th August 1900.

Ancient Lights—Quantity of light.

This case raised the question whether the right which is acquired by statutory prescription is a right to the continuance of substantially the whole quantity of light which has come to the windows during the 20 years or is ordinarily limited to a sufficient quantity of light for all ordinary purposes.

The learned Judge had found as a fact that the Defendant had by the acts to which Plaintiffs took exception so far diminished the light as to be materially insufficient during a part of the day for the special requirements of the Plaintiffs' industry; and that the inconvenience to which the Plaintiffs was subjected could be and to a great extent had been obviated by the removal of machines to the upper floor and that in any case it could be remedied by some increased expenditure of gas. Mr. Justice Wright on the facts so found by him held that no sufficient case for a mandatory injunction had been made out. In a lengthy judgment the learned Judge after a review of several authorities concluded his judgment as follows:—"I think I must take it that the law is laid down in the City of London Brewery Co. v.

Tennant (9 Ch. 212) agreeing as that case does with the criterion expressed by Lord Cranworth in Clark v. Clark (1 Ch. 10) and that the Plaintiffs, having an abundance of light left for all ordinary purposes of inhabitation or business, are not entitled to relief on the ground that their extraordinary use has been interfered with. Unless indeed there is some such limitation of the right to light for ancient windows, it is difficult, as Lord Hardwicke observed in effect in the Fishmonger Co. v. East India Company (1 Dickens 163), to see how the ordinary extensions and improvements of towns could be carried on. If every house which has existed for 20 years is entitled to have all, or substantially all, the same light come into its windows as during the 20 years, no new houses could be built opposite to old ones unless at a distance which would impose on servient tenements an unreasonable burden and might involve great public inconveniences." Upon such finding the Court considered it unnecessary to consider the case of Lafranchi v. Mackenzie (4 Eq. 421) in which Vice-Chancellor Malins had said that if Plaintiffs (silk examiners) had been in the enjoyment of an extraordinary user for 20 years that would establish the right against all persons who had reasonable knowledge of it.

Mr. Young, Q. C., and Mr. Stevenson for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Stanger, Q. C., and Mr. Neilson for the Defendant.

Judgment for Defendant with costs.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.--COLLINS v. CORY.
Before MR. JUSTICE PHILLIMORE. 4th February 1901.

Wife's authority to pledge her husband's credit -- Education of children.

The Plaintiff, a schoolmaster, sued the Defendant Cory for charges and expenses incurred in boarding and teaching two of his sons from September 1899 to April of last year. Mrs. Cory had obtained a divorce from her husband, the Defendant. During the time for which the suit was brought, Mrs. Cory had the custody of the children and had placed the children under Plaintiff's charge. The Defendant's contention was that Mrs. Cory had no authority to pledge his credit, education of children not being a "necessary."

The learned Judge decided in Plaintiff's favour, being of opinion that in the present day education was a "necessary" for children.

Mr. Hugo Young, K. C., and Mr. Garland for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Rufus Isaacs, K. C., and Mr. Grazebrook for the Defendant.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE DECISION OF THE Chief Justice, Banerjee and Brett, JJ., in the case of Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Mir Nazar Ali, reported at p. 326 of this issue to the effect that unreported decisions of the High Court are as much authoritative as those reported in the authorised reports. The reasons given by the learned Chief Justice will fully appear from pp. 328-329 of the reports. Our note in this connection at 4 C. W. N. clvii (257) also the note in our original prospectus, which was submitted to the late Chief Justice at his request, preliminary to our obtaining sanction to privileges similar to those enjoyed by the reporters of the authorised reports, may also be referred to.

WE ARE GLAD TO BE ABLE TO SAY THAT THE THREE Courts we have had since the 4th of March have already proved a great success. A large number of Liquidated claims was disposed of by Mr. Justice Sale, although he had only two clear days for hearing them last week, Monday and Thursday having been motion days and Tuesday a holiday. We have no doubt that he will be able to clear the whole list of such suits in the course of this month. There are also several Small Cause Court suits which have been transferred to the Original Side under the provisions of the amended Act. These may be conveniently included in the Liquidated cause list, and placed below the Liquidated claims.

THE NON-COMMERCIAL LIST IS A VERY HEAVY ONE and some very heavy suits are ready for hearing. These cases are by no means simple. In fact the majority of them involve difficult questions of law, custom and usage, and require considerable knowledge and experience of the country. The work is very onerous and should if possible be divided.

THE PRESENT STAFF OF OFFICERS ON THE ORIGINAL Side is quite unable to cope with the work. There is already a block and with three Courts the block must become still greater. As it is, urgent orders can hardly be drawn up as speedily as they should and we are informed that orders granting Probate have sometimes not been drawn up for months. It is with satisfaction therefore that we have heard that the Chief Justice has been considering how best the difficulty can be met and the grievance removed.

• IT IS A MISTAKE TO SUPPOSE THAT THE ORIGINAL Side cause list shows a larger number of arrears than the District Courts. On the other hand the comparison is altogether favourable to the Original Side. There are undoubtedly some old cases on the list but lay critics are apt to forget that delay frequently arises from the necessity of revising suits upon the death of some parties thereto, of appointing guardians-ad-litem if there be infant defendants, of issuing commissions to distant parts of the country to examine witnesses at the instance of the parties, for duly serving defendants in Europe and elsewhere and from similar causes. That old causes do not come up for hearing is frequently due to the action of the parties themselves. Applications for filing affidavits of documents and for inspection of accounts are made as a matter of course and much time is wasted by the parties in taking or allowing such inspection. It is not probably generally known that during the year, lists are from time to time made up of old causes and the parties and their attorneys are called upon to show cause why they should not be struck off for default of due prosecution and if no satisfactory cause is shown the cases are struck off.

Sometimes a block is created by an unusually heavy case coming up for hearing, like the one we had last year, Sm. Nistarinee Dusee v. Nando Lal Bose, before Mr. Justice Stanley. It is not possible to shorten the hearing of such cases and unless special Judges are appointed to take them, the rest of the work must occasionally suffer. The High Court can hardly be called upon to furnish such special Judges, without an addition to the number now constituting the Court. In spite of the formidable appearance of the Remanet list, it must be conceded that the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court shows that it is far ahead of other original Courts in the country.

CRIMINAL CASES OF 1900.

II.—CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.

DEFINITIONS:—A petition asking the Magistrate to be allowed to prove the case is a "complaint";—Sarat Chandra v. Aghore Nath, 4 C. W. N. cxxxi: see also 14 Cal. 707. The words "police-officer" in sec. 4 (f) do not mean any and every officer, but include any particular class of police-officers empowered exclusively to arrest under a local law. An offence under the Gambling Act is, therefore, a cognizable one:—Queen v. Deodhar Singh, 27 Cal. 144.

UNLAWFUL ARREST:—The provisions of sec. 80 are not applicable to an arrest made under sec. 56. It may be desirable, and even obligatory, that if called upon the police-officer should show his authority, but he is not legally bound to do so before the arrest:—Queen-Empress v. Basanta Lal, 4 C. W. N. 311; 27 Cal. 320. Under sec. 80 an arrest without previous notification of the substance of the warrant is illegal:—Satis Chandra Rai v. Jodu, 3 C. W. N. 741; 26 Cal. 748; Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress, 23 Cal. 896. A private person cannot arrest for theft not committed in his view, and a chowkidar who takes over custody from such person is not a police-officer within sec. 59, and his custody is illegal:—Kalai v. Kalu, 4 C. W. N. 252; 27 Cal. 366, approving of Empress v. Kallu, 3 All. 60. Under sec. 13 of I of 1892 (B. C.), a chowkidar is not empowered to receive persons arrested and is not, therefore, within sec. 59, Cr. P. C.; but he is, nevertheless, a "police-officer" within secs. 24 to 27 of the Evidence Act, (Queen v. Keta, 2 C. W. N. clxxx; Empress v. Indira, 2 C. W. N. 637; Queen-Empress v. Saleemuddin, 3 C. W. N. 393; 26 Cal. 569; see contra, Queen-Empress v. Bepin Behary Dey, 2 C. W. N. 71). Under sec. 68 (2), process servers may serve summonses, under rules made by the Local Government, but they are not police-officers, and cannot arrest under sec. 79, and the endorsement under the latter section must be by the person to whom it has been directed:—Durga Charan v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 457. Endorsement on a warrant under sec. 79 should be regularly made by name to a certain person in order to authorize him to arrest:—Durga Tewari v. Rahman, 4 C. W. N. 85.

PROCLAMATION:—Though a proclamation is irregular, yet the property having vested in third parties, strangers, the sale cannot be set aside:—Abdullah v. Titu, 22 All. 216. There is no provision of law requiring a Magistrate who has attached property under sec. 88 to investigate claims of third persons: 7 W. R. 35, followed in 6 All. 487; but see 20 Mad. 88.

SECURITIES FOR THE PEACE:—Sec. 106 is not very clearly worded. The offence under sec. 143, I. P. C., is not necessarily within sec. 106:—Sheo Bhunjan v. Mosawi, 4 C. W. N. 795; 27 Cal. 983; Jib Lal v. Jugmohan, 26 Cal. 576. There may be, however, findings in the case which would justify such order, but there should be an express finding by the lower Court:—Sheo Bhunjan v. Mosawi. In Jib Lal v. Jugmohan, the Court observed that it would, in the absence of an express finding, uphold an order under the section if there was clear evidence of facts bringing the case within it. Instances of this will be found in Queen v. Gondoo Khan, 7 W. R. 14, and Queen v. Shapoo 20 W. R. 37. Sec. 110 applies only to persons residing within the limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and "reputation" means the reputation of that man in the neighbourhood:—Kutaldi v. Queen-Empress, 5 C. W. N. 29; 27 Cal. 993. The section is applicable only to persons as individual members of the community and not when acting under duty:—Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 531; 27 Cal. 781. Where certain barkan dazes were bound down on grounds of habitual extortion and disturbance of the peace, and of being dangerous characters, it was held that, even if there was association as regards the first two grounds, there would be no such connection between them in their character so as to make them dangerous persons within the section:—Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 531; 27 Cal. 781. The Judge in confirming an order under sec. 123 is bound to find the special grounds for the order required by sec. 110:—Nakhi Lal v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 656. It was held in Mahomed Abdul v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 121, that a security bond once given extends during its continuance to every act of the person bound over in breach of any condition. Residence at a distance is not the ground for refusal to accept security:—Abirash v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 797.

PUBLIC NUISANCES:—If the Defendant in proceedings under sec. 133 raises a question of title, the Magistrate must first find whether the objection is bona fide, and cannot refer the question to the jury. This is well settled law, see 5 Cal. 875; 9 Ib. 103; 11 Ib. 8; 12 Ib. 137, 696; 15 Ib. 564; 17 Ib. 562; 23 Ib. 409; 25 Ib. 278; 22 Bom. 988; 3 C. W. N. 345, and Budh Nath v. Nil Mahato, 4 C. W. N. 596. But if the Defendant applies for a jury under sec. 135, he cannot, after verdict, raise the plea of title:—In re Lachman, 22 All. 267.

URGENT ORDERS :—Where there is no emergency and the order is not limited to two months, it is bad and without jurisdiction :—Diamulla v. Maharulla 27 Cal. 918.

DISPUTES RELATING TO LAND :—Where there is a complaint of offences none of which necessarily involves a breach of the peace, but includes a dispute as to land, the Magistrate ought not to act under sec. 145, but should try the offences; and if an offence attended by criminal force is established, he should proceed under sec. 522 :—Kesu v. Moti Mohan, 4 C. W. N. 57. As to when the Court ought to proceed under sec. 107 instead of sec. 145 or sec. 147, see the cases in 23 W. R. 58 : 24 W. R. 67 : 25 Cal. 559 : 23 Ib. 557 : 27 Ib. 918 : 3 C. W. N. 297, 463 : 9 B. L. R. 229. The High Court will set aside orders passed without jurisdiction. Apparently all questions of procedure in sec. 145 are regarded as relating to jurisdiction. Thus it has been held in Re Pandurang, 24 Bom. 527, that a Magistrate acting under sec. 145 is bound to follow the proper procedure. (i) The Magistrate must be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. This principle has been well settled in a large number of cases. A family dispute regarding the respective rights of the members thereof, where it is not shown to be likely to cause a breach of the peace, does not give jurisdiction under sec. 145 :—Diamullah v. Mahawullah, 27 Cal. 918. (ii) There must be a dispute relating to "land or water," which terms include a right of performing religious service in a temple (Re Panduranga, 24 Bom. 527, following Muhamad v. Kunji, 11 Mad. 323), collection of rents disputed by joint owners under Mitakshara law (Sri Mohan v. Narsing, 4 C. W. N. 420 ; 27 Cal. 259). See also as to rents—11 Cal. 413 : 15 Ib. 527 : 16 Ib. 513 : 19 Ib. 127 : 3 Ib. 320 : 23 Ib. 80 : 25 W. R. 2. Sec. 145 contemplates a dispute between parties each asserting actual possession against the other, and not one between parties one of whom claims joint possession and the other denies it :—Tarujan v. Asamuddi, 4 C. W. N. 426. (iii) The written order must contain the grounds of action under the section :—Mohesh Sower v. Narain Bag, 27 Cal. 981 ; Kesu v. Moti Mollah, 4 C. W. N. 57 ; Re Pandurang, 24 Bom. 527. (iv) Notices must be issued—see Re Pandurang (v) to all the parties "concerned in the dispute," which expression has been construed to include all persons interested in, or claiming a right to the property in dispute :—Ram Chandra v. Monohur Roy, 21 Cal. 29 ; Protab Narain v. Rajendra, 1 C. W. N. 3 ; 24 Cal. 55, followed in Laldhari v. Sukdeo, 4 C. W. N. 613 ; 27 Cal. 892 ; Re Pandurang ; Gonesh Jalra v. Ayub, 4 C. W. N. 753, referring to Harak v. Luchmi, 5 C. L. R. 287. Accordingly, where the real question was not only which of rival zemindars were entitled to collect rent, but which of rival tenants were entitled to actual possession, the omission to join the tenants was held to be without jurisdiction :—Laldhari v. Sukdeo, supra. The Magistrate cannot add parties except as provided for by cl. 5 of sec. 145 :—Khetter Mohan v. Nanki, 4 C. W. N. lxxxiii, referring to 18 Mad. 53 and 21 Cal. 29 ; Raj Kumar v. Mahadeo 4 C. W. N. 748. If the Magistrate cannot deal with the case as originally instituted, because the parties on the record are not in dispute, or no breach of the peace is likely to result from this action, he should put an end to the case :—Raj Kumar v. Mahadeo, supra. (vi) In Joyanti v. Middleton, 4 C. W. N. 562 ; 27 Cal. 785, where an order under sec. 144 had first been made, it was held that the Magistrate was right in looking to the possession on the date of the order. (vii) The order of the Magistrate cannot interfere with rights of parties as previously determined by a Civil Court :—Re Pandurang. His jurisdiction is ousted by previous orders of Civil Courts : See 16 W. R. 24 : 6 Cal. 835 : 26 Cal. 625 ; but the subsequent appointment of a Receiver does not affect his jurisdiction at the time of the order :—Sri Mohan v. Narsing, 4 C. W. N. 420 ; 27 Cal. 259. The existence of an order under sec. 145 does not bar the power of a Civil Court to appoint a Receiver under sec. 505, Civ. P. C. :—Barkatunnissa v. Abdul, 22 All. 214. In a matter under sec. 147, as under sec. 145, the Magistrate is bound to hear evidence tendered by the parties :—Empress v. Gunpat, 4 C. W. N. 779. The right of use of land in sec. 147 is one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement, and a dispute between landlord and tenant as to the right of the latter to re-erect gola is not within the section.—Ibid.

POLICE INVESTIGATION :—Under the new sec. 161 a person examined is not legally bound to state the truth :—Queen-Empress v. Sankaralinga, 23 Mad. 544. This was the law under the Code of 1872 :—Empress v. Kassim Khan, 7 Cal. 121. As to the Code of 1882, see Queen-Empress v. Parshram, 8 Bom. 216. Where there is evidence in the hands of the Police on which he is bound to arrest, it is improper to examine a person under sec. 161 : and the Judge who brings such evidence on the record disregards sec. 162 :—Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das, 4 C. W. N. 129 ; 27 Cal. 295, p. 302. It is improper for the Police to send a witness practically under custody (sec. 171) to have his statement recorded under sec. 164 so as to bind him down to that statement. Such a statement is open to suspicion, and should not be brought on the record under sec. 288 without proper enquiry.—Ibid. Police diaries cannot, under sec. 172, be placed before the jury. They are useful not as evidence but to aid the Court on a trial.—Ibid., p. 305.

CERTIFICATE OF POLITICAL AGENT :—Where an offence took place out of, though preparatory acts occurred in British India, it was held that the certificate of the Political Agent or sanction of Local Government was necessary :—Queen-Empress

v. Buku, 24 Bom. 287; Bapu v. Queen, 5 Mad. 23; Queen-Empress v. Ram Sundar, 19 All. 109. In Queen-Empress v. Kathaperumal, 13 Mad. 423, a trial without a certificate by the District Magistrate was held illegal, even where he was the Agent and the defect treated as not cured by sec. 532. Where there is no such Agent, the sanction of the Local Government is required:—Queen Empress v. Bhina, 13 Bom. 147; Queen-Empress v. Shrik, 14 Bom. 227; Dadphale v. Gurav, 6 Bom. 122. The case of Empress v. Sarmukh, 2 All. 218, was peculiar: see 24 Bom. 287 at p. 291.
